SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 14, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. E. B. BAGBY, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The Vice-President being absent, the President pro tempore took the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TURPIE presented memorials of sundry wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Evansville and Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which, on motion of Mr. TURPIE, were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of the Winter Wheat Millers' League, of Cincinnati, Ind., remonstrating against the passage of any bill that does not recognize the millers of this country by reciprocal treaties with all countries; which, on motion of Mr. TURPIE, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Temple, Hummel Ellis Company, cigar manufacturers of South Bend, Ind., praying for the adoption of the duty on wrapper tobacco of $1 and $1.25, as reported by the Finance Committee; which, on motion of Mr. TURPIE, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Winter Wheat Millers' League, of Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, and Kentucky, praying for the enactment of legislation legalizing railroad pooling, under such restrictions as are embodied in the proposed amendment to the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL presented memorials of sundry wholesale and retail liquor dealers of St. Louis, Kansas City, Springfield, and St. Joseph, all in the State of Missouri, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which, on motion of Mr. COCKRELL, were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR presented the memorial of A. H. Weld and sundry other citizens of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Thomas R. D. Stewart and sundry other citizens of South Boston, Mass., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of P. J. Judge and sundry other citizens of Worcester, Mass., praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of J. E. Dickerman and 20 other citizens of Waterbury, Conn., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax proxision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the A. B. Williams Company, of Glastonbury, Conn.; the Pratt and Whitney Company of Hartford, Conn., and sundry citizens of the State of Connecticut, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. POWER. I present a petition, signed by 764 citizens of the State of Montana, praying that the present duties on foreign wool be maintained. The petition is headed by the governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, attorney-general, justices of the supreme court, superintendent of public instruction, and other officers of the State of Montana and citizens of both the Democratic and Republican parties of Butte, Helena, Great Falls, Fort Benton, Chinook, Lewiston, Billings, Livingston, Assiniboine, Havre, Highwood, Shelby, Pondera, Christina, Maiden, Whitlash, Ubet, Halbert, Yale, Stanford, Grafton, Denton, Fort Maginnis, Musselshell, Lucille, Big Sandy, Warwick, Steele, Belleview, Dupuyer, Brighton, Armington, Kibbey, Choteau, Judith, Pioneer, Boxelder, Big Timber, Augusta, Bynum, Cascade, Lacy, Martinsdale, Harlem, Lloyd, and Flatwillow, all the towns in the State.

I also present a petition of 64 citizens of Billings and Stillwater, Yellowstone County, Mont., praying that the duty on wool remain unchanged.

These petitioners are engaged in the business of sheep-raising in the State of Montana, the majority of whom from small beginnings and by careful management have increased their flocks to considerable proportions, which represent all they have to show for hard labor and great privation on the frontier. They were induced and encouraged to follow this business, owing to its being a well-understood protected industry. In the last fifteen months the price of their product, in anticipation that wool would be placed on the free list, has depreciated 50 per cent. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POWER presented petitions of 19 citizens of Beaverhead County; of 4 citizens of Park County; of 19 citizens of Cascade County, and of 16 citizens, all in the State of Montana, praying that the present customs duties on wool, lead, and barley be maintained; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PROCTOR presented a petition of the Vermont Association of Life Underwriters, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE. I present a petition of 16 citizens of Lebanon, Me., and a petition of 13 citizens of Gilead, Me., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill. The committee having given notice that they will report an amendment satisfactory to the petitioners, I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORDON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Albany, Ga., and a petition of sundry citizens of Martin, Ga., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of sundry wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Atlanta and Savannah, in the State of Georgia, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

DISTRIBUTION OF GOLD AND SILVER.

Mr. KYLE. I present a criticism by Frederick C. Waite, late special agent of the Eleventh Census in charge of Statistics of True Wealth, on the census distribution of gold and silver by States. I move that the paper be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on the Census.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLS, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, the amendment providing for the repair of paintings within the Capitol, including repairs to the frames of the same; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VOORHEES. The bill (H. R. 6500) to define and establish the units of electrical measure after passing the other House came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Finance. On consultation it is thought the bill ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It relates to an international question. I report back the bill from the Committee on Finance, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 2117) for the relief of Mrs. Sabina O'Callaghan, administratrix of the estate of Denis O'Callaghan, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 2118) authorizing the sale of title of United States to a tract of land in Montgomery County, in the State of Maryland, to William H. and George Bobinger; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (S. 2119) for the relief of Charles B. Stivers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FORT D. A. RUSSELL MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no concurrent or other resolutions, the Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII, commencing at the point reached on the last call of the Calendar.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 168) granting to the State of Wyoming certain lands in the Fort D. A. Russell military reservation for agricultural fair and industrial exposition grounds, and for other purposes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOWBOAT FUTURE CITY.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 207) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the towboat Future City, her barges, cargoes, etc. A similar bill has passed the Senate once or twice, and it has always been favorably reported.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH REDFERN AND ELIZA J. REDFERN.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the first bill on the Calendar, commencing at the point reached on the last call.

The bill (S. 807) for the relief of Joseph Redfern and Eliza J. Redfern, his wife, was announced as first in order on the Calendar, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Joseph Redfern and Eliza J. Redfern, of the District of Columbia, $2,728.40 in full of all demands against the United States for injuries to and rent of buildings Nos. 1719 and 1721 G street northwest, in the city of Washington, D. C., used by the Signal Service of the Army of the United States during the period from November 1, 1871, to December 31, 1888.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMEN AS PUBLIC SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public school trustees in the District of Columbia. The bill has been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia for some time, and I should like very much to have it disposed of. It is a local matter, and it ought to be disposed of at once. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has an amendment which he desires to have made to the bill, and to which I have no objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has heretofore been read as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "appoint," in line 4, strike out the words "not exceeding three."

Mr. HOAR. The bill as originally drawn prescribes the number of ladies who may be trustees on the school board. The amendment simply leaves the number to the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I understand the amendment has the assent of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SILK CULTURE.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 115) for the development and encouragement of silk culture in the United States under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it first be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some reason why we should have extra experiment stations when we already have them in every State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments.

Mr. PEFFER. I will say, in answer to the question of the Senator from Missouri, that it is not intended to establish new stations. This is for the purpose of dividing up the supervision of the silk industry of the United States among the agricultural experiment stations now established. The object is to create five different stations in the different sections of the country, and to have the Secretary of Agriculture take jurisdiction over the whole subject and designate the particular sections of the country where in his judgment the development of silk culture can be best nourished. That is the object. It is not intended to increase the expenses nor to establish anything new.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that there is an experiment station in each State. Is there not?

Mr. PEFEER. We have one in Kansas, but I do not know of a silk station anywhere else.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have one in Missouri, and have had for years.

Mr. PEFEER. But it is under State jurisdiction, is it not?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes; but it is in coöperation with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. PEFFER. This would simply extend the industry to other parts of the country. I will say to the Senator further, that some twenty or twenty-five years ago perhaps, soon after the war, there was a very considerable development of silk culture in some of the Southern States, especially in Mississippi. The object of this bill is to spread the culture of silk over the country more largely. That is all there is about it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It must necessarily become a local industry at the place where established, and it ought to be intrusted to the State experimental station, this part of it, as a matter of course, being under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. If we should send to the State of Mississippi or any other State persons not residents there to establish an experiment station they might never induce the people there to engage in the business, whereas if it is under State control and under their direction, and there is anything in it, it will be developed there and become permanent.

Mr. PEFFER. But this is intended to enlarge the sphere of this industry. I will state further for the information of the Senator from Missouri and other Senators that it is one of those peculiar kinds of industrial enterprises the women and the children in a farmer's family or in a family in a city anywhere can, without any added expense or without any additional labor or trouble or confusion take care of, and that it amounts to a very considerable sum of money in the course of a year. It requires about six weeks, or two months at most, during a season. The women and children take care of the growth of the worm and the manufacture of silk through the worm, and then the cocoons afterward, and that disposes of the business for the entire season. We have found it in Kansas to be very fruitful among our farmers, and the people think a great deal of continuing the work. This bill——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired. The first amendment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be stated.

The first amendment was in section 2, line 2, after the word "establish," to strike out "a number of" and insert "five;" in line 3, after the word "stations," to strike out "not exceeding five in number. They shall be located by him" and insert "one each;" in line 4, after the word "different," to strike out "parts" and insert "sections;" in the same line, after the word "the," to strike out "United States" and insert "country;" and in line 6, after the word "culture," to strike out "in the sections in which said stations may be located" and insert "throughout the United States;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby directed to establish five silk experiment stations, one each in different sections of the country, with the view of developing silk culture throughout the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 9, after the word "they," to strike out "are" and insert "may be;" and in same line, after the word "located," to strike out "and now established and receiving appropriations from the Treasury of the United States;" so as to read:

Said silk-culture stations shall be a part of the several experiment stations in the States in which they may be located.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 13, after the word "who," to strike out "is to" and insert "shall:" so as to read:

The work at each station shall be conducted under the supervision of the director of such station, who shall carry on said work under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 15, after the word "hereby," to insert "annually;" in the same line, after the word "appropriated," to insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated;" in line 18, after the word "established," to strike out "by the Secretary of Agriculture;" and in the same line, after the word "under," to insert "the provisions of;" so as to read:

A sum of $5,000 is hereby annually appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to each of the stations for silk culture which shall be established under the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 22, after the word "the," to insert "several;" and in the same line, after the word "in," to strike out "common" and insert "connection;" so as to read:

Said sum is to be drawn from the Treasury of the United States on requisitions made by the Secretary of Agriculture in favor of the directors of the several experiment stations in connection with which the silk-culture stations are established.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 24, after the word "diminish," to insert "or discontinue;" in line 25, after the word "the," to strike out "appropriation" and insert "sum of money;" and in line 26, after the word "it," to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

He shall have power, also, to discontinue the payment of the appropriation for any one of the stations if he shall deem that the work in relation to silk culture performed at said station is not performed in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by him.

So as to read:

The Secretary of Agriculture shall have power to diminish or discontinue the sum of money to be used at any station or stations if in his judgment the public good requires it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF JAMES BRIDGER.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 217) for the relief of the heirs of James Bridger, deceased, which has been reported favorably sundry times by the Committee on Claims, and has been heretofore passed by the Senate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to the heirs of James Bridger, deceased, $6,000 in full satisfaction for his improvements made at Fort Bridger, Utah Territory, which were appropriated by the United States Army in the fall of 1857, under command of Brig. Gen. Albert S. Johnson.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN WIGHTMAN.

Mr. QUAY. There is upon the Calendar a bill (S. 886) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Wightman, deceased, which is suspended by a motion made to reconsider its final passage by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS]. As I stated when the bill was pending in the Senate previously, I have no objection, if the Senator from Wisconsin desires it, to have the bill reconsidered and recommitted to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for examination; but if he does not desire that, I submit to him whether it would not be better to allow the motion to reconsider to be voted down and let the bill go to the House of Representatives, where it may be reëxamined. I care nothing about the passage of the bill, except that those interested in it are very needy and the claim is really meritorious. I should like to see it expedited.

Mr. VILAS. Other Senators whose attention has been drawn to the bill are of the opinion that it ought to be reconsidered. It may be reconsidered or go to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, or retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. QUAY. As I said, I have no objection to the bill being recommitted to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, if that is the desire of the chairman of that committee.

Mr. VILAS. Very good.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered, and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The Chair hearing no objection, it is so ordered.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1515) to amend chapter 6 of Title XXXII of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources.

I will state that it is a bill which has passed the Senate on two former occasions. It is a technical bill, amending the mining laws, and inasmuch as the time for doing certain work is regulated in the bill, and there are many petitions asking for this legislation——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. STEWART. I give notice that I shall make a request for the consideration of the bill to-morrow morning.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 499) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith, for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 7095) to provide for the erection of a national home for aged and infirm colored persons, and for the maintenance of the inmates thereof; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the act (S. 591) to donate to the county of Laramie, Wyo., certain bridges on the abandoned Fort Laramie military reservation, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7095) to provide for the erection of a national home for aged and infirm colored persons, and for the maintenance of the inmates thereof, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the wool industry or sheep husbandry, which has been singled out by the pending bill for destruction, has been the industry which, above all others, among all intelligent nations has engaged the especial attention and protection of statesmen and of governments. Politically and economically it is the first industry which should receive government protection and encouragement, and it should be the last to lose it.

The production of wool was regarded in England three hundred years ago as the foundation of her prosperity, commercially and financially; and in the time of Elizabeth an act was passed to prevent its exportation. The wool sack of the lord chancellor, on which he sits to-day in the House of Lords, is, as everyone knows, the symbol of the time when England looked upon her wool production as the principal source of her commercial and financial greatness.

In this country the same ideas have prevailed from the beginning of the Government. We find in the early Congresses that the attention of the statesmen of that day was given particularly to sheep husbandry and to wool. It was toward the production of wool and woolens that the colonists turned when they desired to establish their industrial and political independence of England at the time of the stamp-act trouble.

I have here a letter of Washington's, which shows the view he took in regard to the importance of sheep husbandry. There are many letters in which he refers to it, and he gave to it that weight, importance, and place which I think all great modern statesmen have given. This letter was written just after the formation of our Government, on the 22d of November, 1789. It is addressed to Beverly Randolph, governor of Virginia. He says:

NEW YORK, November 22, 1789.

SIR: From the original letter, which I forward herewith, your excellency will comprehend the nature of a proposal for introducing and establishing the woolen manufactory in the State of Virginia. In the present stage of population and agriculture I do not pretend to determine how far that plan may be practicable and advisable, or, in case it should be deemed so, whether any or what public encouragement ought to be given to facilitate its execution. I have, however, no doubt as to the good policy of increasing the number of sheep in every State. By a little legislative encouragement the farmers of Connecticut have in two years past added one hundred thousand to their former stock.

In my late tour through the Eastern States I found that the manufacturers of woolens (for the manufacture of woolens is carried on there to very considerable extent and advantage) preferred the wool raised in Virginia for its fineness, to that raised in more northern parts of the continent. If a greater quantity of wool could be produced, and if the hands, which are often in a manner idle, could be employed in manufacturing it, a spirit of industry might be promoted, a great diminution might be made in the annual expenses of individual families, and the public would eventually be exceedingly benefited.

We see from this how deeply the subject had engaged the attention of Washington and how fully he approved the policy of giving to the production of wool Government aid and encouragement. That which is true of Washington is equally true of all our other statesmen, and the reason which governed them was not merely that it was a useful industry, but that the production of wool and the consequent growth of woolen manufacture is always one of the most important foundations and one of the greatest necessities of an independent nation. Everyone admits that it is of the last importance to a nation to be able to arm its soldiers and to build and man ships of war, but there is no use in arming soldiers or in building ships and putting sailors upon them if you are unable to clothe your soldiers and sailors and to furnish them with proper woolen clothing.

It is for these reasons, not only of an economic character, but as affecting the independence and strength of a country, that the wool and the woolen industries have always engaged the particular attention of the statesmen of every enlightened land.

Mr. President, this bill proposes to destroy the wool industry of the United States. Protection, which already existed in many directions in the bill as it came from the House, has been restored and increased on one article after another, until wool and lumber practically alone remain unprotected. This great industry of woolgrowing, employing thousands of men, distributed among thousands of farmers, has been singled out for destruction solely because it is considered to be valuable as a campaign cry. What a degraded, what a base reason for destroying millions of property and depriving thousands of men of occupation! After everything else has got a protective duty, sheep husbandry, the woolgrowing industry, is to be overthrown.

There is no trust among the wool farmers; there is no concentrated capital which is able to come here and obtain high rates of duty. The woolgrowers are scattered throughout the length and breadth of the land; their votes are widely distributed, and they have not that power of concentration which has been felt in so many items of this bill; and yet, Mr. President, I do not hesitate to say that, of all the great staples, there is none, apart from the staples of food, so important to the well-being of the whole United States as the wool-raising industry. They are slaughtered in order to give a cry to the Democratic stump-speakers, because they are not a trust and lack the force of concentration to save themselves.

Out of that wool-raising industry we have built up a great woolen-making industry, which is largely carried on in my own section of the country, and their prosperity is essential to ours. A great deal has been said as to the attitude of New England, of the New England manufacturers, and of the New England operatives in regard to the duties on wool. That is a point on which I wish to leave no doubt whatever.

In the first place, Mr. President, as I have before said in speaking in the Senate for myself, and I believe for every other New England representative on this floor, we know and declare that it is wholly indefensible to give protection to woolens and destroy the wool industry. We recognize that to the wool industry protection must be first given, and we are quite ready to believe that those who are interested in woolgrowing appreciate, as we appreciate, that wool raising and the woolen industry are bound up together. No one who has given the subject proper consideration can believe that the arguments advanced by a very few of the great woolen manufacturers of the country in favor of free wool, while they demand for themselves a duty on woolens, is other than selfish, unfair, and, more than that, purblind and short-sighted to the last degree.

Mr. President, it is utterly untrue that the manufacturers of the East as a body or any considerable number of them have any such desire for free wool. No Republican has, at all events. There has never been a time since the wool and woolen tariff of 1867 was adopted that an overwhelming majority of the New England manufacturers have not favored the continuance of the equitable adjustment of the duty on wool and on woolens reached in that tariff. This adjustment calls for equal protection to the growers of and the manufacturers of wool, with a compensatory duty for the latter, to enable them to manufacture on equal conditions with foreign manufacturers having free wool. On every occasion when the tariff has been under consideration the New England manufacturers have reaffirmed this position.

I desire, Mr. President, to put in some statements in regard to that point. In October, 1889, the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers passed a resolution:

Resolved, That the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, adhering to the attitude it has consistently held since its organization, and having in mind the proper protection of the American woolgrowing industry, leaves wholly to the wisdom of Congress the determination of the rates of duty which should be applied to the raw material wool, for the purpose of enabling the American grower to continue to produce a sufficient quantity of such wools as he can grow to advantage for the consumption of the American manufacturer. We do not demand lower rates of duty on our chief raw material, wool, nor upon other materials used in the fabrication of our goods, nor upon the machinery we employ.

In 1892 the wool manufacturers petitioned against the House bill to put wool on the free list and reduce the duties on woolen goods. Their petition is given in the memorial of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, as follows:

Of the 1,000 manufacturers to whom this petition was sent, replies have been received from 917, affixing their signatures.

Others have replied, expressing their entire approval of the petition, but withholding their names for reasons personal to themselves. Among the latter are many who have heretofore expressed themselves in favor of free wool, but who are satisfied with the operation of the present law, or are at any rate opposed to the movement for its uprooting so soon after its enactment.

Some few responses have been received favoring the passage of the House bill. These, with others who have heretofore expressed themselves as favoring free wool, enable us to state the machinery capacity of the manufacturers who ask Congress for the passage of this bill at about 700 cards and 50 combs.

To this petition are signed names of establishments representing 5,848 sets of cards and 796 combing machines. In addition are the names of a large number of woolen and worsted manufacturers who do not employ either cards or combers, but are engaged only in the more advanced processes of manufacture, buying all their yarns.

The census of 1890 represents the number of woolen cards in the United States at 8,200, but of these many were in custom carding mills; others were employed exclusively upon cotton for cotton hosiery and knit goods. No attempt was made to canvass these mills. Of the cards actually employed in the wool manufacture proper, this petition represents about 80 per cent. Not 8 per cent of the whole number can be cited as favoring the House bill.

The census of 1890 showed 855 combing machines in active operation in the United States, and of these the proportion represented on this petition is over 93 per cent.

This petition shows that the attitude of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, as set forth in the memorial to Congress, adopted at its annual meeting, January 8, 1892, and herewith attached, represents the views of those engaged in this great industry more generally than was ever before the case since the organization was founded in 1867.

Mr. President, I also have here, in Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 44, the petition and protest of the manufacturers of woolens and worsted goods, carpets, hosiery and knit goods, wholesale clothing and cloak manufacturers, wool dealers, and commission merchants of the United States, adopted at a mass meeting held in New York City, on Wednesday, January 10, 1894, against the provisions of the wool and woolens schedule of the Wilson tariff bill, together with the names of one thousand one hundred and fifty manufacturers and establishments indorsing the same.

They say in the protest—and they are all manufacturers of various kinds of woolens—

We particularly protest against the treatment accorded the woolgrowing industry and all branches of the wool manufacture in this bill as harsh in the extreme and more radical and proscriptive than in any other schedule.

* * * * * * * *

A great majority of the manufacturers have approved and still approve this arrangement—

That is, putting a duty on the cheap raw material of the woolen manufacturer—believing that the benefits of the protective system should be shared equally by farmer and manufacturer; and they have repeatedly protested against the repeal of the duty on wool.

Here I have the memorial to Congress submitted by the wool merchants of Boston, the men who deal in wools, who buy and sell them, and who supply the great woolen industry of the country. The memorial has already been printed, and I will merely ask now to incorporate it in my speech, because it shows the exact opinions of the men engaged in the wool business who furnish the wool to the mills, and who are also largely interested in those mills. The testimony of all these gentlemen is absolutely uniform. They are all as firmly and strongly for a duty on wool as any sheep owner or flockmaster in the country.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States, submitted by the wool merchants of Boston.

Having waited for final and definite action by the committees of Congress in framing a bill for changes in the revenue laws, and much to our disappointment finding the bill to have come from the Senate committee full of inequalities and of especial injustice to the wool interests of the country, we feel that the time has now arrived for the wool trade of this, the acknowledged leading wool market of the country, to make itself heard with no uncertain expression of its views.

Wool is one of the prominent products of this country, and the one with which we are in especial sympathy from the character of our business. It is threatened with most serious disaster, and, as pertains especially to the vast areas of the newer portions of the country, with almost total annihilation. While millions of dollars have been invested in this great industry by our own native citizens, the capital and individual enterprise of large numbers from the thrifty peoples of northern Europe have been attracted to our land by the extraordinary facilities offered by our broad plains and temperate climate. Hence, as the woolgrower has sought the great West for the prosecution of his enterprise in this new country with his numberless flocks, he has proved to have been, while the pioneer, a most important factor in the settling up of the vast areas of our public domain from Texas to Oregon, into which have flowed multitudes from the most desirable populations of the world.

At the same time, the Eastern and particularly the Middle States, being well adapted by soil and climate for the production of the choicest of wools, through years of skillful and expensive experiments and industry now produce wools which are second to none grown on the face of the earth, and which, under favorable conditions, may supply nearly, if not quite, all the wool of certain classes required for the machinery of this country.

That the wool-producing industry of the United States and Territories, already the third largest of the world, needs only an adequate protection to increase rapidly in importance until it may rival the product of the most prolific of the English colonies, is shown by the fact that under the favoring system now threatened with removal, the increase in 1893 over 1892 was over 31,000,000 pounds, bringing the product of last year up to the enormous sum of 364,000,000 pounds. Is this hitherto profitable and increasing business to be transferred from our own people to the hands of the foreigner?

Already in a single year, from the mere fear of such legislation, the flock of the United States has shrunk in numbers from 47,273,553 to 45,048,017. In a single year the farmers of the United States, according to the Department of Agriculture, have seen the total value of their sheep decline from $125,909,264 on January 1, 1893, to $89,186,110 on January 1, 1894, showing a shrinkage of about $37,000,000 in this brief period; and if we take into account the shrinkage in value of farm and ranch property devoted to the sheep industry during the twelve months, we may say, without any fear of contradiction, that the direct loss on the fixed property of woolgrowers during one year has been not less than $50,000,000. But this is not all. It is a very moderate estimate to state that the decline in the value of the wool taken from these sheep in 1893 reduced the purchasing power of the woolgrowers by at least $20,000,000 more.

If such losses have already been inflicted by the possibility of passing this bill, who shall measure the damage to follow if the bill itself becomes a law?

It goes without saying that the interests are mutual of the woolgrower of America, the manufacturer who manipulates the staple, and all who handle wool in any of its stages or in any capacity, and that they are natural allies. Hence, what benefits the grower is for the good of all.

Therefore, frowning upon all sectional legislation, which is too apparent in the Wilson bill, with the interests of the woolgrowers of this broad land from Maine to Texas and from Georgia to Oregon in view, we, the wool merchants of Boston, without distinction of party, whose signatures are hereto affixed, representing with few exceptions, the entire catalogue of wool dealers and commission merchants of this market, earnestly protest against the adoption of the inconsistent provisions of Schedule K of section No. 1 and paragraph No. 685 of section No. 2 of the measure now before the United States Senate known as the Wilson bill. Its adoption will be, in a great degree, destructive to the business of the wool producer, and whereas it is his right to demand the perpetuity of his industry, its continuance will also add, we believe, to the general prosperity of the country.

Uniting with him, then, we ask that in any tariff legislation a just protection be accorded to the woolgrowers of this country, and that it be accompanied with an additional equitable compensating duty upon manufactured goods. The one can not logically be expected without the other, for, otherwise, not only is the manufacturer handicapped and the grower's market destroyed, but the labor which enters so largely into the cost of the various woolen fabrics will be crushed by the still farther reduction in wages which must necessarily ensue.

Furthermore, we protest against the bill in its entirety, as a measure framed apparently with little practical knowledge of the needs of the various manufacturing interests as related to the "raw materials" so called. It has been made to appear, for obvious reasons, to certain factions, who, while tacitly indorsing a party platform which in a measure condemns protection as unconstitutional, are subsidized by the very protection which some of the advocates of the bill profess so much to dislike, which is granted by the amended bill to certain industries in which they are directly or indirectly interested. In this way it is hoped to impose upon the nation this most unequal and unpatriotic measure, one which its framers can by no means claim to have been prepared for "revenue only." We believe such legislation to be inimical to the public morals of the country at large, as well as unjust to many pursuits other than the one for which we especially plead.

Again, we protest, because the fact is unmistakable that the country does not desire the changes proposed in this legislation, as is evidenced by the votes of the people, wherever this opportunity has been given to express their wishes in recent local elections.

We appeal to the Senators and Representatives of the country at large to use their influence and votes against the consummation of the wrongs embodied in the so-called Wilson bill or in any similar legislation.

Not 4 per cent of the owners of the New England wool machinery have ever at any time favored free wool, and those gentlemen with very few exceptions were Mugwumps and Democrats. Their notion of tariff reform was to take the duty off the article which came into their mill and maintain a high protective duty on the article which went out of their mill, and they seemed to think that that sort of system, absolutely unjust and unfair as it is, could prevail. They are few in number. They are growing still fewer, for they have learned the lesson which the past twelve months have been teaching to the country—some of them at least have done so, although I think some of them are incapable of learning anything. The proportion favoring it, I will add also, is smaller to-day than it has been at any time since 1867.

Mr. President, the present system of duties on wool and woolens has justified itself and has proved entirely feasible and successful in operation. New England manufacturers favor a duty on wool, first, because they believe protection should be equitably distributed, to the farmer equally with the manufacturer. Second, because they believe it is necessary to the preservation of the American clip, which they desire to preserve, inasmuch as it is better adapted to the needs of American manufacture than any other. Third, because they believe that while the duty adds to the price of wool, its removal would not decrease that price sufficiently to make it any object either to them or to the American consumer. That is to say, the removal of the duty would destroy the American clip, and the price of foreign wools would advance sufficiently to offset the difference in price created by the duty.

Fourth, because, except in carpet wools and a few clothing wools required for special purposes, American wools are ample in character, quality, and amount to meet all the requirements of the highest development of the manufacture. Fifth, because it has been demonstrated by experience that it is possible for the manufacture to prosper and develop with a wool duty equally with that of any other country; and because it is sound economic policy for the nation to encourage making its own clothing, but to grow the material for that clothing. Such, in a rough summary, is the opinion of the woolen manufacturers and wooldealers of the New England States. But there is a large body of men and women in New England more vitally interested in this question than any dealer or manufacturer. These are the people who earn the wages of the woolen industry and whose well-being is more important than everything else involved.

Mr. President, the sentiment of the manufacturers as to woolgrowing and woolen making is the sentiment of the men who work in the mills. They are naturally anxious for protection upon their own industry. I hold here a petition which I have heretofore presented to the Senate, signed by one hundred and twenty-four employés of the Roxbury Carpet Mills at Roxbury, Mass., remonstrating against the passage of the Wilson bill on account of its treatment of the woolen industry.

These men represent the attitude, I believe, of all the woolen workers of my State. And they send with the petition a letter, dated February 12, in which they state:

> The inclosed petition we forward to you. We, being in the carpet business, will give you all information to the best of our ability. This petition was drawn up by the working people of Roxbury Carpet Mills. It was placed in one of these weave rooms and those who wished could; sign no influence has been used whatsoever. It represents interests of eight or nine hundred wage-earners. We interviewed some of our weavers who had worked in John Crossley Mills, of Halifax, England, in regard to the wages paid there two years ago. They say from 12 to 18 shillings per week; the latter were men-weavers. That is when they work steady; they have not done so for years. At the present time they are working four days per week.
> From the end of the year 1873 to the end of the year 1892 the average pay of a weaver in the Roxbury mills was about $8 per week. You will see by this protest that the weavers in this mill are all women. The grade of tapestry carpets made here are the finest in the world. In the year 1892 this company paid more wages than they ever did in one year before. We received a 10 per cent reduction in September last, and we believe that the passage of the Wilson bill in its present form would cause a reduction of 10 per cent or more. We believe a specific duty of 20 cents per running yard should be put on tapestry carpet instead of ad valorem duty.

The letter is signed by James A. Price and Henry Tyler of the committee. I received only yesterday another letter from the same committee, in which they state:

> This mill is still working under a 10 per cent reduction. The Malden Carpet Company, sixty-five looms, have not made a yard since the 1st of July, last. The Lowell carpet mills closed down on Saturday with $500,000 worth of carpets on hand. The Hartford Company's mills, situated at Thompsonville, Mass., have been running three days per week since August last, and the outlook is very dark for us all.

They wish me to make mention in my remarks of the prayer and petition sent in their behalf. I most gladly do so, for no more forcible reason could be given against the passage of this destructive bill than their unstudied arguments and plain statements of fact.

Mr. President, these men protest against the woolen schedule and these duties on woolens because they know, some of them from harsh experience in England, that it means a reduction of wages to every one of them. At the same time there is not one of these men who would wish to see the duty taken from wool. He desires to see the same ample protection given to the farmer that he asks for himself, and I believe that the American farmer or the American laborer or anyone interested in agricultural productions in this country is just as anxious to give protection to the workman of New England as the workman of New England is to give it to him. I do not believe, sir, that the American farmer has any desire to throw into the streets the man who makes bagging, or burlaps, or binding twine, or woolens. I think he is anxious that they should have a fair protection, and that the same protection should be given to him. That, at all events, is the Republican doctrine.

Such, Mr. President, is the attitude of the New England manufacturer and the New England operative in our woolen mills, and it is a righteous and intelligent attitude.

Let me say before I pass from this branch of the subject that if instead of the slaughter of nearly all the small industries of New England which is contained in the pending bill, every industry, great or small, within those States received a high measure of protection, my vote would still be cast against the bill while it contained the clause for free wool. We have no favors to ask at the expense of any other American industry and no trades to make for ourselves by the sacrifice of others. We want protection for all. To remove the duty from wool is not only economically false, is not only unjust, but it is a direct blow at the industrial independence of the country and at its capacity to properly clothe its sailors and soldiers in time of war when the outside and foreign wool supply may be largely diminished or wholly cut off.

Mr. President, I now desire to say just a few words to show what the actual effect of the McKinley act has been on the wool clip. I quote a short passage from the Commercial Bulletin of Boston, the great wool and woolen newspaper there, and a journal noted for its care and thoroughness in the preparation of all statistics relating to wool and woolens. Under date of April 14, 1890, it says:

> On page 2 we give in detail with the signers, the petition of the Ohio woolgrowers against the Wilson bill. This follows hard upon the action of the Boston wool trade. One glance at the counties represented in the signatures will show that the whole choice fleece raising district is represented.
> Already free-trade newspapers in the West and elsewhere are desperately endeavoring to belittle the effect of these petitions.
> The most common form used in the Boston Herald and the Detroit Press is to pretend inability to understand how in 1893 the flock of the United States could shrink from 47,273,553 to 45,048,017 while the clip increased to 364,000,000 pounds, the largest figure ever known.
> Thanks to protection, the American flock had increased during 1892, and on January 1, 1893, there were 47,273,553 sheep. From those sheep was shorn the largest clip ever taken from the American flock. After the clip had been shorn an enormous quantity of sheep were slaughtered, as the threat of Wilsonism made them unprofitable. Consequently on January 1, 1894, we find that the flock has decreased to 45,048,017.
> Is it not possible for a November gale to ruin an apple orchard in the same year which yielded in September a bounteous crop? The free trade blight of 1893 naturally could not prevent the increase in the flock of 1893, from which was shorn the clip of 1893 before the sheep slaughter commenced.

Mr. President, that article shows, in a few sentences, the increase which occurred in the flocks of the United States under the protection given by the McKinley act. It shows also the destruction which was wrought when the threat of free wool was held over the country. The result of the times which have been upon us has been the reduction in the price of wool practically to the free-trade price so desired by the Democratic party. Yet I question very much whether the workingmen of this country have been so helped by the reduction in the price of wool that they do not think they have paid a heavy price for this illusive benefit in the loss of wages and of work which has beset them during the last year.

In regard to the woolen schedule, which follows close upon the clause destroying the sheep husbandry of the United States, I have also a few words to say.

It involves a heavy reduction in the protective duties, and it also involves placing the woolen manufactures on the ad valorem basis, about which I shall have something further to say in more detail later on in the debate. This schedule I understand has had very largely the benefit of the suggestion and advice of Mr. Jacob Schoenhof, lately a consul of the United States. I think he has been advising the committee in regard to it. How much of it he has actually suggested and drawn, I have no means of knowing, but it is generally supposed that he and Mr. Sharretts between them have had a very strong influence in framing many clauses of the tariff bill and that the schedule of woolens has been largely committed to Mr. Schoenhof. I think as he has been the principal adviser and suggester in regard to the schedule it is well to put here on record his history, because it would indicate, I think, that fitness which no doubt led to his being called in.

Mr. VEST. To whom does the Senator from Massachusetts allude?

Mr. LODGE. I am alluding to Mr. Schoenhof. If he was not called in to advise on the schedule, of course I have nothing further to say.

Mr. VEST. So far as I know, Mr. Schoenhof has had as little to do with this schedule as any man living.

Mr. LODGE. He has been consulted upon it.

Mr. VEST. He has not been consulted as far as I know, and certainly his advice has not been adopted. Mr. Schoenhof is opposed to all high duties in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. If Mr. Schoenhof has not been consulted, I have not a word to say, but I have understood that he was consulted. I have been told so by gentlemen interested in the woolen business, who have given me to understand that they saw him in regard to it, from which I supposed that he was being consulted by the committee in making up the bill.

Mr. VEST. It is hardly necessary to take up the time of the Senate to discuss a personal matter of this kind. Mr. Schoenhof is connected with the Government service, and he has brought us such information as he could obtain in regard to the price of woolen cloths and other expert testimony. But his views in regard to the duty upon woolen cloths are not represented in the pending bill.

Mr. LODGE. I quite understand that the duties in the bill do not go as far as Mr. Jacob Schoenhof would like to go in the work of destruction to American industry, but I think it is worth while to show his fitness for the position of adviser on the wool schedule by simply calling attention to the published statement of his business career in this country:

Mr. Schoenhof is a German Jew, who first appeared in that city in the spring of 1865 as a dry goods dealer in partnership with a Mr. Hoeber. The new firm promptly proceeded to fail, and 25 cents on the dollar was all that could be secured by its creditors. In 1868 Jacob Schoenhof's name appears again in mercantile records, this time as a small dealer in ladies' furnishing goods. His business was understood to consist chiefly in supplying peddlers with their outfits. Three years later a Mr. Rosenheim was taken into the concern, but his presence was a short one, for in February, 1872, Mr. Jacob Schoenhof was again conducting the business alone.

In February, 1875, he allied himself with a Mr. Sigismund Herzog, and in December, 1876, the failure of Jacob Schoenhof & Co. was recorded, with estimated liabilities of $50,000. Settling with its creditors on a basis of 15 cents cash on the dollar and 35 cents additional in time notes, the concern resumed, only to come to grief a third time in November, 1878. After an interval of ten years Jacob Schoenhof reappears in mercantile New York at No. 104 Franklin street, where he claimed to have $15,000 in old stock and machinery. In 1881, in company with Henry Adler, he was manufacturing ladies' skirts in the Franklin street premises. It was the old story, for in October, 1885, judgments covering the stock were confessed in favor of a relative of one of the partners, and the affairs of Adler & Schoenhof were transferred to the hands of a receiver. Mr. Jacob Schoenhof next emerged into public notice as consul, by grace of President Cleveland, at Tunstall, England.

That was immediately after his fourth failure.

Now, Mr. President, we have all seen his letters and his contributions to economic thought from England and elsewhere.

Mr. POWER. How many times did the Senator say Mr. Schoenhof has failed?

Mr. LODGE. Four times, it is here stated, and I understand the facts are taken from the commercial reports.

Mr. POWER. He is in a better business now. I do not think he will fail now.

Mr. LODGE. He is in very much better business for himself. If it is desired to have an expert in bankruptcies to deal with the business of the country involved in these schedules, I do not know that a better man could be selected.

As I have touched on this subject of one of our consuls, I will call attention in this connection to another consul. I hold in my hand some extracts from the Bradford Observer, a paper published in Bradford, England. The Bradford Observer says:

Mr. Claude Meeker, the American consul in Bradford, who has certainly so far proved himself a true prophet on the subject, is of opinion that the new American tariff bill, which has just passed the House of Representatives, will also pass the Senate, though, perhaps, with some modifications and some little delay. Once enacted, he believes the new tariff will introduce a period of great prosperity for America, and that if Bradford continues to make goods of the same high quality as she does to-day, and gives some credit to those who have been pinched during the late financial depression, she will get her full share of that prosperity.

There are also some further remarks in the Bradford Observer of January 30, 1894, upon the minority report of the Ways and Means Committee in regard to the American tariff bill. Mr. Claude Meeker furnished it to the Bradford newspaper, and the Observer gives a summary of the points in the report. Then it concludes:

As has been said, the committee took all sorts of evidence, and, therefore, what has been said by one or two Bradford experts as to the effect of the tariff was no news to the committee. The minority complain that in fixing the duty on cloth at 40 per cent the committee has practically granted the request of the foreign manufacturers. Mr. Henry Latzko, a manufacturer of fine cloths of Brunn, in Austria, told the committee that a duty of only 35 per cent on such goods would enable the foreign manufacturer to sell them to advantage in America. The minority say, "The majority of the committee granted his request within 5 per cent, a difference which the customary undervaluations (under the ad valorem system) will more than offset. The foreign manufacturer has won his case in a committee of the Fifty-third Congress, where American manufacturers have pleaded in vain."

Under this article in the Observer is printed a letter from Mr. John Maddocks, of Bradford, who was interested in the matter of the wool duties, to correct some statements which he made in a lecture on "Our future trade with America." Mr. Maddocks says—

It is quite true that I said "I had heard that the new tariff was to be wool free, 35 to 40 per cent ad valorem duty, and no weight duty—that I did not wish the reduction to be too extensive all at once, and that with a 30 per cent ad valorem duty only the English manufacturers would be put in such a position that perhaps half the mills in America would be closed for a time, and the people of the States would in their disappointment begin to look at the matter in a false light, and there would be a great reaction in the hope of finding employment for the people." My subsequent remarks, however, went to show the audience my strong faith that the Government of President Cleveland would not neglect the true interests of its home industries by going too quickly from one extreme to another in tariff reform; that we in Yorkshire must not build up our hopes on a tariff that would enable us to ship large quantities of goods to the States for a year or two, for such a thing would be but a curse in disguise; it would either wake up the American people to a knowledge of their great economic delusion and make them once for all adopt perfect free trade, or they would demand from the next President and his party a tariff bill which would eclipse the McKinley one in its severity against imports of all kinds.

I suppose he got his information from our consul—

He says further:

I do not want to convey the idea that I am giving gratuitous advice, or trying to preach wisdom to the American people. I know from experience their shrewdness in getting at the motive; I own at once I have a selfish purpose to serve in advocating free trade for Cousin Jonathan; experience has taught me that I can only be happy and prosperous when those around me are getting their full share.

Those extracts I read simply because I was reminded by Mr. Schoenhof of this new form of consular activity, and they illustrate very well the practical danger which now threatens our woolen industries. It is, as the employés of the Roxbury carpet mill have stated, a great reduction of wages that at the very least they have to dread. And yet, Mr. President, their lot is not so harsh as that which has been meted out to the producers of wool. I consider the destruction and extinction of that great industry of woolgrowing by this bill one of the severest blows which has been struck at the business of this country and at its general prosperity in the lifetime of a generation.

Something was said the other day at the time of the passing of the cotton schedule in regard to the fact that no New England Senator rose to oppose the passing of that schedule. The reason was perfectly obvious. It was impossible for any New England Senator or anyone familiar with the cotton industries to get up here and denounce a schedule which was more scientifically drawn and arranged on a better basis for protection than I think any schedule ever proposed in a tariff bill. The rates on fine goods are too low in many instances, but the schedule was drawn on the best and fairest principle of protection that we ever put into a bill. The schedule was the work of the Fall River manufacturers, who are among the greatest manufacturers of cotton goods in the world. It was a scientifically drawn protective schedule.

Why is it that the cotton textile industries were provided for in a way which has never been given to them before, so far as the method of collecting the duties go? Were they saved because there were thousands of men throughout the length and breadth of the North whose daily bread depended on the work in those mills, or because there were thousands and millions of dollars of Northern capital invested in those industries? No, Mr. President, what preserved the cotton textile industries of the United States was the great growth of those industries in the South. When the committee came to deal with an industry which was growing up at their own doors, and the value of which they saw, they did not turn to Mr. Jacob Schoenhof, but to the best manufacturing experts in the country, to get a schedule which would give a proper protection to the cotton textile industries of the United States.

Mr. President, I applaud the action. It shows the teaching of facts. The South has advanced under the lessons of the great cotton mills which are rising up in those States. It has come to understand the cotton industry. It knows its value. It wants to build it up. Therefore we have in this bill a cotton schedule which is a credit, and the only schedule of which that can be said. That is the reason that while woolens are slaughtered the cotton textile industries are saved and put upon a sound basis.

Mr. President, I welcome the appearance of that cotton textile schedule, for it is the forerunner in legislation of that which will overspread the whole South. In ten years, certainly in fifteen years, there will be no more chance of getting a free-trade vote out of Georgia than there is now out of Pennsylvania or Massachusetts.

The South is coming to understand that its interests are one with those of the North in the development of its industries and the protection of its labor. It is beginning to see that the lumber industry, which is worth, I believe, $150,000,000 a year to the Southern States, is something worth saving, and the time is not far distant when the South will join with us in restoring lumber and woolens to the position they should have. They should be saved now and the frightful loss which the destruction of these industries by this bill will cause should in this way be avoided.

It is the coming of that great industrial movement in the South which has saved the cotton schedule, and it is that same industrial movement we hear speaking also in the resolutions of the Louisiana sugar planters. That great industrial movement sees no State lines, has no evil memories, but realizes that this is a common country, and that the prosperity of one part of it is the prosperity of all. The new industrial South is national and real. This bill represents the ghosts of dead issues and embodies living revenges.

We have been fighting here over this bill for many days. It has come from the other House to us, and in the other House there was a great struggle over it. For many years the Democratic party has been going to the country on the cry of tariff reform. Under that cry it has tried to set class against class. It has preached to the operatives that they did not get their share of the profits, but if they would only restore the Democratic party to power then they would get their proper share. The Democratic party demanded tariff reform in season and out of season. At the last Presidential election, in 1892, they went to the country not only on the ground that free trade was economically right, but on the ground that free trade was the only lawful thing, and that any attempt at protection was unconstitutional and unlawful. They have come here with their President in the White House, with a majority of 100 in the other House, with a majority in this Chamber; and to-day we are passing a high protective tariff, a bad protective tariff, an unjust protective tariff, but still a protective tariff.

If free trade can not pass a bill in a Congress elected on a free-trade platform, where is it to succeed? It is said that this group of Senators and that man and the other man have succeeded in choking the bill. Very likely that is the immediate cause of the strange measure which now lies upon our desks. That is the reason, perhaps, why it is so twisted and distorted; but under that apparent cause lies something more powerful and more far-reaching.

The fact is that this Congress was nominally elected and the President was nominally elected on a free-trade platform and the unconstitutionality of protection. It was really elected on doctrines that the American people do not believe, never have believed, and do not believe to-day. Free trade, with every branch of the Government in its hands, has met on this floor the greatest and most disastrous defeat it has ever sustained in the United States. It has been stabbed to death in the house of its supposed friends. It is a declining cause. Whatever may be the fate of bills or of parties; whatever may become of us or of our opponents in the next election; whatever may be the shape of this bill, the doctrine on which the present Congress was elected has been beaten here in the very Congress which was supposed to favor it. Free trade has been defeated, whether Democrat or Republican has won, and it is defeated because the great forces of this country are against it.

The forces of the North and the rising forces of the South that make for union and prosperity are against it. The whole tide of human thought, of human endeavor, of human advance is against it. It is those great forces working here that have beaten this bill. The Democrats have brought in no free-trade bill. They have passed no bill making a perceptible advance towards free trade, because they could not do so. The forces that met them at the threshhold were too great, and these forces have sustained protection and overthrown free trade.

It is that fact, obvious to every mind, clear in every paragraph, which emphasizes the absolute cruelty of this destruction of wool and makes it ten thousand times more infamous. To give a duty on coal is right, as I look at it as a protectionist. To give a duty on iron is right, as I look at it. But to give a duty on coal, and a duty on iron, and a duty on half a dozen other great staples, and then to strike down the sheep husbandry of the United States is intolerably bad. To put in a cotton schedule, which is the best protective cotton schedule ever framed, except that the rates in a few instances are too low, and then to put side by side with it a schedule on woolens which will destroy the woolen industry, is a bitter injury, wrong, and injustice. Mr. President, such a system as that is utterly monstrous and without defense anywhere. You may be able to defend free trade; you may be able to defend protection, but a bill of preferences, and especially a bill of preferences to trusts and sections, is an infamy beyond the power of any words of mine to describe.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate by any lengthy remarks. I have felt for some time since that nothing can be gained by a continual discussion of these questions. This one item of a duty upon wool is a question of local interest to the people I attempt to represent on this floor in part, and I have felt at least that I would be justified in taking a few moments of the time of the Senate upon it.

Wool has been the subject of legislative care, I believe, in all the tariff bills of the past, and it will require some explanation to the people who raise wool why now it is put on the free list when comparatively nothing else that we expected to go on the free list is to be placed there.

We were told early that when the Democratic party came into power they would relieve the people of the burdens that had been put upon them by the McKinley act and similar acts, and they would put a number of articles on the free list which would compensate the manufacturers for the loss that they would sustain by reason of the reduction of the duties. We had expected that there would be free coal, and free iron, and free wool, and free lumber, and various other articles of that character that have been erroneously denominated raw materials. It is a little difficult to say what is raw material. One thing is certain, wool is not a raw material. Wool is the product of the farm, and it is the product of much labor and much care. In no way can it be said to be a raw material so far as justifying the placing of it on the free list.

Mr. President, I have not the faintest expectation that anything I shall say on this subject will have the slightest weight with the committee, and not having any weight with the committee it will not have any weight with the majority of the Senate, for I have discovered that the majority of the Senate have agreed to follow the committee. In other words, the majority of the Senate upon all questions touching this proposed tariff have surrendered to the committee in charge of the bill, not a majority of the Senate committee, but only half of the Senate committee.

The arguments of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER], and various others, have rendered it entirely unnecessary for me to speak of the important wool industry or the sheep industry in this country. That has been done in extenso and better than I could do it, by those who are more familiar with the subject. In my section of the country we have a large number of sheep. We had in Colorado, in 1890, nearly two million sheep. I believe there has been a reduction of three or four hundred thousand in the State since the census of 1890. That industry in Colorado must necessarily grow less under any conditions, I think, because of the increased settlement of the country and the development that is going on. I think it will not be in that country a permanent industry with as large an interest and of as much importance as heretofore. So I have no more special interest in this subject than other Senators sitting around me and representing other States in the Union.

But, Mr. President, I think the sheep industry is not a local one. As has been stated, it is carried on in every section of the country to some extent, and in very many sections of the country, where it is not carried on to considerable extent it would be profitable if the people would engage in it, provided there was a fair prospect of a fair price for wool and a fair price for mutton. The demand for wool and for mutton ought to increase very largely in this country with the increase of population.

The great herds of Montana, Colorado, Idaho, New Mexico, and Texas will in time disappear. New Mexico and Texas will for some time yet undoubtedly support vast herds of sheep. The sheep industry eventually must be that of the farmer in small flocks all over the country where farming is carried on; and there is no portion of the United States where farming is carried on where the sheep industry can not be profitably carried on, whether it may be in the cold region of the extreme North or in the semi-tropical regions of the South. Everywhere the sheep industry can be made profitable both for wool and for mutton.

We can undoubtedly buy abroad all the wool we need for our manufacturers, and I am of the impression that we can buy it cheaper than we can raise it. So from a free-trade standpoint I suppose we should have free wool. However, there is not any question but that the English people can manufacture cloths very much cheaper than we can in the United States; and if the free-trade doctrine is to be applied why not apply it to woolen cloths as well as wool? There is no question but that cotton goods can be manufactured in India and sent to the United States cheaper than we can manufacture them here. In ten years I have no doubt but that all the range of textiles of every kind and class can be manufactured by Asiatic labor for very much less than we can manufacture in this country. If we are to apply the free-trade principle we should apply it to all; that is, we should accept the doctrine of free trade, and if there are any duties to be collected and we find we can not adopt free trade, then there should be at least a fair distribution of duties for the purpose of revenue.

If the time ever comes when we do not need any revenue, or when some method will be adopted, perhaps like an income tax on the rich that shall make it unnecessary to collect import duties, then we can dispense with the duties on woolens and with the duties on wool, because somebody can make them cheaper than we can.

Mr. President, I need not say here—and I am not going into any discussion of the tariff question—that I do not believe in that doctrine. I will admit that you can raise wool in Australia cheaper than you can raise it on American farms or on Texas ranches. I do not believe there is a spot on this continent where you can raise wool as cheaply as you can raise it in some countries outside. Yet I would insist, if I had my way, that there should be such a duty put upon wool as would enable the American farmer to raise as much as he ever did raise, and in fact a great deal more. I would do that because I am a protectionist, because I believe it is a right and a just thing for a country to so regulate its revenues as to protect its industries. I will not quarrel with those who say that it is to be incidental provided it furnishes protection, although I have never seen myself in principle the slightest distinction between a duty that was levied for the express purpose of protection and one where protection was incidental to the revenue. They rest upon the same principle practically, it seems to me, and the effect is the same.

Mr. President, no country, as has been said, can afford to buy its wool abroad, and no country can afford to buy its cloths abroad. I should just as quickly myself think of bringing about a condition of affairs where you could not buy any munitions of war in this country, as that you should not buy woolen clothing manufactured on our own soil. We all know that during the rebellion a few years ago the South suffered immeasurably from the fact that it did not have within its borders either the means of making the munitions of war or woolen goods, and I do not think I overstate it when I say that the South suffered more because it did not have woolen goods than because it did not have munitions of war. It found it a great deal easier to provide munitions of war than woolen clothing. In a climate like ours, whether it be in what you call the South, or the North, or the East, or the West, a good portion of the year is so inclement that an army clothed with anything but woolen goods would be practically useless.

It is as essential that the Army of the United States shall have woolen clothing when it goes into active operation in Florida or Louisiana, as when it goes into active operation in Pennsylvania or New York. There is no portion of the country where the health of the soldier can be maintained without some portion of his clothing being woolen. Woolen blankets can not be dispensed with.

Mr. President, a great nation like ours, having all the advantages of climate and soil for the production of wool and woolen goods, ought never to surrender to any other nation the opportunity of making its clothing, any more than it should surrender to a nation foreign to it the right to make its guns. So the wool question is not simply a local question; it is of interest to every portion of this country.

We have a duty upon woolen goods. I do not know whether that duty is a proper duty or not; I can not myself determine, because I am not sufficiently skilled in the matter. If I had to determine the question, I should have to rely upon those who knew more about that than I do. I have been told by some people who profess to know that the duty on woolen goods is ample for the protection of the manufacturer of woolen cloth. On the other hand, I am told by others who profess to know that it will be exceedingly disastrous to that industry; that they will have to do one of two things, either close up their manufactories or reduce the wages of American labor employed in those factories to a degree never heard of nor supposed possible in this country.

I find in the New York Tribune yesterday a statement which somewhat surprised me, and I desire to ask some Senator familiar with this duty whether there is anything in the statement. I think it is pertinent, because yesterday the question was put to the friends of a duty on wool—and I believe on this side of the Chamber every Senator is in favor of a duty on wool, and I know a good many on the other side would be if they were free to act—whether the friends of a duty on wool were willing to have a reasonable duty laid upon wool and leave the tariff upon woolens as now fixed by the committee. I should hardly know how to answer that question, because I regard it as absolutely essential to the woolgrower that there should be manufactures of wool in this country, for the moment you close all the manufactories in this country and buy your woolen goods abroad there will be no market for American wool, and of course that will be a condition which will be even worse than free wool with the manufactories in full operation.

I find in the New York Tribune of yesterday, which is supposed to be a paper favoring protection, an article which I wish to read, and I want some Senator who knows about this schedule and has had the opportunity of knowing the cost of manufacturer and who has come in contact with the manufacturing interests, as I have not, to tell me whether there is anything in this statement:

In the woolen schedule some surprises are not improbable. The palpable indecency of free wool with prohibitive duties on some woolen goods would be rendered even more glaring if the duties on goods should in some cases be further advanced. But there are rumors that the Senatorial auctioneers, in their bargain for votes to pass the sugar changes have secretly agreed to bestow especial favor upon certain woolen manufacturers without regard to the rest.

I should like the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who is familiar with this subject, to tell me whether there is anything in this statement, whether there is any class of woolen goods on which the duty is prohibitive, because if it is I am not myself in favor of a prohibitive duty. I want the duties to just equalize the difference in the cost of labor in Europe and labor here. If any Senator on this side can tell me, I shall be glad to have an explanation from him, or if any Senator on the other side knows anything about it, I shall be glad to have him state it.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Colorado appeals to me upon this question, and as I have been familiar with the woolen manufacturing industry of the country and with the duty upon wool and woolens for some years, I think I can answer the question with a certain degree of authority.

I will say that, so far as the duties contained in the bill or in any amendments which the committee have proposed are concerned, no prohibitive duty has been suggested, but there are no duties which under existing conditions give any adequate protection. It would be necessary, under any rates of duties which have been suggested, to reduce the wages of the operatives in the woolen mills of the United States to an extent, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has already suggested, which would be without parallel in the history of this country.

As to the other suggestions contained in the paper from which the Senator has read, I will say that they are absolutely untrue; and, so far as I know or believe, have no foundation whatever.

Later on I intend to show, and I think I shall be able to prove to the satisfaction of the Senator from Colorado and I believe to the satisfaction of the Senate, that the woolen industries of the United States need much higher duties than any which it will be possible to procure from this Congress, in order to continue the industry successfully.

Mr. FRYE. Under compound ad valorem and specific duties.

Mr. ALDRICH. The duties ought to be specific instead of ad valorem.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact that in the pending bill the duties, which by the existing law, the McKinley law, are levied upon wool being left out on a considerable number of the different classes of manufactures, the duties are as high as they are under the existing law and no difference is made. For example, on page 33 of this little book Tariff Rates, I find in paragraph 391 of the present law:

On woolen and worsted yarns made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 30 cents a pound, the duty per pound shall be two and one-half times the duty imposed by this act on a pound of unwashed wool of the first-class, and in addition thereto, 35 per cent ad valorem.

All along through these paragraphs, under the existing law the first thing provided for is a specific duty upon wool by the pound, and then, when they come to levy duties upon manufactures of wool, the duty upon the raw wool is included, and an ad valorem duty after that is levied upon the manufacture. The same will be found in paragraphs 392 and 393 and so on, running on through the act.

I find in paragraph 391 that the ad valorem rate, throwing out the specific duty, is 35 per cent; in the next paragraph 40 per cent, and it runs up to 50 per cent. It seems to me, as to some articles at least, the Senator from Rhode Island must be mistaken, provided always that free wool is to be considered.

Mr. ALDRICH. I shall not presume to answer the question of the Senator from Kansas in the time of the Senator from Colorado. I expect later in the day, when I take the floor in my own time, to take up that question; and I shall be very glad then to answer the question of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. POWER. I should like to ask one simple question, whether the Senator from Rhode Island, who has charge of this bill——

Mr. ALDRICH. No, I beg pardon; I have not.

Mr. POWER. I mean on this side. I ask the Senator what is the difference between the present schedule of proposed duties, protecting the woolen manufactures, putting wool on the free list, and the rates of duty prescribed by the McKinley act?

Mr. ALDRICH. That involves practically the same question which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] has asked.

Mr. POWER. It is a very simple question. I ask what is the difference between the McKinley act and the present bill putting wool on the free list?

Mr. ALDRICH. The rates in the present bill are very much below the McKinley rates, even if the specific duties were compensatory for the duties on wool.

Mr. POWER. What would be the difference, leaving out the compensatory duties?

Mr. ALDRICH. If you leave out the compensatory duties, of course you ask a different question entirely; but you can not leave that duty out, because it is utterly impossible to discuss the matter intelligently without taking both into consideration. When I get the floor I shall try to explain that matter satisfactorily to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. POWER. I shall be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will simply say now, in anticipation, that leaving what are called the compensatory duties out of the question, the duties proposed by the bill of the committee will very much lessen the ad valorem rates now imposed by the McKinley act upon those manufactures.

Mr. POWER. To what extent is that true?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is general. It runs almost all through the bill.

Mr. PLATT. It is so in almost every one of the duties.

Mr. POWER. But it is small.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no. The Senator is mistaken——

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. If Senators will take the trouble to look at the Treasury reports, they will find a complete answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Colorado, whether satisfactory or not depends, of course, upon our opinions in regard to the tariff question.

As I understand the statement of the New York Tribune, which has been read, it is to the effect that bargains have been made by somebody with certain specific manufacturing woolen interests, which have resulted in the obtaining of absolutely prohibitory duties under the pending bill. As a matter of course—I say as a matter of course—it is so absurd that it does not need any notice hardly. So far as the Senators on this side of the Chamber are concerned who are attempting to frame this bill, there is not the slightest foundation for any such statement, and there could be no motive for any such arrangement.

Mr. TELLER. If there is a charge at all, it must be against the Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. VEST. It is a myth; it is a fiction. It is like 90 per cent of all these newspaper statements in the nature of sensational conjectures. There could be no motive for making any bargain of that kind; and none has been made. We feel that we are attempting to frame the best bill we can to pass through the Senate.

Coming to the statement as to whether there are prohibitory duties and as to what the pending bill does, if Senators will turn to page 10 of Governor McKinley's report upon the tariff bill which bears his name, they will see his statement and argument elaborated that the specific duty in the McKinley act was compensatory to the woolen manufacturers for what they were about to pay under that act for foreign wool in the way of tariff duties. To use his own language, his idea was, in giving the compensatory duties, to give the woolen manufacturers free raw material; and that, put in another form of words, simply means that if you strike out the compensatory duties and give free wool, you have done the same thing that Governor McKinley did in another fashion. That is the statement, and he elaborated it over and over again. Mr. Amidon, formerly the president of the Wool Manufacturers' Association, made the same statement; and President Garfield, when he was a member of the House of Representatives, made the same statement.

So we come, then, to the reports of the Treasury Department to see what is the difference after you strike out the compensatory duties and give free wool, and free wool is equivalent, according to the McKinley argument, to compensatory duties. Then, what is the difference in ad valorem between the McKinley act and the pending bill? Take, for instance, on page 194 of the Treasury reports, and we find of "cloths, woolen or worsted, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound," there were imported 48,852.25 pounds under the McKinley act, and the duty was 33 cents per pound and 40 per cent ad valorem. Give that manufacturer free wool and strike out the duty of 33 per cent, which is the compensatory duty, and, based upon that, you have 40 per cent ad valorem given to the woolen manufacturer by the McKinley act, 40 per cent by the bill as it came from the House, and 35 per cent by the pending bill.

Take the next item, which is "woolen or worsted cloths, valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound," of which there came in 347,450.50 pounds; the duty in the McKinley act is 38½ cents a pound and 40 per cent ad valorem. Now, strike out the compensatory duty, and the ad valorem would be 40 per cent under the McKinley act, 40 per cent under the bill as it came from the House, and 35 per cent under the bill as it now stands.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. The Senator will permit me to finish my statement.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Taking the next item, which is really the important one, "woolen or worsted cloths valued above 40 cents per pound," of which there came into the country 14,250,621.63 pounds, under the McKinley act the specific or compensatory duty was 44 cents per pound and 50 per cent ad valorem. Strike out the compensatory duty and give the manufacturers free wool, and the duty under the bill as it came from the House would be 40 per cent, and as reported by the committee 35 per cent.

One other word, and I am done. The statement of the New York Tribune must be absolutely false, and it is absurd, with all due respect to the editor who prepared it. Under the compound duty of 38½ cents per pound, 44 per cent, and 50 per cent ad valorem, there came into this country nearly $15,000,000 worth of those goods.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator a question, as he is familiar with this matter. Does he understand the compensatory duty was put on to equalize the condition created by putting a duty on wool? Is that what he speaks of the compensatory duty doing?

Mr. VEST. Mr. McKinley states it very clearly.

Mr. TELLER. What is the Senator's idea?

Mr. VEST. On page 10 of his report, Mr. McKinley says the compensatory duties were intended to put the woolen manufactures upon a free raw material basis; in other words, to pay the manufacturer for the increased duties upon the foreign wool which were necessary for his manufacture, he was given these compensatory duties of so much a pound.

Mr. TELLER. And increase the price of his manufactures.

Mr. VEST. And, then, in order to pay the difference between the American and foreign labor, was given the ad valorem of 40 or 50 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. Did Mr. McKinley say in his report that so much of this duty as is specific is intended as exactly an equivalent to the compensatory duty?

Mr. VEST. Substantially. I should be glad to have it read.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will have it read.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to hear it.

Mr. VEST. It is Mr. McKinley's argument, and I should like to have it read; and it is also the argument of Mr. Amidon, Mr. Whitman, and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

In revising the woolen-goods schedule so as to afford adequate protection to our woolen manufacturers and woolgrowers, we have continued the system of compound duties which have proved to be so essential in any tariff which protects wool, providing first for a specific compensatory pound or square yard duty, equivalent to the duty which would be paid on the wool if imported, for the benefit of the woolgrower, and an ad valorem duty of from 30 to 50 per cent, according to the proportion of labor required in the manufacture of the several classes of goods, as a protection to the manufacturer against foreign competition, and 10 per cent additional upon ready-made clothing for the protection of the clothing manufacturers.

The existing tariff gives an ad valorem duty of from 35 to 45 per cent for the protection of the woolen manufacturer, and the bill which passed the House at the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, which abolished all duties on wool and consequently the equivalent specific compensatory duties on manufactures of wool, gave a uniform duty of 40 per cent on all woolen goods without regard to their character. This duty is more than is required for unfinished goods like cheap blankets and flannels and less than is requisite for fine finished manufactures of wool, which are being imported in so large quantities. For this reason, and to adapt the duties to the comparative cost of manufacturing different woolen fabrics, we have given 30 per cent to the lowest grade of blankets and flannels, 35 per cent to the medium grades, 40 per cent to the highest grades of blankets (flannels valued above 50 cents per pound being classed as "dress goods," which they practically are), carpets and the lower grades of finished cloth and cotton-warp dress goods, and 50 per cent to the finer grades of finished cloth and to all-wool dress goods, requiring the highest skill and greatest amount of labor.

These advanced rates on the better grades of goods for the protection of the manufacturers, with specific duties fully compensatory for the duties on wool, will, it is believed, have the effect to largely diminish importations of manufactures of wool, and consequently to reduce the revenue instead of increasing the revenue as would be the case if the importations should continue the same. From the best information we can obtain, it is probable that the increased rates of duty given to manufactures of woolens will reduce, certainly not increase, the revenue from this source, and transfer to this country the manufacture of from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 of woolen goods now made abroad.

In computing the equivalent ad valorem duty on manufactures of woolens, the combination of both the specific duty, which is simply compensatory for the duty on the wool used, of which the woolgrower receives the benefit, and the duty which protects the manufacturers, makes the average resultant rate of the woolen-goods schedule proposed 91.78 per cent.

The average rate under the present law, as computed on the basis of the importations of the last fiscal year, appear to have been only 67.15 per cent. This, however, is about 10 per cent lower than it would have been if the worsted decision, which corrected a flagrant wrong by which woolen cloths known as worsted were admitted at a lower rate than cloths known as woolen cloths, had been made at the beginning of the fiscal year instead of the close; and at least 15 per cent lower than it would have been if worsted yarns had paid the same duty as woolen yarns costing the same. That is, if both of these manifest errors, working serious injustice to the woolen manufacturing industry, had been corrected at the beginning of the last fiscal year, the average rate of duties in the woolen-goods schedule of the present tariff would have been nearly 89 per cent against 91.72 per cent as proposed.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. POWER. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. Yes.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] asked me what I was trying to arrive at. I say that it is an evident conclusion that the farmer and the sheep-raiser have to stand all the burdens, while the manufacturer is going to be protected. I want the members of the Finance Committee on this side to locate that responsibility. I want to know who is to blame for this great wrong.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to defend the article in the Tribune which I have read. I do not know anything about it. I thought as it appeared in a protection paper, and a paper which is opposed to the passage of the bill, it could hardly be overlooked, and I wanted some information about it, because if there are any of these duties which are unduly high I should be glad to see them reduced. But I do not want to be understood as attacking the schedule on woolen cloths or asserting for a moment that it is higher than it ought to be. I have never heard that it was higher than it ought to be; I have been told by some that it was a fair protective duty, but not according to the notions of the manufacturer.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will allow me, if all the schedule which is proposed by the Finance Committee goes through, there is no possible question but that some of the best woolen manufactories in New England can exist only by a reduction of wages from 15 to 40 or 50 per cent. This bill is an industrial revolution and a calamity which goes straight to the laboring man.

Mr. TELLER. I have not much doubt but what the Senator from Connecticut states the proposition correctly. I am myself rather inclined to think, from all the evidence which I can get, that the manufacturer will continue to manufacture; and if he does not manufacture with as much profit as heretofore, he will still continue his business; but he will take the reduction of duties out of labor.

Mr. HAWLEY. He will do that or quit.

Mr. TELLER. The manufacturer will not quit, because he has too much capital involved in the business; he will not quit because the skilled labor, the men who have been taught to do this work, will find it utterly impossible to secure any other employment, and there will be no avenue open to them; it will be starvation presented to them on one hand and lower wages on the other; and inevitably they will take lower wages.

Mr. President, there is no use of talking, the laboring man who lives from the fruits of his daily toil is never in a condition to make a contest with capital. Whatever you may say about it, though he may create, as was said by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] yesterday, a revolution in ten States and practical war if the attempt is made to reduce his wages, but the ultimate and inevitable result of it always is that his wages are reduced.

This does not mean, if the duty is an unfair one, the destruction of the manufacturer; it does not mean the loss of capital, but it means the deprivation of profitable employment and remunerative wages to the great mass of men working in the factories.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Colorado allow me to put into his speech at this point an object lesson?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. My speech is not a very logical or extensive one, and I will let the Senator put into it anything he chooses.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have in my hand a sample of what are called clay diagonals, a fine worsted cloth weighing 16 ounces to the yard, and selling in Bradford, where it is made——

Mr. TELLER. Bradford, England?

Mr. ALDRICH. Bradford, England, where it sells at 60 cents a yard, less the usual trade discount, so that goods of this character can be laid down in New York at a cost of not exceeding 60 cents per yard, without duty. Under existing law these goods pay a duty of 44 cents specific and 60 per cent ad valorem, which is equivalent to 74 cents a yard. The total cost, then, of the goods laid down here would be $1.34 a yard. That is without the usual commission and expenses. If you add these, it will make a total cost of those goods laid down here of $1.41 per yard. Under existing conditions they are sold in the United States to-day at about $1.75 a yard in the usual retail quantities to tailors and others who use them.

These goods, I can state on the authority of one of the best manufacturers in the United States, can not be made with free wool at 90 cents a yard, which would be the cost laid down with a 50 per cent ad valorem duty on cloths, without a reduction in wages of at least 40 per cent below existing rates. That shows the situation in which the woolen manufacturer would be left if a duty of 50 per cent is levied.

Mr. VEST. What is the specific duty?

Mr. ALDRICH. Forty-four cents per pound now.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if I may be allowed to return to the question of the duty upon wool, which we have left for a moment, it seems that the committee having this bill in charge have felt that they were bound to do something for the manufacturer. Heretofore the manufacturer has been protected by a duty upon his finished product. Now, the committee have very generously concluded that they can not protect him any longer to the extent which has been done, but that they will give him something in lieu of that, and so they give him free wool, which, in the plainest possible English, means that the farmer or sheep raiser shall be sacrificed for the benefit of the manufacturer.

Mr. President, I would not sacrifice the manufacturer; I believe in protecting him by a proper tariff. The committee which has this bill in charge do not believe in that. They say that this idea of protecting a man and giving him advantages is contrary to correct principles of administration, and yet they turn right around and say to us, "we have not put on as large duties as you put on the manufactured goods, but we have given him other advantages." In principle they have done just what we have been doing; that is, they propose to give him advantages by law. In the first place, we give him advantages which, under certain conditions, might have been taken out of the foreigner who brought his goods here, but under any condition of affairs, under any theory of the tariff being a tax on consumption and being added to the consumer of the product here, it came out of everybody who used this article. The committee, however, have selected a small portion of the American people, the most deserving, the most distressed I may say just now, the American farmers, and they propose to take it out of them for the benefit of the American manufacturers.

I am in duty bound to say that I do not believe the American manufacturers ask that interference on their part. I do not believe that they have been here to any considerable extent demanding free wool. Of course, there are exceptions.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator kindly yield to me to put in a word at that point?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAWLEY. I never had a letter from a woolen manufacturer in my State—and the woolen manufacture is a very great interest there—asking for free wool, with one solitary exception, from a very excellent gentleman, a Democrat; but I think he was in error then, and that he has been effectually cured by the present wool schedule.

Mr. TELLER. The committee have not been consistent. They have said substantially, "We will not give anybody any advantage, and we shall put a duty on woolen goods because we have to get a revenue, and if it incidentally helps the manufacturer, that, of course, is all right." They go further than that, and say, "We now specifically and purposely leave off the dutiable list an article which has been upon the dutiable list for a hundred years, which brought to the Government of the United States a revenue of $8,000,000 last year, an important article of the farmers' product; and we depreciate that property for the benefit of the manufacturer." That position is not logical, nor is it just. Why should the farmers make up to the manufacturers the loss which is likely to be put upon them by a reduction of the duty on cloth? Why should the farmer be selected?

Mr. President, I said I was not going to make any extended remarks, and I am not. I know I might as well speak to the blustering northeast wind as to talk upon this question. I know that nothing is to be done for wool; I know that the Democratic party went into the campaign of 1892 with a promise of free raw product, as they called it, to the manufacturers of this country, which included iron and coal and wool. They have abandoned iron and coal, and they dare not go to the country unless they can have something to present upon which they can say, "We have carried out our promise;" but I want to say to the Democratic side of the Chamber that they may make just as many concessions as they choose to the manufacturers, if they think they are concessions, but the manufacturers of this country are too intelligent to believe that that is in their interest.

They know very well that if you maintain a tariff duty in this country, it must be maintained upon reciprocal lines; they know that you can not maintain a tariff duty upon manufactured articles and not upon articles which are the product of the farm; they know that the 6,000,000 farmers in this country will rebel against that; and it looks to me as though it was a method by which the majority have taken to bring protection, if possible, into disrepute by compelling the farmer to feel that he is being improperly treated.

I want the farmers of the country to understand that that improper treatment does not come from this side of the Chamber. I want the woolgrower of my section of the country to understand that every Republican in this Chamber, without exception, whether he represents a manufacturing State or a woolgrowing State, concurs in this question that there shall be a duty equal—not equal in amount, but equal in justice—upon wool to that upon the manufactured product of wool in this country; and, Mr. President, they will understand it.

The men who grow wool in the Northwest, on the farms of Iowa and Illinois and Ohio will understand it. They will understand that it is an attempt on the part of the Democratic party to placate the manufacturer and get him on their side.

We were told a day or two ago—and I have been told in private conversation twenty times—that a reduction of the tariff upon wool would in nowise interfere with the sheep industry. In 1883, when a tariff upon wool was made which was not what it ought to have been, the number of sheep began gradually to decline in this country. I venture the assertion here and now that 1,500,000 of sheep, or thereabouts, which are kept in Colorado will disappear with free wool. I have before me a letter on this subject written by a very intelligent constituent of mine to a brother Senator here, from whose State he originally came. He is a woolgrower, and I know him. He is not a woolgrower like the Mexican woolgrower or the Australian woolgrower, but he is a man who would find himself not out of place, but at home, in this Chamber. He is a gentleman of education and character. He says:

> Our wool has averaged in price one year with another for the fifteen years prior to 1893 about 18 cents per pound, after paying freight charges to Boston; at which price there has been a fair, though moderate, profit in the business.
> Last year, however, owing to threatened tariff changes, the price was reduced to less than 7 cents per pound, at which price it is impossible to grow it, even under the most favorable conditions, without loss. And what is true here is also true throughout the entire woolgrowing regions of the United States.
> If the Wilson bill becomes a law it will inevitably bankrupt the American sheep industry. This means not only the destruction of hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of property, but also the permanent depopulation, throughout all the States and Territories west of the Missouri River, of large regions of country which can be profitably utilized only for woolgrowing on account of the scanty rainfall and total lack of water for irrigation. It is the wool industry which has settled up the great plains of the far West, and is the only industry which can thrive there.
> It is a matter within my own knowledge that within this State alone thousands of families will be ruined and hundreds of thrifty little country towns, with their schools and churches, will be wiped out.
> We can not compete with Australia and South America in the growing of wool. There is no degree of possible economy by the practice of which our people can produce wool and transport it to the Atlantic seaboard as cheaply as it can be laid down there from foreign countries.
> Nothing can be more certain than that if the existing tariff be materially reduced our American sheep industry will within two years have become a thing of the past, and the American manufacturer and consumer of woolen goods will thenceforth be alike dependent on the foreign market unchecked as heretofore by American competition.

I believe that that is a true prophecy. I do not suppose that all sheep-growing will stop. I think the State of Ohio will continue to raise more or less sheep for mutton. Ohio has a great market for mutton in the cities of Cincinnati, Columbus, Cleveland, Chicago, and New York, but the extreme West will not be able to raise sheep for mutton to any considerable extent, and the people of my State will be practically unable to raise sheep. Of course, we shall have some demand for mutton, but it will be comparatively small. The reduction of the 45,000,000 sheep now in this country to 20,000,000, to which I have no doubt it will go, means dearer meat to the laboring people of this country.

Who is to be benefited? What influence is there here which demands free wool? I have said—and I think nobody will stand on this floor and deny it—that the manufacturing interests of this country do not require free wool. There is no interest demanding free wool.

I repeat that I do not care to waste the time of the Senate in discussing this question, for I know that whatever is said falls on unwilling ears on the other side of the Chamber. I know that the committee do not intend to yield on this subject. I know very well that, as a general rule, in matters of this kind nothing is secured by a general discussion, and that if anything could have been secured for the woolgrowers it would have been before the committee and through private intervention with the committee. I want to say, for the benefit of the woolgrowers, that there has been nothing left undone to secure to them that which they had a right to expect—a duty upon wool—if this tariff was not based upon pure free-trade principles. We who are interested in woolgrowing knew that this was not to be done by abuse of the committee or by violent speeches.

We hoped in the beginning that we could induce the committee to see the justice and the propriety of it, and I venture to say there is not a man representing a woolgrowing State—I am speaking now of the great woolgrowing States of the Northwest—who has not done everything in his power to secure recognition. We have said, "Cut down the duty upon wool as you have cut down the duty on woolen cloths; if you have reduced that 50 per cent, then reduce wool 50 per cent; give us some recognition; give us 5 cents a pound if you will not give us 10 cents; give us any recognition of wool as one of the things to be protected in this country; if you will not recognize it as a proper subject of protection, then recognize it as a proper subject of revenue." They tell us that sugar is a proper subject of revenue, and therefore it goes upon the dutiable list, and yet they say that wool is not a proper subject of revenue.

Mr. President, the growth of wool in this country is as necessary as the growth of sugar, not perhaps so important in the number of dollars it yields; we do not send out as much to buy wool, but we shall send out to buy wool and woolens a large amount of money. The year before the tariff of 1890 went into effect we sent out $56,000,000 for woolen goods; we sent out last year $38,500,000 of good sound money for an article which we produce in this country, in exchange for woolen goods, every yard of which ought to have been made on American soil, every yard of which could have been made here, and every yard of which, if made on our soil, would have furnished labor to an American citizen who would have been a consumer of American products.

There is no reason why wool should not be put upon the dutiable list. There is no reason why the men who raise wool should not be entitled to the same protection as the men who raise sugar.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. I should like to know whether, if the woolen schedule remains as it is in the bill, it would be an act of injustice to the manufacturers of woolen cloths in America to impose a duty upon foreign wool?

Mr. TELLER. Whether that would be an injustice to the manufacturer depends entirely upon the amount of duty now imposed. Representatives on this side of the Chamber, of the woolen manufacturing States have said to me and have said, I think, to Senators on the other side of the Chamber, that they were quite prepared to admit, even with the present duty on woolens, a duty upon wool: but such a duty will not be allowed, and will get no support from the other side of the Chamber. Why? Because there must be somebody sacrificed that this bill may carry with it the pretense of giving free raw products to the manufacturers of the country, which has been a Democratic idea for so many years.

The stock in trade will be gone if they do not have something on the free list. So, I repeat, the woolgrowers are to be sacrificed. You could have left sugar on the free list; but no, the sugar industry is to be protected. I know it is denied by the Senators who were so anxious to secure a duty upon sugar that after all it is for protection. If there is $50,000,000 collected as duties on sugar, there is $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 collected as duties on wool; and I repeat, if one is an article of revenue duty so is the other.

Mr. President, the American farmer is having a hard time. He will see his flocks disappear. He will see one method of acquiring ready cash, because wool has heretofore been a cash product, disappear and taken from him. Unless he lives near a great city or town where he can sell his mutton, he will find it unprofitable to raise sheep simply for meat. The product of wool, which has been more than 300,000,000 pounds a year, will fall off, and as it falls off the importation of wool must increase. We imported last year 168,000,000 pounds of wool, for which we paid American gold, because, put it as you will, whenever the balance of trade is against us you pay for it in gold and nothing else. Every year the demand for woolen goods must increase. Every year the imports of foreign wool must increase, even if there is a duty upon wool. It must increase rapidly, as the product in this country decreases, and in time I fear that the foreign woolgrower and syndicates will make the wool as dear in the manufactured goods as a duty would.

I believe that a duty on wool would raise the price of it and not make it cheaper. I would not advocate here a duty upon wool if I believed it would make wool cheaper at all, because it is selling to-day at a cheaper price than that at which it can be raised. In very many sections of the country the wool can not be put into the market for the price that is being offered at the local railroad station.

It is true that it is one of the theories of the advocates of protection that protection upon certain articles makes them cheaper, but they are articles, as was said by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], in which machinery enters and in which ingenuity plays a part.

There can be no cheapening of wool by a tariff any more than there can be the cheapening of iron or coal by a tariff. A duty of 40 cents a ton does not make iron ore any cheaper and it never can. It is a tax upon the consumption of iron. The duty on coal is a tax on the consumption of coal, and so is the duty upon wool a tax upon the consumption of wool. But it is a question whether we had not better pay it to our own people than to pay it to foreigners. The tariff will not cheapen such an article anywhere. You can not take a raw product like iron or a material of that kind and cheapen it by a tariff. There the tariff is a protective tariff, not for the purpose of developing the industry, but for the protection of American labor, pure and simple.

Mr. SQUIRE. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, before this point is passed, not to interrupt him at any great length, I should like to make a suggestion.

We have on the Pacific coast a large amount of first-class iron ore, magnetic and hematite ore. That ore has not been brought out of the mine. It is still in the mountains and foothills. The vessels that come to the Pacific coast for wheat bring iron there in ballast or they bring coal in ballast. We can not develop this iron ore in the States on the Pacific coast, particularly in the State of Washington, if the protection should be removed from iron ore. I take it the Senator from Colorado does not mean to say that it would be an advantage for the State of Washington, for example, in developing its iron ore if all protection should be removed from iron.

Mr. TELLER. On every occasion when I have had an opportunity I have voted for a duty upon iron. I voted for such a duty on the theory that it is better to open our own mines and develop our own hidden riches than it is to buy from abroad. I have never given my vote with the idea that it would cheapen iron ore. It does not cheapen iron ore. A duty will be a benefit to us, inasmuch as it will save the American market to the mine owners of the United States and be an inducement to them to open their mines and develop them and take out their ores and sell them. The great point to be considered in all this is the demand.

Products of all kinds depend upon the demand. If you have a demand you have a product, and you will not have a product without a demand. The great beauty of the American tariff has been that it has preserved to the American people the greatest market in the world. The manufacturer who can run his factory with fifteen hands and make no money, can add ten hands or twenty hands and make money. If he can work his factory eleven months in the year and live, he can make a profit when he works the twelfth month. So the great question is, where is the market? Make the demand and the product always follows. It is an elementary principle in political science that demand is the first great question. We insist upon preserving to the American manufacturer the demand; in other words, the American market for American manufactures.

We who believe in protection as a principle, believe it is better to give the market to our producers, and we believe that in a great variety of cases a great big market enables a man to manufacture infinitely cheaper than he could with a small market. So the question, I repeat, is one of demand. Make the demand for your products, and the products will be manufactured cheaper. Everybody knows that a mill can manufacture $100,000 worth of products cheaper proportionately than it can manufacture $50,000 worth or $25,000 worth. The American people furnish the great market, a market unlike anything in the world.

There are no 70,000,000 people on the face of the earth who consume as the American people consume. Why have we so consumed? We have so consumed because we have had an interchange of commodities with each other. The man who manufactured iron manufactured it here and sold it to the men who manufactured other things here, and one became the consumer of the products of the other. Fifty million or 100,000,000 people interchanging with each other are as profitable as interchanging with a foreign nation. What more profit can there be for a man from Rhode Island to send his products to Europe and sell them than to send them to Colorado and sell them? If there is any money made in the transaction in the latter case it remains here. It is a theory of modern science at least that in the interchange of commodities there is a profit to each man.

The old theory was that there was not any profit at all; that in the interchange each man stood equal and got what he desired. But there is a profit to each one. There is a profit to the man who sells and there is a profit to the man who buys. When you send your goods abroad, or when you buy abroad, there is one profit, and one profit only, and when you trade in interstate commerce, between the different States, there are two profits.

Mr. President, I did not intend to drift into the discussion of the tariff question. I have only wished to say upon the wool question that there is not any reason why the raisers of wool should not be protected. I wish to say to the Democratic side of this Chamber that the woolgrowers of the Northwest had a right to suppose that when the Democrats abandoned the doctrine of free raw material as to iron and coal they would abandon it as to wool.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not propose, after the very able and eloquent speech of my colleague [Mr. LODGE], to enter into a discussion of this question at the present time. But I wish, as the representative of the largest wool manufacturing constituency in this country, to indorse every word which has fallen from the lips of the honorable Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and to thank him for the generous statement he has made as to the attitude of the manufacturers of New England.

Mr. President, I know, if I know anything, the feeling of the men who have built up the manufacturing towns and cities of that portion of the country. I have lived among them from my childhood. They are my personal and political friends. They are my companions in leisure. Before I entered public life they were my clients. I know their opinion through and through, in and out, to the very core of their understanding and their soul. They understand perfectly well that not only their honor but their interests is inextricably bound up in the matter of the protective duty on wool. They know that it would be a base thing for them, or for any representative of them, to undertake to secure by any vote, by any bargain, or by any silence, an advantage to themselves over the farmers who raise the wool in this country. The man who anywhere imputes to a New England Senator a desire to separate in this matter the fortune of the New England manufacturer from the fortune of the farmer who raises his material, imputes to him a thing unutterably base.

Mr. President, free wool is free trade in principle, in policy, in substance and in effect, and the statesmanship of the Democratic party, drifting without purpose, without calculation, and without rudder, and without port, in so many things which this bill contains, has shown at least sagacity when it has held on to the doctrine and purpose of free wool. Wool is the great object lesson of the protective system. There is not an argument for protection anywhere which does not apply in fullest force to the protection of wool. The authority of the fathers, the authority of the great statesmen of the revolution, the authority of the great statesmen of the Constitution, the authority of their successors of a later date is in favor first and principally of this protection.

The statesmen of the day of the revolutionary war, in the Continental Congress declared that that wool might be protected was one of the objects of their contest with Great Britain. Washington instanced it, as my colleague showed in the interesting letter which he made public this morning. It is of infinitely more importance as a matter of national wealth and as a matter of national strength—of wealth in peace and of strength in war—that this product should be protected than that any other single product which can be named should be protected.

Mr. President, it is an interest which affects the farmer. The farmer is the bone and sinew of the land, the breeze in the brick, the strength of the mortar. It is an interest which affects almost all portions of the country alike. If you are without wool you are defenseless against foreign nations in time of war, as has been well shown here this morning; but when you have your wool, even if you have no woolen factories, your women can spin it on their wheels and can weave it on their looms, and the soldier can be taken care of.

The competition of foreign and pauper labor applies to this article more than to any other. It is a foul shame which the Senators on the other side of the Chamber are proposing, to have the American farmer raise his wool in competition with men to whom wool as a garment and wool as a manufacture are strangers; that the sheep-owners and farmers of California and Oregon and Colorado should be held to a competition with men whose only garment is a breechcloth; that they should be held to competition with men who may almost be described as the Australian was described, I think by Sydney Smith, as a man whose only food was the contents of a watermelon, the shell of which he cut in two, and put one-half of it on his head to protect him from the sun, which was his only clothing, and sat down on the other half, which was his only pretense of a home.

If it were not so disgraceful it would be shortsighted and foolish for any woolen manufacturers of New England to consent to such an arrangement as this. Our statesmanship this year is not intended for the next six months or the next twelve months. It is not intended primarily, still less is it intended chiefly, to tide over these miserable hard times which a Democratic Administration has brought upon us. We are dealing with the permanent policies of American statesmanship.

We want to make our battle here. We know very well that if the wool-raising in this country is doomed, sooner or later the woolen manufacturer of the country is doomed with it. A little advantage which might be got from a schedule in the next six months would be an apple of Sodom in the mouth of the people of New England. The dead and dry and poisonous apple which it is proposed, if it is proposed anywhere, to hold to our lips we reject and scorn.

Mr. President, there is but one interest in this country that is in favor of free wool, and that is not a very valuable or a very large interest in the country just now. That, as the Senator from Colorado well said, is the interest of the consistency of the Democratic party. You went into the campaign with free material on your banner. You want to have a little of that motto left for another campaign. The Democratic wolf wants his sheep's clothing on the free list; and he is the only being under the American flag who is interested in this policy.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has always been friendly and fair to protection. I am a protectionist. In framing the tariff act of 1890 everything the representatives of the West asked was granted and cheerfully voted for by the then dominant party on this side. But the situation now is peculiar. We are in the minority. In the other House, Mr. STEVENS, a manufacturer of Massachusetts, is a member of the Ways and Means Committee. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if Mr. STEVENS is not a free trader and a manufacturer. Of course he is a Democrat; but I understood the Senator to say that all the manufacturers of the East are protectionists. I admit that a majority of them are.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to be understood as saying that there are none. I said a day or two ago that whenever one of the very small number of men who thought they could set this barrel of gunpowder on fire and extinguish it when it was half burned, or who thought they could get protection for what they made and free trade for all they bought, came to that conclusion he at once went over to the Democratic party. The Senator will of course excuse me from undertaking to discuss the individuality of a colleague of mine in the other House. I believe he does take for granted the idea that he can get protection for his manufactures and free trade for his material.

Mr. POWER. He is a large manufacturer of woolen goods?

Mr. HOAR. So I understand.

Mr. POWER. And on that account, being a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, it is extremely unfortunate for the producer of wool, the farmer, that the conditions are such.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator understands that he is a Democrat?

Mr. POWER. I understand it.

Mr. HOAR. Without knowing much about it, I do not understand that the gentleman whom the Senator from Montana has named had a great deal of influence with the committee in the other House in framing the bill. Whatever changes may have been made in the bill I do not think have come from that quarter.

Mr. POWER. I understood the opposite to be the case, and that the bill was framed in this respect by him. All I wish to say is that the people of my State will not get any good from this arrangement. The result is not what they desire. I tried to make it plain this morning. The manufacturers are protected, and free wool in a manner placates them, but the sheep-grower of the West and of the whole country is to be slaughtered and his investment almost annihilated. This is certainly unjust. I do not give up the situation. I should like, if the Senator from Missouri or the Senator from Arkansas will consider it, to divide the duty between the manufacturer and the farmer so as to do justice to both.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Montana will permit me, it seems to me, before he makes a proposition of that sort, he ought to state the details. What is the division he proposes between the manufacturer and the wool producer? Is he authorized to state what they are willing to do?

Mr. POWER. The manufacturer of woolen goods is protected, is he not? I ask the question of the Senator. Under the present bill of which the Senator has charge the manufacturer is protected?

Mr. VEST. There is a duty upon woolen goods.

Mr. POWER. Yes, sir; and as the bill reads, wool is to be free?

Mr. VEST. That is true.

Mr. POWER. If you would give 30 per cent protection to wool, even if you had to take some from the protected woolen goods, would that be unjust?

Mr. VEST. How much does the Senator propose to take from woolen goods?

Mr. POWER. I do not like to take any, but I do not want to put all this burden upon the farmer.

Mr. VEST. I merely wanted to know what the proposition was.

Mr. POWER. I shall present an amendment at the proper time. I should be willing to take 5 cents a pound duty on wool; I should be willing to take 40 per cent ad valorem—whatever is satisfactory to the majority of the Finance Committee.

Mr. FRYE. And take it off from the woolen manufactures?

Mr. POWER. I should like to have justice done. I do not care to take anything off of woolen goods, but I would not stand here and allow the farmer to be divested of every privilege and right due him, and give it all to the manufacturers. While I do not want to take a dollar from the manufacturer, and would vote to increase the duty on woolen goods, I do want justice done, and I ask that it be done.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator succeeded in killing the woolen manufacture he would have a very poor market for his wool.

Mr. POWER. I understand that the two interests are identical; but I do ask for and insist upon fair play.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana is justly indignant at the treatment which the woolgrower is receiving in this bill. He is, and it is not to be wondered that he is, smarting under the sense of injustice to the woolgrower. But he is too fair and just a man to desire that injustice should be done to others because the Democratic party insist upon doing injustice to the woolgrower. I am sure of that. It would be little consolation to him to take part in doing injustice to the manufacturer because the Democratic party have been unjust to the woolgrower. I do not think I misstate him in that respect.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. The Senator from Connecticut is always fair and honorable. Let us get some tariff on wool and then consider the tariff on woolen goods afterwards. Is it right to complicate our desire with that of the manufacturers?

Mr. PLATT. I had not intended to discuss the duty upon woolen manufactures: I do not intend to discuss it now. But for the remarks which have just been made by the Senator from Montana, I should not have alluded to it, I think, in the course of my remarks.

I will say this, that among all the abhorrent features of this bill there is none to my mind so abhorrent as the proposition to put wool on the free list, and for many reasons. There is nothing in that article which makes it proper that it should go on the free list any more than any other production in the United States. On the other hand, in my judgment, if the Democratic policy is to prevail of putting certain products of the United States on the free list, wool should be the last product which should be placed on the free list. I will give some reasons for it. I am not going to elaborate them.

A country that does not produce wool itself, if its soil is adapted to such production, will never be a very highly civilized country. It never will be strong enough to maintain itself. Those propositions were fully stated this morning in the remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and it is not necessary that I should enlarge upon them. I would as soon think of having no ships as not to grow wool. I would as soon think of not having an army or a navy as not to grow wool and to have a duty upon wool if necessary to protect its growing.

I am in entire and thorough sympathy with every Senator who desires a duty upon wool. I have always been so. There has been no changing, no variableness, no shadow of turning with me with regard to it. I have advocated it in the Senate. I have advocated it upon the stump before the manufacturers and workingmen of Connecticut, before the men engaged in the woolen shops of Connecticut. Everywhere that my voice has been heard it has been uniformly for a duty upon wool.

There is another reason besides the great national reason I have given why we should protect the growing of wool in this country, and that is because it is an agricultural product, and agricultural products are just as much entitled to protection as manufactured products, and I do not know but more so. The farmer of this country is having a hard time of it, everybody is having a hard time it, and perhaps the farmer has the worst end of the stick. Perhaps he is suffering more in the intense depression brought about by the threat that this bill is going to be passed than people engaged in other occupations. He is shut up to his farm for a livelihood and for the obtaining of the necessaries and the comforts and the luxuries of life, for the education of his children, for the development of himself and his family. He is shut up to what he can raise on his farm. Wheat has gone down and corn has gone down; the great products on which he has relied have come to be very cheap; and it is very hard for the American farmer to obtain such returns from his farm as will enable him to maintain such a condition of life for himself and his wife and his children as he ought to enjoy. Now, there are a million of them in this country who are engaged in the business of raising sheep, if I am not mistaken. It has been stated here that there are 1,000,000 flockmasters in this country.

Mr. PEFFER. There are a million flockmasters.

Mr. PLATT. Saying nothing about the increased number of people who are engaged in the work and occupation, there are a million farmers who have flocks of sheep. There are some great sheep-raisers in the Northwest, but practically there are a million who on their little farms throughout the United States are trying to eke out their incomes by the sheep industry, by small flocks, ten, if you please; a hundred, if you please.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. The Senator from Connecticut will remember it is also estimated that there are another million people interested as assistants, making 2,000,000 people engaged in the sheep industry in this country.

Mr. PLATT. I have no doubt of it. I think very likely that is under the mark.

Mr. PEFFER. If the Senator will allow me just a moment, I wish to say that in the Eastern and old Middle States, and all the States east of the Mississippi River, most of the owners of sheep have but small flocks, flocks of from fifty to one hundred, very much upon the plan of old farmers of forty and fifty years ago, while the larger flocks are now almost all west of the Mississippi River. There are about 60 per cent of the total number of sheep in the country now west of the Mississippi. As you get into those regions where the pastoral facilities are greater you observe that the flocks are larger.

Mr. PLATT. That is just what I was trying to say, that these farmers scattered through a great many States——

Mr. PEFFER. All the States.

Mr. PLATT. Through all the States, are trying now in this time of extreme depression and struggle to eke out their living and to get some little return from the small flocks of sheep which they have, and I can not understand the policy which in a time like this, and with the sympathy which is expressed for the farmer, expressed by the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who told how he loved him, and how he had summered and wintered with him and almost slept with him, of all the items in the bill puts wool on the free list. It seems little less than criminal. It may at least be called insane legislation.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator is speaking of the sheep industry scattered all over the whole country. He will find a table, which I can hand him, showing the number of sheep, the pounds of wool, etc., in each State and Territory of the United States. I want to say while I am upon the floor, by the leave of the Senator from Connecticut, that I had the honor of presenting to the Senate almost a wheelbarrow load of petitions coming from the different States in the Union in favor of a protective tariff upon wool.

The petitions were signed by the persons owning the sheep, and each petition stated the number of sheep owned by the persons signing the paper. So, if that petition was ever looked at by the Committee on Finance they were enabled to see exactly where the sheep industry is mostly located and the number of persons who are engaged in the industry. If the Senator desires to refer to the table, I have it here.

Mr. PLATT. I am familiar with the table, but I am not putting statistics into this impromptu speech. I said it was almost criminal to do this at such a time.

If agricultural industry were on the highway of success, if the returns to the farmer were great, if he was not under the stress of necessity, there would be perhaps a little more excuse for this, but when he is in the trough of the wave, in the valley of the shadow of death, as he is represented to be here, I can not understand how it is that the Democratic party propose to take away from him this little opportunity to get along and make a living outside of the general agricultural business of raising his crops. If it were possible by legislative act to have the farmer's barn and the grain or the hay in it burned up it would be scarcely less criminal than it is to adopt a policy to destroy his flock of sheep.

All over the country everywhere, whether in manufacturing or in rural communities, sheep have been considered as being entitled to the special protection of the Government. Take the sheep-raising States. There is not one of them, I think, which has not passed a law to pay the farmer for the sheep he may lose through the ravages of dogs. I have no doubt that is so in Kansas. It is certainly so in my own State. It is so in Ohio, I have no doubt. By the States the raising of sheep is considered so important that to encourage the farmers to continue it the States pay out of the public treasury the loss which he may sustain by dogs that tear and lacerate and kill the sheep. Yet the great Democratic party of the country is engaged in a policy which will compel the farmer to kill them.

Mr. PEFFER. I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that we have no law in Kansas providing for the payment of losses sustained by ravages of dogs and wolves and other animals, but at different times we have had legislation in order to tax dogs out of existence or to get rid of their ravages in one way or another. So we have been trying all along in our history to protect the flocks of sheep from the ravages of dogs and wild animals.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I am opposed to the removal of the duty on wool, further, not merely because it is a blow at the sheep-raiser and the woolgrower, but also because the blow against the system of protection can be dealt with the deadliest force in that way. That is the secret and motive of this proposed action. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate unnecessarily in this matter.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether he does not believe that if wool goes upon the free list the result inevitably will be that the manufactures of woolen goods will go there, too?

Mr. PLATT. Everything will go there. The Senator need not say the manufactures of woolen goods alone, but everything that the free trader can reach will go upon the free list or the revenue-duty list if the other side can once establish the proposition of putting wool on the free list. That is the reason why this blow is dealt at the sheep-raiser and the woolgrower.

Mr. President, the whole industrial edifice of the United States rests as it were on two pillars, wool and iron, and the free trader well knows that if, like Samson, he can break even one of those pillars the whole industrial edifice will tumble. If he does succeed in it, I warn him that although he may get a little temporary success he will be crushed under the ruins.

So the tactics of the free trader from the commencement have been, first, to bribe the manufacturer of woolen goods with the idea of free wool and protected manufacture of woolen goods, and then, when that has been accomplished, excite the hostility of the woolgrower and the farmer against the manufacturer. That has been the plan. The first proposition of that plan involves the idea that the manufacturer of woolen goods can be bribed. A very few, exceedingly few, manufacturers of New England undertook to represent the views of New England manufacturers. There is about one in a State, so far as I know. They are Democrats or Mugwumps who are anxious to have the Democratic party succeed and anxious at the same time to make a little more on their woolen manufacture. So they have carried the idea to our Southern and Western free-trade Democrats that all the manufacturers of New England could be purchased by the bribe and could be caught by the bait of free wool.

But, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has remarked, I think I know the woolen manufacturers of the East, and I think I know the men who work in the woolen factories of the East, and I tell you that you can not find among the fifty or sixty woolen establishments of my State more than one manufacturer who has been willing to be purchased by this bribe. I do not know how it is through the other States, but I think it is the same in those States. Notwithstanding all that has been said upon the other side, they believe in the protection of American industries, not so much because they want to make money, but because they do not want American labor degraded.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] said the other day in a little colloquy with me that we were all more or less selfish; that there were certain degrees of selfishness; that there were some degrees which were not really reprehensible. I suppose everybody has more or less of selfishness. The fact is none of us would be good for much if we did not have some selfishness. If we did not have selfishness enough to make our own way in the world, without trampling upon other's rights, we should not be of much value to anyone. But I tell you that neither the New England manufacturer nor the New England workman in the woolen factories is selfish enough to desire to make way by trampling upon the rights of the woolgrower, or farmer, or anybody else in this country.

Nor does the manufacturer wish to make his money by cutting down the wages of his workmen. We have no great number of woolen establishments with large capital in my State. I find that the whole number of woolen and worsted establishments in Connecticut is sixty-five, and the average capital is $240,000 or thereabouts. There is no great aggregation of capital. They are establishments of reasonable capital. I think I know what I affirm when I say there is no desire on their part to get a little paltry advantage, if there were any, in this matter of free wool by bringing ruin or injury to the farmers and those engaged in the raising of sheep.

I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], and I shall vote for it if he will insert in it the rates of the McKinley act, because I believe those rates are right, because I believe they are needed, because I believe that without them we shall not be able to continue this industry in the United States. I am going to vote for the amendment without any pledge or any knowledge of what will follow if it is adopted. If it is adopted I am going to try to get a reasonable duty upon woolen goods, but I am not going to make my vote depend upon whether a correspondingly increased duty upon woolen goods is to follow. I am going to vote for it because I believe that the man who engages in the raising of sheep is just as much entitled to a protective duty as the man who engages in the woolen manufacture or any other manufacture.

I can not avoid, at this stage, in the few remarks which I am making, alluding to the fact that the pending bill seems to strike its deadliest blow at the farmers all around. It is not wool alone which is slaughtered; but there is to be free wheat, free corn, free rye, free oats, a reduction of one-half of the duty on hay, the largest crop in the United States, and innumerable reductions below the protective point upon the products of the farm. Why is it? Is the farmer the "robber"? Is the farmer the "robber baron"? Is he the "greedy monopolist"? Is he the man who is plundering the people? There is but one reason for it; there is but one explanation of the policy of the bill, and that I have already given. It is, strike the farmer first, then arouse his hostility against the protected industries in the country.

I said that the woolen manufacturer of New England was not to be purchased by that bribe, and was not to be caught by that bait. I have too much faith in the agriculturist of the country to believe that he will fall into the trap which has been set by the free traders. There is no reason, as I have said, why this should be done. No excuse can be given for it. If a revenue tariff is the doctrine of the Democratic party, there is no article upon which a revenue duty could be more properly imposed than upon wool. If a revenue duty with incidental protection be the doctrine of the Democratic party, there is no article upon which an incidentally protective duty could be more properly levied than upon wool. This proposition is without excuse, wicked and monstrous, throwing away the revenue which is derived from this article, and which ought to be derived from it, upon a pretended benefit to the consumer of woolen goods.

I desire to say that free wool will benefit nobody. In my judgment the consumer of woolen goods will never receive one penny of benefit from the destruction of this industry by placing wool upon the free-trade list. Suppose he should receive some benefit, how much benefit would he receive? I think it was the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP] who yesterday told us if the person who desires to purchase a suit of clothing could have deducted from the price the exact equivalent of the duty on wool which is taken off, that according to the quality of the suit which he might buy he would receive an advantage of $1 or 50 cents, or upon the ordinary suit of clothes 25 cents.

Suppose it is true that he would receive that advantage. I believe it not to be true. I will say a little more upon that point soon. But suppose it was true, and suppose you went today to the ordinary working people of this country who have to purchase woolen clothing and you said to them, "The great sheep-raising industry of this country is about to be destroyed. The farmers of this country who desire to protect the industry fear that it is going to be destroyed, and they think that by a contribution of a half dollar on the part of every workingman in this country it could be saved." Is there a workingman in this country who would not put his hand in his pocket and say, "Here is your half dollar; do not destroy the sheep-raising industry in the United States?"

There is not one. The workingmen of this country have learned that an injury to one is the concern of all. They do not want to see the sheep industry destroyed. They would willingly contribute, as willingly as they contribute to sustain their comrades who are on strike, to prevent this being done. That bribe will not be accepted; that bait will not be seized.

But, Mr. President, there is to be no benefit to anyone. The woolen manufacturer is to get no benefit. Even if the entire protective duty on woolen goods were retained, he would receive no benefit from free wool. How would he be benefited? The compensating duty which he enjoys is for the purpose of equalizing the conditions under which he suffers by having to pay an increased price for his wool by reason of the duty placed upon it. I shall not discuss the question whether it is an exact equalization, but I will assume, for the sake of the argument, that it is.

Suppose you take the duty off wool and take the compensating duty off the manufactured product. You have left the manufacturer just where he was before, in competition with the foreigner who is making the same kind of goods. You have not benefited him. He stands precisely where he did before. If the compensatory duty is an exact equivalent of the wool duty, and if you take off the compensatory duty and reduce the ad valorem duties, then you put him into just so much fiercer competition with his foreign rival. Last year we had $36,000,000 of foreign woolen goods introduced into this country, and by just so much as you lower the ad valorem duty by just so much will the importation of foreign woolen manufactured goods be increased.

There is another condition, Mr. President, which I think will work to the disadvantage of the woolen manufacturer and to the disadvantage of the whole country in the removal of the duty upon wool. Every woolen manufacturer now buys his wool in the fleece and treats it in his own factory. I think that almost without exception that is true. He takes the fleece, he has it sorted in his factory, he has it washed in his factory, he has it scoured in his factory, he has it carded or combed in his factory, it is spun or twisted in his factory, and then woven into cloth in his factory.

The foreign manufacturer proceeds upon a different principle. There the business is subdivided. Great establishments with great capitalization treat the wool in the preliminary processes of manufacture only, and those who weave the cloth and perhaps those who spin or twist the wool buy their wool in an advanced stage or process of manufacture, where it has been prepared in these great establishments which do nothing else. By those means the foreigner has been able to reduce the cost of the preliminary stages of manufacture to the very lowest point. He takes advantage of all the economies which come with a great business, all the advantages in purchases, all the advantages in the disposition of waste.

With free wool the woolen manufacturer of the United States will no longer be able to prepare his wool for spinning or twisting in his own factory, but will be compelled to buy it of the foreign manufacturer. That involves the surrender, the giving up of a great portion of the machinery of our woolen manufacturers, converting the machinery so far as possible into adaptation for other uses. So the American manufacturer will not be placed on an equality with his foreign rival if the duty is taken off wool, and the compensatory duty is taken off of woolen goods and the manufacturers duty suffered to remain, but he will be under disadvantages in his manufacture which do not exist now. So, if the manufacturer were looking only to the selfish side of the proposition, if he had no regard for the system of protection, if he had no regard for the woolgrower, if he were willing to succeed, prosper, and thrive by trampling down a million farmers in the country, he would see, as he has seen, that it is not to his interest that wool should be placed on the free list.

Therefore, when it is suggested, suspected, or intimated in any way that free wool is to be regarded as a boon, a benefit to the New England manufacturer, I wish once for all to deny it. I wish to deny that they have kept silent on this subject and have been willing that it should come while not advocating it. With the exception of those few men who have let their politics run away with their business judgment to the extent that they suppose that in some way or other they might be benefited by free wool, there has been no such sentiment among the woolen manufacturers of New England.

Mr. President, I will say a few words about the raw-material cry. Even the President of the United States alluded to it in his message. I think I have it here. It is the most astonishing proposition of the whole message, and I have not heard it alluded to before. The President says:

> Even if the often disproved assertion could be made good that a lower rate of wages would result from free raw materials and low tariff duties, the intelligence of our workingmen leads them quickly to discover that their steady employment, permitted by free raw materials, is the most important factor in their relation to tariff legislation.

I understood the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] to say that in his letter of acceptance the President abandoned the doctrine of the Chicago platform and proposed to have the tariff adjusted, not on the theory of free raw materials, but of "freer" raw materials. That was when the Senator from West Virginia was talking about coal and iron. But when it comes to wool, it is to be free, absolutely free, raw material. By what process of logic, by what system of reasoning the President of the United States thinks it will be any benefit or any compensation to the workingman of this country for the lower wages which the President practically admits the workingman will have to take to have free raw materials for the manufacturer, I can not understand or discover.

Where does the President of the United States suppose that with free wool the manufacturer of woolen goods is to sell his product so as to give "steady employment" at reduced wages to the employé? Before the election of the present Chief Magistrate the workingmen had "steady employment" at high wages as compared with any other country on earth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will please suspend while the Senate receives a message from the President of the United States.

[At this point a message was received from the President of the United States, which appears elsewhere in to-day's proceedings.]

Mr. PLATT. I should like to be interrupted by the reception of another message on the subject which I am discussing. I should be gratified if the President of the United States would send us another message, telling us where he supposes the American manufacturer, who has this great boon of free wool given to him, as the free trader would make him believe, is to sell his goods so as to "give steady employment" at a lower rate of wages even to the people whom he employs.

As I have said, on the day when the Chief Magistrate was elected the workingmen had steady employment with a duty on wool. There was not a woolen establishment in the United States which was not running full-handed and on full time, and with better wages than were ever before paid anywhere in the world to workingmen engaged in the same industry. We know that with protection upon wool and a reasonable protection upon the manufacture of woolen goods, the workingman would receive steady employment and not have his wages reduced. History teaches that; observation teaches that, and it can not be denied.

It is said sometimes now that we are proceeding under the McKinley act and that the prices of wool at this time are McKinley prices. I have only to appeal to the Senators from the great Northwest, where the wool is grown, for proof of the fact that the men who go out to buy the wool from the farmer say that they will only offer and do offer only free-trade prices for the wool, the price which the wool will be worth with the duty taken off, and they will buy at no other rate. Am I not correct in this statement?

Mr. PEFFER. I think the Senator from Connecticut is correct.

Mr. PLATT. So we are not, so far as the wool industry is concerned, under the McKinley act or McKinley prices. We are under free trade. The woolgrower already understands what it is and what it is to be.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. PEFFER. I will state that the wool buyers of the East, who send their agents out among the woolgrowers of the West, the Northwest, and the Southwest, instruct them to purchase wools upon what the price would be on a free-trade basis, and not to purchase wool or to agree to purchase wool upon any other basis. As a result, Kansas woolgrowers, for example, are now being offered about 8½ cents a pound on the average for their wool, when it costs them from 20 to 25 cents to produce it.

Mr. SQUIRE. I ask the Senator from Kansas how long ago that direction to the agents of the wool buyers commenced?

Mr. PEFFER. This summer; this year's crop of wool.

Mr. PLATT. It commenced when the edict went out from the Senate Chamber that by the result of a party caucus enough Democratic votes were to be cast in favor of this measure to make its passage certain. You can not blame people, if they believe that the bill is to pass within the next two or three months and become a law, for asking those who have articles to sell to sell them at the price at which they will have to sell after the bill becomes a law.

I was going to say something as respects the idea that wool is a raw material. I think I have a little personal knowledge of the question whether labor is expended in the growth of wool. It was my good fortune and not my misfortune to work on a farm until I was 20 years of age. It was my misfortune, perhaps, in that I was not able to acquire the education which I might have acquired under different and more favorable circumstances, but it was my good fortune in that it enabled me to understand the thought, the habit, the desire, the feeling of the agriculturists of this country. However far I may have gone away from the farm I have never grown away from the love of the men whom I knew in the earlier years I spent upon the farm. I do not believe I have grown away from an understanding of them. I do not yield to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] in my love for and appreciation of the men engaged in the most dignified and independent occupation of the world—the tilling of the soil.

I have had myself something to do in my early days with raising sheep. I know how much labor is expended in that industry. I have dug them out of the snow in winter, as the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] suggests has to be done; I have washed and sheared them in the summer; I have looked after them the year round; and I know it is labor which produces the wool which is sent to the manufacturer, just as much as it is labor which produces the cloth which goes to the manufacturer of ready-made clothing. No raw material question enters in here. It is a purely and simply a malicious desire on the part of the tariff reformer to strike down the whole tariff system through this most important industry.

But, Mr. President, nobody is going to be benefited by it. I alluded to the fact that I believed any man who buys an ordinary suit of clothing in this country would be willing to contribute the half dollar, which it is supposed he may possibly gain, to the protection of the industry in this country. I know he would do it. But he will gain nothing, Mr. President. Quality for quality, style for style, serviceability for serviceability, the workingman can buy his clothing cheaper in the United States, notwithstanding the duty, than clothing can be bought anywhere else on the face of the earth. He certainly can buy it cheaper than it is bought in England, and I believe that he can buy it cheaper than it can be bought in Germany or Belgium. What more does he want? Does he suppose that with these duties removed he would be able to get clothing still cheaper? Oh, no. That is the favorite argument; that to be sure prices have been falling, and we have been getting our manufactured goods cheaper, we have been getting our cloths and all the products of the factory and the loom cheaper, but if it had not been for the protective duty we would have got them cheaper still. Oh, no; take off this duty, break down the woolgrowers and the woolen manufacturers, let the foreigner in, and you will find very soon whether you will get anything any cheaper or not.

Is it not enough that a man can be clothed cheaper, considering the quality and style and serviceability of the article he gets, in the United States than anywhere else? Do you need any other illustration of the benefits of protection? I say nothing now about the million of men engaged in the production of wool; I say nothing about the several hundred thousand men engaged in the turning of the wool into cloth and the cloth into clothing; I say nothing about their interests. Take the petty, narrow, selfish interest of whether a man is going to get his suit of clothes 50 cents or a dollar cheaper, if he gets it cheaper now than anywhere else in the world, why should he complain?

Oh, Mr. President, there are a great many things that may be too cheap in the world. Perhaps when that statement is applied to the individual, it will not be admitted. A man may think it is to his interest to buy where he can buy cheapest, but let me remind him that he can buy cheapest when there is widely extended bankruptcy. There is no place where a man can buy so cheaply as at a bankrupt sale; and we can have no goods so cheap as under a condition of universal or widely extended bankruptcy.

Does the man who gets his cloth or clothing a little cheaper because somebody has failed, suppose he gains any advantage? If this free-trade wolf gets into our fold and the wool industry is stricken down, and the wool manufacturing industry is stricken down, and the man who, perchance, is fortunate enough to find something to do in some other occupation of life should get his suit of clothing 50 cents cheaper, does he think he would be any better off for it?

Mr. President, there are some things which may be altogether too cheap in the world, and that suit of clothes which is so cheap that the American farmer can not raise the wool and the American workman can not produce the cloth under conditions which will enable them to occupy the grade in society and the station in life which the American woolgrower and the American workman is entitled to occupy, is far too cheap for the individual as well as for the nation.

Perhaps, before leaving the subject, I ought to say a word more as to whether we are going to get wool or woolen clothing any cheaper after this destructive policy shall have been put into operation.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] would have the woolgrower believe that the time will come when he can get more for his wool under free trade than now. Why? Because he has the advantage, perhaps, in Texas of raising the sheep and producing the wool, and when the industry has been destroyed everywhere else in the country, and the sheep which produced the wool have been slaughtered, then there will a demand spring up which will enable the Texas sheep-grower to get a higher price for his wool.

Is that an argument to be addressed to the American Senate?

Undoubtedly the far-off effect of the removal of the duty on wool may be to increase the price of wool from its present low free-trade price; but there will be few sheep upon which to produce it in this country when that time comes, and it would take a long time for the industry to grow up again under the fear that, in some way or other, by false pretenses, the Democratic party may again get into power and strike down the duty on wool. Pass this bill and the wool-raising industry in this country has received its deathblow for the next quarter of a century at least.

I want to say a word to our Democratic woolen manufacturers, at the door of a few of whom, I think, may be laid a large share of this trouble. They are not to remain unscathed. The Senator from Ohio, fair and just as he is, uttered the other day this warning:

> Suppose this bill should pass and the farmers should see that the wool which they have been in the habit of raising all over this country could not be raised in competition with the wool produced in South America and Australia, and yet that there was a high duty of 50 per cent on woolen goods manufactured from these very wools imported, it would create a feeling of unrest, of opposition, which would lead to the destruction of this most important industry.

That is what the men who are proposing the taking off of the duty on wool want. The woolgrower is to suffer first and the wool manufacturer next. It is strange that anybody but a befogged Mugwump would not be able to see that that was what was in store for him. I want to call the attention of these Mugwump and Democratic manufacturers of wool who suppose that they can get free wool and have high protective duties upon their manufactured product and thus make more money than they have been in the habit of making, by way of illustration, to the story of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey.

It will be remembered by those who have had the benefit of enjoying a classical education, which I have not, and also by those who have been able to read translations of the old classics, as I have, that after Ulysses had passed by the land where the lotus-eaters were and had succeeded in rescuing his men from that land, he sailed on until he came to the island where the Cyclops resided, and where a one-eyed giant dwelt alone in a great cave—Polyphemus, tall and fierce as the giants of mythology, combining with his ferocity the pastoral habits of those Eastern people. By night he fed his goats and his sheep in this great cave, and in the daytime he pastured them on the hillsides on the sweet grass and the herbage, and thus he lived ferocious and alone.

Ulysses, in his wandering with twelve of his men, came to this cave and entered under the great stone door with which the giant blocked the entrance when he shut it up for the night. He entered the cave and awaited the return of Cyclops, and at last, when he came in, his wrath was excited and he immediately seized two of the twelve, hurled them upon the floor, dashing their brains out, tore them limb from limb, and ate them, washing down the unholy meal with the milk of his goats and his sheep. Ulysses and his men were in fear. They skulked in the corner of the cave until the morning. In the morning the Cyclops ate up a couple more of them, destroying them, and eating them in the same way, and, then, imprisoning Ulysses and the remnant of his band in the cave, he went off with his flocks to pasture them upon the hillsides.

During the day they contrived various plans whereby they might escape. The only one that seemed practicable was that they should get this great giant drunk on wine, and then that they should bore out the solitary eye that he had with the fiery end of a sharp stick. So, when he returned that night, having completed all the preparations, Ulysses produced his famous wine, which was given him by the son of a priest whom he had visited, and said:

> Here, Cyclops, drink some wine after your meal of human flesh, and see what sort of liquor our ship held. I brought it hither as an offering, in hope that you would pity me and send me home. But you are mad past bearing. Reckless! How should a stranger come to you again from any people, when you have done so impious a deed? So I spoke. He took the cup and drank it off, and mightily pleased he was with the taste of the sweet liquor, and thus he asked me for it yet again:
> "Give me some more, kind sir, and tell your name at once, that I may give a stranger's gift with which you shall be pleased. Ah, yes; the Cyclops's fruitful fields bear wine in the heavy clusters, and the rain of Zeus makes the grape grow, but this is a bit of ambrosia and nectar."
> So he spoke, and I again offered the sparkling wine. Thrice did I bring and give, and thrice he drank it in his folly. Then, as the wine crept round the Cyclops' senses, in winning words I said to him, "Cyclops, you asked my noble name, and I will tell it; but do you give the stranger's gift, just as you promised? My name is Noman. Noman I am called by mother, father, and by all my comrades."
> So I spoke, and from a ruthless heart he straightway answered, "Noman I eat up last, after his comrades; all the rest first; and that shall be the stranger's gift for you."

That is the free traders' gift to the manufacturer. They will eat him up last—the woolgrower first, and that is all the manufacturer can expect.

Mr. President, I have detained the Senate perhaps longer than I ought to have done.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Connecticut a question before he proceeds from that point?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask him, as he is so very familiar with the classics, if Ulysses, who was a very shrewd man, did not finally escape with his men by holding fast to the wool of the sheep as they ran out of the cave?

Mr. PLATT. Yes, that was the way he escaped after he put out the eye of the giant Cyclops.

Mr. HOAR. And after he had put out the eye of the Democratic party.

Mr. PLATT. This is the most indefensible, the most inexcusable, the most vicious possible legislation for the country and for all the people of the country. I despise it in my heart, and I denounce it with all my energy.

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. President, this bill will put wool on the free list, and thereby add to the free list another product of Canadian production. To that extent it will increase to the relief given to the people of Canada by the reduction of the duty, either in part or in whole, upon their natural products.

I do not propose at this time to add anything to what I have already taken occasion to say during this debate upon this measure as one of merely domestic policy. Important as that is it does not constitute its entire, and I am not prepared to say that I think it constitutes its chief, importance. In more ways than one, and in no way more vital to the interests of the American people than in respect to its effect upon our relations with Canada, it is a measure of far-reaching foreign policy.

We hear its reverberations already from beyond the waters of the Atlantic in its propositions to uproot the policy of reciprocal trade with Germany and continental Europe as respects sugar and our agricultural products on the one hand, and with our sister republics of South America and the Island of Cuba upon the other.

All that, Mr. President, which is of so much importance to the consumer and the public of the United States, which is of so much importance and has been of so much benefit to the farmers of the United States, is condemned ruthlessly to the block, and I do not know but what there is a feeling on the other side of this Chamber, there certainly is in some of the offices of the able editors in the land, that the time of the Senate is wasted by a discussion before the great forum of the American people as to the effect of this proposed policy.

This bill, as I have already taken occasion to discuss during the debate, as it was passed by the House of Representatives and reported to the Senate, abrogated the reciprocity treaty with Hawaii. I am glad to say that that has been altered by amendment, an amendment in which I hope the House of Representatives will agree.

But I wish at this time to ask the attention of the Senate to some observations which I feel moved to make with regard to the effect of this bill upon our relations with our neighbors of Canada, and therein and thereby of the most far-reaching consequence to them and to us as common citizens of one continent.

I am free to say, Mr. President, that when the Senate considered the McKinley bill and passed it four years ago, it really took very little account of its effect upon Canada. We passed in that measure a schedule on agricultural and other natural products of Canada of the utmost consequence to them, and, in a certain sense, of the utmost disastrous consequence to them, but in doing it we really took very little thought of them. I doubt if more than a very few members of either House of Congress had their attention drawn to the great and important effect on our Canadian neighbors of the provisions of that bill.

The farmers of the United States—the Republican farmers—wanted protection. They said if there was protection to be given to the manufacturer they wanted protection to the farmer, and out of regard for them, and out of regard for their circumstances, and for the consistency of the policy of protection, which should hold in equal esteem the products of the soil and the products of the loom and the anvil, we enacted the provisions of that law, which also, as I have said, had their effect upon the natural products of Canada. We, in fact, were involved in a profound self-contemplation, and were lost to all thought of anybody outside of or aliunde ourselves.

When the McKinley bill was passed, with its agricultural schedule and the duty on lumber and coal, the American market was secured to the American producer, and that, too, without any additional cost to the American consumer. Prices did not rise within the wide limits of this broad land, because the consumer was left to the industry and capacity of the American farmer and lumberman and miner. Our splendid resources were fully adequate to that task. We needed for that purpose no assistance from Canada—non tali auxilio—and from that source no additional cost thereby has been put upon the American people.

As shown, however, by the figures of the tables, which I will beg leave to submit to the Senate, the duties upon the products introduced into the United States from Canada all fell upon the Canadian producer, and we enforced that much of a right royal contribution to the American exchequer, and to that extent augmented our revenues from our neighbor.

The McKinley legislation, Mr. President, if I may call it so, is an object lesson upon both sides of the line. It shows to the American farmer what an easy remedy he has against foreign competition, and how he can secure for himself the plenitude of our domestic market for his product, a matter of concern the largest at times when we are met in the markets of the world by all the problems of Asiatic and South American and Australian and other foreign competition, and all the complexity of the problem of silver as a money metal.

To the Canadian it was an object lesson at the same time. It showed to him the absolute uncertainty of the American market for him so long as he chooses to indulge in the luxury of being either foreign to the United States or a British dependency; that whatever crop he may plant, whatever particular manufacture or mining plant he may establish, its prosperity and welfare or its destruction are dependent upon the vicissitudes of American politics, and upon the action taken in this Legislature over which he has no control.

The bill now before the Senate, for the first time in American history, proposes to give and hand over to the Canadians almost a free market in their natural products, absolutely without any compensation in return. The history of our reciprocal relations with Canada is important and interesting in this connection.

Our statistics available are only to be found from 1821 to the present time. In 1846 the British Government took the great and impressive step for themselves of free trade, and in the same act cut up by the roots the theretofore differential advantages they had given to their colonies and dependencies in their trade with the mother country; and Canada found herself cut off from an advantageous market for her natural products in Great Britain.

At the same time she found herself face to face with an adverse tariff in the United States. The Walker tariff, of which we have heard such encomiums in this discussion, placed high duties upon agricultural products and the natural products of Canada. So it came about that there was at that time in Canada a condition of profound discontent, so great that the British Government sent one of its first statesmen over there as governor-general, Lord Elgin; and, as we are told by an eminent publicist of England, Lord Elgin himself wondered that the Canadians had rested under the adverse conditions which affected them.

As a remedy, he came to the city of Washington and proposed to the then Democratic Administration the reciprocity treaty, since known by his name, which was adopted by this country. It offered to the United States reciprocity in the natural products of Canada by giving to the United States a free market for agricultural and the like products in Canada in return for free markets for such Canadian products in the United States. That convention and arrangement was what is known as "jug-handled"—it was all on one side.

There was no market for which we cared in Canada for the articles which by the treaty were made free. It was everything to her to have a free market in the United States for her natural products that we thus gave to her free, while she retained her existing duties upon manufactures, and thus excluded us to the extent of her duties from selling our manufactures in her markets, wherein and whereby alone we could get any advantage.

I submit at this point some tables which have been prepared by the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department in response to an inquiry by a resolution of the Senate, giving a recapitulation of the trade of the United States with the British North American Provinces for the years running from 1821 up to 1893 inclusive, and also a table, which is a recapitulation of these annual reports by periods, showing in one set of figures the exports from the United States to Canada and in the other the exports from Canada to the United States. The periods are contemporaneous with what may be called the tariff periods of the United States, and I do not think that such tables have ever before been prepared.

The periods are as follows, giving the years inclusive: 1821 to 1832, 1833 to 1845, 1846 to 1855, 1856 to 1866, being the period of the Elgin treaty; 1867 to 1873, that being the year when our tariff was first materially reduced; 1874 to 1883, when occurred the next reduction of our tariff; 1884 to 1890, the year of the enactment of the McKinley law, and 1891 to 1893, the last year for which we have at this time available figures. The tables are as follows:

* Period of reciprocal trade.

This table, when you come to rest your eye upon it, is most instructive. It discloses the fact that in the year preceding the adoption of the reciprocity treaty, both the exports and the imports between Canada and the United States were greatly augmented, and that that increase of trade has continued almost without intermission from that time until the present; but it shows also that there was a great advance of the free imports by reason of the Canadians taking advantage of the trade in those articles which came in free under the treaty; and a corresponding falling off of the articles which were dutiable, thereby proving that, while the volume of the trade was not so greatly increased, the burden of the tariff of the United States under the treaty was taken off of the Canadian exporters and the loss borne by us; while both before and after the treaty it was borne by the Canadians.

For instance, the amount of free imports into the United States from Canada in 1854 amounted to only $495,995, while in 1855, and presumably in the three and one-half months between the 16th day of March, when the treaty took effect, and the 30th day of June, when the fiscal year ended, the free imports from Canada amounted to the enormously increased sum of $8,085,678, while the dutiable imports from Canada, which were in 1854 $8,288,417, fell in 1856, the first full year of the treaty, to $821,724. The last year of the treaty, 1866, when it was abrogated, the free imports had increased from the sum of $495,995 in 1854, to the enormous sum of $43,029,389; and the dutiable goods imported that year were $5,499,239, being a great increase over any previous period of the treaty, they ranging from as low as $491,732 in 1858, to $1,661,981 in 1864.

With but one other conclusion shall I burden the Senate from these tables, and that is in respect to the balance of trade. The balance of trade in our favor when we entered into this reciprocity convention was $15,288,996 in 1854; in 1855, during which we were only under the treaty for three months and a half, the balance in our favor was $12,623,519. It immediately fell off under the treaty and went as low as $47,976 against us in 1861. The balance against us in 1866, the last year of the treaty, was $23,699,748, while under the McKinley act the balance was, the first year, 1891, in our favor $9,220, and in the last year, 1893, $10,442,166.

I shall leave these tables, however to speak for themselves, and shall not trouble the Senate with drawing any further deductions from them.

It will be remembered by some of the older members of the Senate that in 1874 Canada, through the British minister, tendered to the United States a renewal of the reciprocity treaty of 1864, with the addition thereto of a large list of manufactured articles of the United States, which would be admitted into Canada free of duty. President Grant submitted that project to the Senate for its consideration and advice, and the Senate advised against it. That was the action of Congress in 1874 on the question of reciprocity.

In 1892, under the pressure of Canadian politics and the effect of the McKinley act upon their trade, the government of Sir John A. Macdonald, who was at that time alive and the premier, through their representatives, members of the Canadian ministry, and the British minister here, presented to Secretary Blaine, under President Harrison's Administration, a proposition for the renewal of reciprocity relations. They offered to Mr. Blaine to renew the treaty of 1854, and that he respectfully declined. Mr. Blaine told them that he would only consider the project of reciprocity as it should include certain manufactured articles to be agreed upon, as well as natural products.

Before any answer could be given, however, by the Canadian representatives to that proposition, they put a further question to him as to whether the United States would require, in the event of the conclusion of such an arrangement, that whatever advantages should be given to the United States by the reduction of the Canadian tariff on our manufactured goods, should be exclusive to the United States, or whether we should be willing to have it granted to Great Britain and her other dependencies and colonies. Mr. Blaine's answer was that it must be exclusive to the United States; that we should not be willing to submit our tariff arrangements in that way to Great Britain, and should not be willing that whatever advantages by this convention should be given to the United States should be given to Great Britain and her dependencies. Thereupon, so far as this branch of the conference was concerned, the representatives of Canada terminated it.

So, Mr. President, was shown by this very adroit and statesmanlike treatment of these negotiations by our great premier, the utterly illusory character of any proposition for reciprocity between the United States and Canada.

What shall be our policy toward Canada, the policy of the McKinley law or the policy of this so-called Wilson bill? I submit that our true policy toward Canada must be governed, under present conditions, not so much by commercial as by political considerations, and that it must be governed by the great fact of our geographical proximity and of her membership as a dependency of the British Empire.

It is not the same case as it would be if we were dealing with Australia, or the Cape Colonies, or India, or any other British dependency. Indeed it is not the same case at all, because all the reasons lead to the conclusion that they never would ask for any special arrangement with us of that kind. Canada only asked for a special reciprocal treatment from us in our tariff because of her geographical proximity, and indeed her geographical proximity is the great vital fact and consideration in this policy.

I submit, Mr. President, that the outstanding difference between Canada and the United States, growing out of the fact that we are under two different governments, never has received a settlement, and never will receive a settlement until we cease to be members of separate empires and become members of one.

I beg the attention of the Senate to a hasty résumé of these outstanding differences, which can not be left out of account in any adequate consideration which is given to this subject. The first in time, if not the first in importance, is the ancient and outstanding difference with regard to the fisheries. Under the treaty of 1818, negotiated on our part by Albert Gallatin and Richard Rush, the American fishermen could only land on Canadian soil in order to obtain shelter and repair damages, for wood and water, and for no other purpose. It has been contended by our Government that circumstances have altered the original construction of that treaty, and that we have the right under it to enjoy all the ordinary rights of hospitality in Canadian ports.

That has been steadily resisted by the Canadians, who have, in asserting the right they claim under the treaty, denied to American fishermen the privilege of landing in their ports for the obtainment of bait, seines, supplies, or outfit, or the transmission of their catch of fish to United States ports. Their reason for refusing to give to American fishermen the commonest rights of hospitality has been that they want to force the United States to give them a free market for the fish caught by Canadian fishermen; and on that we have had a long outstanding difference. It was one of the matters brought into the treaty of Washington in 1871.

By that treaty it was agreed that we should let Canadian fish be brought in free for ten years, if on the other hand these rights I have spoken of, hitherto denied, were given for a like period to American fishermen. But inasmuch as the Canadians contended that the rights they granted were more valuable than the rights they obtained by the treaty, we provided for an arbitration of such difference and the payment of the sum so awarded. We went into the arbitration and we were astonished to find as an off-set to the $15,000,000 awarded us under the treaty of Washington for the Alabama claims, an award of $5,000,000 against us to Canada for this alleged superiority of rights granted to us over what was granted to them in their fisheries.

Mr. FRYE. An award made by a packed court.

Mr. HIGGINS. I accept the statement of the Senator from Maine. He knows more about it than I do, for I was not then in public life. But on the abrogation or expiration of the treaty of 1871, no other arrangements having been entered into, the Canadians began a systematic harrying of our fishermen, seizing their vessels and condemning them in their courts in order to compel the United States to admit their fish free.

I call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that they never tried that with a Republican Administration, but they did it in Mr. Cleveland's former Administration, that Administration being full believers in the doctrine of free trade, which then would admit Canadian fish free, as it is now proposed to admit Canadian fish free under the pending bill.

But they proposed a treaty; and a negotiation was entered upon in the city of Washington that resulted in the draft of a treaty known as the Chamberlain treaty, negotiated on the part of England by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, which admitted Canadian fish free upon their granting to the fishermen of the United States these rights in Canadian ports. That treaty was rejected by the Senate of the United States, then under a Republican majority. Thereupon these commissioners, probably indebted to the good sense of Mr. Chamberlain, who was a practical man, tendered to the United States what is known as the modus vivendi, under which American fishermen pay to the Canadians for the enjoyment of these rights of hospitality—to land on Canadian shores to dry their fish, procure bait and seines and nets and outfits, and transship their catch of fish—$1.50 per ton per annum on the tonnage of their vessels.

That modus vivendi has been continued. Thus in this uncertain way the fisheries question between the United States and Canada remains outstanding, and promises to remain outstanding while Canada remains a part of the British dominion.

Another difference arising out of the treaty of 1871 is the Canadian discrimination in respect to canal tolls. Under that treaty Canada, in respect to her Welland and St. Lawrence Canals, and the United States, in regard to the Sault Ste. Marie and St. Clair Flats Canals, agreed to grant each to the citizens of the other country the same privileges that were granted to citizens of its own country in these canals.

In the face of that the Canadians imposed tolls of 20 cents a ton for all transportation through the Welland canal and the other canals and allowed a drawback of 18 cents a ton on all grain shipped to Montreal, thereby giving a differential rate of 18 cents a ton to the grain shipped to Montreal, for the obvious purpose of building up the commerce of that port to the injury of the commerce of American ports and through American canals or transportation in our own country.

This was called to the attention of the British commissioners by Mr. Blaine in February, 1892. According to Mr. Blaine's account they promised to rectify this discrimination, but according to their own account they only promised to take it into consideration. When they got back to Ottawa it was found that the Canadian government was unwilling to discontinue this discrimination which it was making in plain violation of the treaty. Thereupon President Harrison after due deliberation retaliated by imposing a like discriminatory tariff upon all Canadian vessels passing through the American Sault St. Marie Canal, and there the matter has remained but for the reason that the Canadians are paralleling our canal at that point with one of their own construction, which is about reaching the point of completion. When it is completed they will have a system in itself complete from one end of their country to the other without having to use any part of the American canals, and being independent they propose to discriminate to their heart's content. That is the attitude they assume towards us in that respect.

But a matter of very much more importance is the aggressions of the Canadian railways upon American railways and transportation interests in the internal commerce of the United States. As we all know, the policy was adopted at the very outset of our Government that all coastwise commerce must be carried in American ships. Not a pound of British or Canadian or other foreign freight between American ports could be carried in other than American bottoms; and such is the law to-day. It is the law upon the Great Lakes quite as much as it is upon the seaboard on either the Atlantic or the Pacific coast. Yet there has grown up a practice only permitted, not authorized by law, by which Canadian railways carry American merchandise through Canadian territory from one point in the United States to another point in the United States, thereby absorbing traffic which if carried on by ship or vessel could only be by an American ship or vessel.

The origin of this was quite simple and quite unobjectionable. A moment's thought of the geographical boundary line between ourselves and Canada in the eastern part of the country shows the origin of it. It grew up under two sections, 5 and 6 of the act of Congress of July 28, 1866, now known in the Revised Statutes as sections 3005 and 3006. Under section 3005 any goods or merchandise landed at the ports of Portland, Boston, New York, or other ports to be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and intended for their final destination in the Canadian Province, can be entered at the custom-house and carried through the territory of the United States on cars under seal, and in bond, not to violate the customs laws, without the payment of any duty to the United States. Everyone will see that that is nothing but a fair and wise and neighborly convenetion.

Canada for six months in the year is cut off from the sea by ice. Montreal and Quebec can not be reached. The Intercolonial road from Montreal and Quebec to Halifax passes through a country practically impassable at that time of the year. So their easy and natural course during the ice-bound season is through our Atlantic ports; and in that section we have simply said to them that we will permit goods to be carried from Europe or elsewhere in foreign countries through our United States Atlantic ports and over our railways to Canada without imposing any duty, and in a like way from Canada to be carried through the United States and exported from our ports without the payment of duties; and our railroads get the benefit of the carriage.

Now, that is one section, and a very proper one. The other section is the one under which this abuse has grown up, and it grew up in this way. It was very convenient to the United States to permit the carriage of American goods through the peninsula of Ontario between Niagara Falls on the one side and Detroit on the other, or any other route across that peninsula, for goods going from the East to the West or from the West to the East. Both the Michigan Central and the Canadian Southern roads cross the peninsula of Ontario in this way, and they have been in large measure a convenience to American commerce. I do not know, and I do not admit that they are necessary to-day. I see no reason why we should not require that all such traffic should go over the Lake Shore or Nickel-Plate road on the south of Lake Erie, quite as well as to go through Ontario on the north.

But no objection ever would have been raised to that. This statute, to which I have called attention, was enacted in 1866, at a time when the Canadian Pacific Road was not projected, but in 1886 the Canadian Pacific Road was thrown open to traffic. Then arose an exercise of the power under the statute that was never contemplated when it was enacted.

I have omitted to say that this statute is merely permissive. It permits goods to be carried in this way from American ports through Canadian territory under regulations to be adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury. So this whole traffic rests merely upon this permissive statute and certain regulations of the Treasury Department, which at any time may be altered or revoked.

The Canadian Pacific Road extends from ocean to ocean. It has one terminus through the Intercolonial at Halifax and another through a branch or terminal road it has through the State of Maine at a port, the name of which I have forgotten, just north of the boundary between Maine and Canada; and from there it extends to Vancouver on the Pacific Ocean. It has various connecting roads; the Soo railroad, so-called, from the Sault Ste. Marie through Wisconsin to St. Paul, and the Wabash system, which goes from Detroit; the Boston and Maine system on the east and the Vermont Central, the Ogdensburg and New York.

It has various roads, which operate as feeders, extending down into the heart of our country. On the Pacific coast there is a line of steamers (I do not know whether they are run under the American or the British flag) from San Francisco to Vancouver taking goods to be carried over their road. They make rates from one end of this continent to the other for American goods carried through Canada, not merely goods whose transportation originally begins in the States of the northern border, but by means of these feeders on the coast, as well as inland, extending down into the heart of our country. For a reason I shall give in a moment they can afford to make always and every time a lower rate than any American road can afford to make, and they do make a rate low enough to secure the traffic.

Thus, Mr. President, a shipper at San Francisco can send goods destined to New York up the coast to Vancouver, across the continent by the Canadian Pacific, then down to New York by its eastern connection, at a lower rate than he can send by an American railway. How is it that the Canadian Pacific can command this trade? It is because unless it had this traffic it could not exist as a business undertaking. It could not earn its own axle grease by Canadian traffic alone.

After leaving Ontario it passes a long distance through uninhabited regions until it reaches Manitoba, where there is but a relatively small population, and after leaving there it goes through another waste equally long, and over the triple ranges of the Rocky and other mountains to British Columbia. But because it earns nothing from Canadian freight it can afford to take American freight at any rate lower than the rate made by an American railway, because whatever it gets is just that much more than nothing. This is the attack that is leveled by the Canadian corporation at the railway and transportation interests of the United States.

Now, if this was done by a merely commercial corporation it would be important enough and serious enough, but it is a very much more serious matter. The Canadian Pacific road was constructed primarily not for commercial purposes so much as for political, military, and imperial purposes. It was to make this railway and the Dominion of Canada the connecting link between Great Britain on the one side and her Asiatic and Pacific Ocean dependencies upon the other. It was intended to accomplish the same object for which the Dominion of Canada was created—the consolidation of the confederated Canadian provinces under one government in order to maintain their homogeneity and their dependence upon and allegiance to the British Crown. It was intended for the transportation of troops and munitions of war from one part of Canada to another part of Canada, and to weld the whole together into one harmonious entity.

These rates are made not merely from the coast; they are made from points inland. I can say that positively, because as a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate, in a recent hearing with reference to the amendment or repeal of the clause of the interstate-commerce act forbidding pooling, we had before us a very intelligent witness, having a full knowledge of our internal trade by railway, who testified to the fact that the Canadian Pacific road made rates to the East for their grain in the very heart of Iowa, and thus from St. Paul, from Iowa, from Denver, from all points in the heart of the country, this marader upon our internal commerce and traffic levies its contributions upon our American labor.

The fact that this was a political rather than a mere commercial scheme is shown in its innate character and policy; but there is direct evidence in regard to it. Sir E. W. Watkin, member of the British Parliament, in a work upon "Canada and the States," published in 1887, in his preface speaks about this. Sir Edward Watkin made, I believe, some thirty visits across the Atlantic with regard to strengthening the British connection. He says:

> Is this great work—
> It was the year after the railway was opened—> the Canadian Pacific Railway, to be left as a monument, at once, of Canada's loyalty and foresight, and of Canada's betrayal; or is it to be made the new land-route to our Eastern and Australian Empire? If it is to be shunted, then the explorations of the last three hundred years have been in vain. The dreams of some of the greatest statesmen of past times are reduced to dreams, and nothing more. The strength given by this glorious self-contained route, from the old country to all the new countries, is wasted.
> On the other hand, if those who now govern inherit the great traditions of the past; if they believe in empire; if they are statesmen—then, a line of military posts of strength and magnitude, beginning at Halifax on the Atlantic, and ending at the Pacific, will give power to the Dominion, and wherever the red-coat appears confidence in the brave old country will be restored.

> Which is it to be?
> Some years ago, Sir John A. Macdonald said: "I hope to live to see the day, and if I do not, that my son may be spared, to see Canada the right arm of England. To see Canada a powerful auxiliary of the Empire, not, as now, a source of anxiety and a source of danger."

Later Sir John A. Macdonald, in an interview with a representative of the Pall Mall Gazette, said what I shall read from the testimony of Mr. Joseph Nimmo, jr., before the Select Committee on Relations with Canada, at page 894 of Senate Report 1530, part 2, Fifty-first Congress, first session:

> About three years ago Sir John A. Macdonald divulged to one of the editors of the Pall Mall Gazette the politico-commercial idea upon which the whole Canadian Pacific Railway enterprise is based. He described it as a railroad extending from ocean to ocean, and superior to the American roads by virtue of that fact, and the fact that it enjoys a monopoly of the transcontinental traffic of Canada. Then, in an outburst of enthusiasm, he announced the fact that he was an imperial confederationist, and a firm adherent of "Greater Britainism." Referring to the Canadian Pacific Railway as a part of an enormous political scheme, he said;
> "With England as a central power, with Australia and South Africa as auxiliaries, we (the Confederated British Empire) must control the seas, and the control of the sea means the control of the world."
> The leaders of the political party in power in Canada to-day make no attempt to disguise their purpose. The Handbook of Canada recently published by the Dominion government, states that the Canadian Pacific was constructed "in the interests of the Empire at large, as well as those of Canada," and it adds that if these far-seeing plans had been taken up when first mooted, "Canada would have been at least two generations in advance of her present position, while 'Greater Britain' (i. e., British imperial confederation) would have been in a much higher state of development than it is." This significant remark also follows:
> "It was a singular coincidence and perhaps a prophetic omen of the future imperial importance of this railway, that the first loaded train that passed over its entire length from ocean to ocean was freighted with naval stores belonging to the imperial war department, transferred from Quebec to Vancouver."
> In speaking of the negotiations for a British subsidy in favor of the Canadian Pacific steamer line to China and Japan, the president of that railroad said in his annual report for 1887:
> "The imperial interests involved in this question are so important that there can be little doubt of a satisfactory result."

If this matter were confined to railway transportation it could be thwarted; but the scheme is more far-reaching, and in part it has been carried out. In connection with the Canadian Pacific road there has been established on the Pacific a line of fast steamers, heavily subsidized by the British and Canadian Governments, running from Vancouver, the Pacific terminus of the Canadian Pacific road, to Japan and China by one route, and to Australia by the other; while ships are now building under the assurance of a like subsidy and like speed, faster, or as fast as any yet put upon the ocean, to run between Halifax and Liverpool.

This means British invasion of the Pacific market—the last refuge of the once almost triumphant American marine. Until this competition arose the Pacific Mail and other lines of American steamers commanded the trade between San Francisco and our other ports on the Pacific coast and Japan, China, Hawaii, and Australia, and generally our American trade in what up to recent times has been a most remote region of the globe. The condition is now different. At the outbreak of the civil war we had the second greatest marine of the world and were fast challenging British supremacy. The Alabama, the Shenandoah, and the Florida put an end to that. Sailing from British ports, our Southern friends were able to drive the knife home to our vitals. It remains to be seen whether by this bill they will succeed in increasing the damage which was inflicted then.

But this imperial extension does not stop with the railways or the fast sailing vessels at the ocean termini of the railroads. There is now projected an ocean cable between Vancouver and Australia in opposition to a French cable which has been projected to one of the Australian colonies, I believe, from some point on the coast of Asia. On the 21st of the present month there is to meet in Ottawa a conference of representatives from Great Britain, the Australian colonies, and the Dominion of Canada, to consider the joint and respective subsidizing of an ocean cable from Vancouver to Australia as a completion of this imperial scheme of commercial advantage and military aggression and defense.

I read at this point a short extract from a letter to the London Times of the 25th of May last from a correspondent who has been writing voluminously to the Times from Canada with regard to the matter. He says:

And for what purpose was this mighty barrier of the Rockies and Selkirks, 600 miles wide, to be crossed?

Not to unite two great communities striving for closer intercourse, as was the case when the 40,000,000 people of the Eastean and Western States, already advanced far beyond the Mississippi, made the first American line across a narrower range of mountains to get in touch with San Francisco, and the large population of the Pacific States, which was also pressing up to the base of the Rockies. In Eastern Canada there were only 4,000,000 people; in British Columbia there were less than 50,000 white people—the population of a small English manufacturing town—and few of these on the mainland, when the railroad was undertaken.

It was to complete and round off a national conception; to pave the way for commercial and political advantages as yet far remote, and by many deemed imaginary, that the work was faced. British Columbia, insignificant in population, was significant enough in position and in some of its resources. It fronted on the Pacific; it had splendid harbors and abundant coal; it supplied a new base of sea power and commercial influence; it suggested a new and short pathway to the Orient and Australasia. The statesmen at Ottawa, who in 1867 began to look over the Rockies to continents beyond the Pacific, were not wanting in imagination; many claimed that their imagination outran their reason; but in the rapid course of events their dreams have already been more than justified.

They were, perhaps, building even better than they supposed. We now know, when Japanese and Australian mail and trade routes are already accomplished facts, and Pacific cable schemes are being discussed, and the docks and fortifications of Esquimalt are being completed jointly by Britain and Canada, that they were supplying the missing joints and fastening the rivets of empire. While they were doing this they were also giving political consolidation to the older provinces of Canada. Common aspirations and a great common task, with the stirring of enthusiam which followed on the sudden widening of the Canadian horizon, did more than anything else to draw those provinces out of their own narrow circles and to give them the sense of a larger citizenship.

So, though British Columbia made no great addition to the population of Canada, its absorption into the Dominion some years after confederation, and the pledge of a transcontinental railway which was the condition of that absorption, marked a great turning point in Canadian history.

Vancouver is the meeting place of the Empire's extreme west and east and south, for of the two main lines of steamships which frequent the port, one has its further terminus at Hongkong, the other at Sydney. Their presence vindicates the policy which led Canada to make such sacrifices to secure a base upon the Pacific.

Mr. President, it does not even stop there. I brought with me, but can not lay my hands upon it this moment, a clipping from the London Times which says that on April 25 it had intelligence from Apia that the conference at Ottawa would consider the question of the disposition of Samoa, and that colonial interests require the putting to an end of the tripartite arrangements now governing Samoa.

So, Mr. President, we mark the interesting advent of a new feature in the dominion of the world. We have known in the past plenty of things that have been done in support of British interests, but we now have the introduction of colonial interests. I trust that the day will be long distant when for any considerable time, at least, there will be a disregard in this Chamber of American interests.

But this feature of the question does not rest here. It began with the existence and presence on our Atlantic coast of the fortifications at Halifax, Bermuda, and Kingston in Jamaica; not aimed at France, not aimed at Europe, not aimed at Germany, nor at Russia. They can be aimed at nobody but the United States of America and her colonial posts. Now we are having added by the joint contributions of British and Canadian funds a like fortification at Esquimault, in the neighborhood of Vancouver. It is idle to say that it is being built because of the Russian fortress at Vladiovostock on the far-off Pacific shore of the Russian Possessions. It is a menace and a threat at Puget Sound, and Portland, and San Francisco, and San Diego. It can be no other.

I do not find fault with this. Everybody has a right to take care of his own, and Great Britain has a right to take care of her own. What I do find fault with is that these grave facts are being ignored by American statesmen, who thereby fail to take care of their own.

But, Mr. President, not only these lines of shipping, but the Canadian Pacific road itself was built by subsidies. It never could have been built otherwise. The amount which was given in various forms and ways for the construction of the lines of railroad has been variously estimated at from two hundred and fifty to three hundred million dollars, in addition to the subsidies that are given to the line of steamships from Vancouver to the Orient and to Australia, and that are to be given on the line from Halifax to Liverpool, and upon the proposed oceanic cable from Vancouver to Australia.

We hear enough of the doctrine of Cobden—laissez faire—let things go as they will. I do not propose to trench upon the ground treated of in such a masterful fashion by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in the earlier stages of this debate. No more striking illustration of this is furnished than by the present example to which I am alluding, that while Great Britain wisely relies upon free trade where it is to her advantage, she does not hesitate to offer subsidies and bounties, and to apply the doctrine of protection wherever that will be to her advantage. So we have built around us by subsidies a cordon of railway and steamer lines encroaching upon our domestic and foreign commerce, as well as a military and naval cordon that in any time of difference would be precipitated upon our undefended cities and shores.

Mr. President, in this dark picture there is one bright spot that gleams out on the sky like the North star, shining with no borrowed light, drawing its luster from no sun, a lesson of courage and of statesmanship worthy to be learned by the men who, sitting in this Chamber, direct the destinies of the American Republic. I refer to that noble band of Americans in Hawaii, the picket guard, the outpost of American interests, standing there by themselves, loyal to the country of their origin, loyal to the ideas which carried them there, not to be seduced and not to be driven even by the resistless power of that Republic for whose interests they have stood and whose rulers with folly predestinate strove to overthrow them.

Mr. President, there is one safe point for American interests in the Pacific Ocean. There is no merit in the American Government; but a good deal is due the American people for the influence they have exerted in this critical exigency in their affairs.

This country, with its vast resources, with its magnificent possibilities, with a prosperity up to the time of the advent of the Democratic Administration without parallel in the experience or history of the world, could well afford to contemplate with equanimity and relative indifference any prosperity which Canada might have by any means whatsoever.

We might look on and view it with comparative indifference. Certainly if that were all, I should not submit the remarks I am now making to present this view of the subject. But we are concerned as respects the Canadian Pacific road and its influence, with the removal of a duty upon wool and upon Canadian natural products, and the effect of that policy upon the future problem of the unity of the English-speaking people of this continent.

No American has any thought of the conquest of Canada by force of arms. Profoundly as many Americans believe that the welfare of all English-speaking people upon the continent, on whatever side of the line they may live, demands the unity of the two peoples under one Government, we would not be willing to accept such a unity as the result of war of conquest.

If Canada comes to the United States she must come of her own free will and as a result of her recognition and her realization that such unity is demanded by her own permanent and paramount interests. I am one of those who believe that the permanent and paramount interests of the American people and those who live on our side of the line equally demand the union of the continent, and hence I am opposed to the policy of the present bill and the rate of duties it imposes upon Canadian products.

The dominating fact for Canadian and American alike is the American market. It is a necessity to Canada equally with the United States. Canada in respect to it holds a peculiar place arising out of her geographical position. Canada is divided into four distinct and separate sections, each separated from the other by a vast uninhabited waste, having no immediate trade or commerce with one another. You have on the east the maritime provinces; in the eastern center, Ontario and Quebec; in the western center, Manitoba and the northwestern provinces, and, on the Pacific coast, British Columbia. Their natural trade is with the United States rather than with each other. If you were to compare them to the fingers of one hand, the tie is naturally with the palm rather than with each other. That palm in this case is the United States.

The prosperity of the maritime provinces rests upon their being able to trade freely with New England and the eastern section of our country. In like manner the prosperity of Quebec and Montreal depends upon their free access to the markets of our neighboring States. So with Manitoba and British Columbia. They are merely joined together by this political road and by no natural tie, as they would be if they lay along the same line of longitude but different lines of latitude, instead of lying along the same lines of latitude.

If the union between Canada and the United States that was made in 1763 by Chatham and Wolfe had not been broken up by the American Revolution, to-day it is altogether probable that instead of 5,000,000 people Canada would have 20,000,000 people, and if she could have, without obstruction, free access to our markets for her natural products, especially wool, while she is free to impose duties against us for manufactured goods, she would grow in like manner.

But for the growth that was made during the pendency of the reciprocity treaty of 1854 she would not have anything like the population she has to-day. Under the influence of the adverse tariffs, particularly those of the McKinley act, one-third of the people born in Canada are to-day residents and possibly citizens of the United States. She is but a way station for immigrants, that are brought to her shores at great expense and after great advertising, for their ultimate destination in America.

Her entire prosperity, so far as it depends upon the American market, is of absolutely uncertain foundation just so long as she remains a distinct country.

Whatever may have been their dreams about reciprocal trade, they were rudely broken up by the McKinley tariff; and whatever expectation they may have of prosperity from the pending bill, they may rest equally assured that at the end of four years, whatever business may be started during that time is liable to be cut up by the roots by another President and another Congress who will hold sway here at that time.

The Canadian Pacific Road, as I have already said, rests for its trade upon our sufferance, upon a merely permissive statute and a Treasury regulation. I am not unaware of the strength of the position it holds by reason of the certain or uncertain transportation advantages in cheaper freights that it gives to the distinct sections of our country on the northern border. I am aware that parts of New England have made use of the Canadian Pacific Road to obviate what they consider to be the unfair results to them of the antipooling and the long and short haul clauses of the interstate commerce act.

Their patriotism may not be enough for so severe a test, but it is possible that the clause of the interstate commerce act forbidding pooling may either be repealed or greatly modified, and the long and short haul clause as it applies to them may be modified, and thus they can have a relief from what they consider the hardships of that act without feeling compelled unpatriotically to build up a foreign corporation at the cost of the permanent and paramount interests of their own country; and the same may be said of every community and every city along the whole northern border from one ocean to the other.

One or two other problems in like manner are outstanding and not to be solved by any scheme of policy found in the pending bill. We need not have had any trouble about the Alaskan seals. We need not have had any arbitration over the seals. You needed only to have suggested that the transportation in bond and under seal of goods through Canada between American ports would be suspended to have put an end to every proposition of the Canadians to poach upon our seals. That would have been a swift and a short remedy, and a complete one. If Canada and British Columbia had been a part of the American Union we would have had no seal question.

There was no marauding upon the seals from American ports. It was only from Canadian ports; and it is to be borne in mind that the British Government did not want to engage in it. Lord Salisbury, an English nobleman—gentleman, perforce—was compelled to become the agent of the Canadian poachers to trench upon our right to the seals purchased from Russia, belonging properly to the owners of the Pribyloff Islands, if not by any law hitherto laid down, by a law that ought to be laid down under the circumstances of the peculiar case, as law always is a growth in the application of sound principles to new facts. Thus we have the most unsatisfactory condition of this seal question left to us as a consequence of our present relations with Canada.

But there is another question, Mr. President, of far greater importance. There is no doubt about the attitude or the policy of the people of the United States on Chinese immigration. There ought to be none in the Democratic party. We believe in their exclusion. Certainly we have had trouble enough from race questions in this country. We do not want to introduce another. I am one of those who would give the largest measure of justice to the negro, but no one realizes more than he does the hardship that is being imposed upon the people by his presence under the circumstances as a part of the American Republic.

We do not want to bring the Chinese here, we all say, and yet to-day any Chinaman can come into British Columbia by the payment of a license of $50, and then walk across the border, and you can not detect it or prevent it. So while we are stopping up all other gaps, this great wide one is left open, and that too while this fast line of steamers is put on between Vancouver and Chinese ports, that will greatly facilitate all means of transportation, while the owners of these ships will have all the inducements to make money by the transportation of the Chinese.

But, Mr. President, the American people have a large interest in this question themselves, and from our standpoint I took occasion a few days ago, in the course of this debate, to call attention to the fact that we have arrived at the end of our last available land for homesteading. Possibly there may be a few acres added from the Indian reservations. The rush for the Cherokee Strip a year ago furnished an object lesson. For the first time since John Smith landed at Jamestown, or the Pilgrims at Plymouth Rock, there is no longer a home for any American in need or want to be had for the asking and the taking. That idea has been almost like what metaphysicians tell us of time and space, that they are conditions of thought. One never thought of America but that there was a suggestion of a farm for everyone.

Uncle Sam is rich enough to buy us all a farm.

Very little attention has been called to this fact, and yet the future historian will speak of it as one of the epochs of America and its people, ranking in importance with the discovery of the continent by Columbus, with the landing at Jamestown and at Plymouth Rock, with the Declaration of Independence and the destruction of slavery. The army of the unemployed can no longer go out upon the prairie and find a home and a competence for the breaking of the soil. They can no longer go into the forest and find a competence by the clearing up of land. It is all in private ownership and has to be paid for, even though much of it is yet practically unocupied.

The unemployed to-day are not going to the prairie. They are joining the army of the unemployed, or Coxey's army. North of us in Canada there is an illimitable expanse of unoccupied lands, and the isothermal lines formed by the chinook winds coming across the low passes of the Rocky Mountains to the north make the land habitable and arable and profitable to occupy away up on the Peace River of the North.

To-day the Senate is going to vote to break down the barrier between the American people and that land and turn the tide of emigration north. Mr. President, shall they go there under the American flag or go there under Her Majesty's flag? That is an issue of great moment to this continent and to all who live on it now or hereafter.

So far our policy has kept our people within our own limits. Now, there is proposed one which will expatriate our people and send them as emigrants upon a foreign soil. I say to our Southern brethren, who held the other day a convention at Augusta to advance immigration to the South, that their talk is idle. They can not compass it by the policy of this bill. Not South will this hungry people go to buy land or to compete with the negro. You are going to send them north to build up a new empire under an alien flag.

Mr. President, to the Senate, to the country, to the continent and its people there is presented the most momentous question of the day. Compared with it, your talk about parties and prosperity and power, or wealth or taxation or welfare, is idle and relatively unimportant. It is the great question of peace or of war. We have had it before. This is not the first time this people have had that issue presented to them; and when they were confronted with it they gave no uncertain answer or sound.

No one recognizes more than I do the inexorable influence that drove the South into rebellion. But, Mr. President, if the South did not fight to preserve slavery, the North did not fight to destroy it. If the South fought for the right of secession, the North was nerved to the expenditure of its last dollar and the last drop of its blood because it intended that there never should be on this continent, if it could help it, two governments.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him what answer he gave when that issue of war was presented a good many years ago?

Mr. HIGGINS. I gave the same answer that I give now.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not quite understand what answer the Senator gives now.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Tennessee repeat this question?

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Delaware was suggesting that there was an issue of war between sections. He has departed from the wool schedule of the tariff bill and is discussing, I understand, the issues of 1861, and I was a little curious to know what he did then.

Mr. HIGGINS. I did not have to go to Mexico, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRIS. There were quite a good many Northern men who shouldered their muskets and went into the Army. What did the Senator do?

Mr. HIGGINS. I shouldered mine for a very little while.

Mr. HARRIS. I expect it was a very little while; and I hope he will shoulder it for a shorter time in the Senate hereafter in respect to such questions.

Mr. HIGGINS. That answer may be and it may not be worthy of the Senator from Tennessee. In presenting a serious question absolutely germane to this bill and brought up by its issue, I have given this example, in which every American citizen has the deepest interest on whatever side he may have been in the conflict of arms of a quarter of a century and more ago. I have presented it as an example, showing that the ultimate issue and outcome of that conflict was that we should not have two flags and two countries in what was to be the United States. What I say now is worthy of the attention even of the Senator from Tennessee. I say we should not adopt a policy that would create on the North the same conflict that we had made upon the South, and I said it in terms without any reflection whatever upon the causes that led to the late civil war.

Now, Mr. President, because of the 5,000,000 people on the North we have the least possible concern. It is not a power that threatens us in the least. Coupled with the military and naval power of Great Britain, it becomes a matter of much more concern, and yet we take it easily. But it will be a matter of vital difference when Canada contains a population of 20,000,000 or of 50,000,000. Then, Mr. President, we shall again have the question presented of peace or war. As I have already pointed out, the existing foreign military establishment of forts and naval armament is a threat and menace upon our coasts. When that comes, whatever the time or period may be, there will be a trial of strength.

Mr. President, the matter would be very different if Canada were independent of Great Britain, but as a dependency of Great Britain she becomes a part of the European system, a system the character of which is best designated by the term used as "the balance of power." She is subject to all the vicissitudes of war and peace to which Great Britain herself is subject, growing out of European and Asiatic complications. We have no cause of war that is not distinctively American, but Canada is involved in all causes of war which are European or Asiatic.

The difference between Russia and England in India may create war for Canada. The differences between France and England in Africa may create war for Canada. She is liable to become involved at any time, and whenever she does the interests of nations determine their course and their policy, just as in the war of 1812 or in the Napoleonic wars we were finally involved in conflict with Canada. So in the future we are likely to be. To-day, growing out of Asiatic and European complications, England is the silent partner of the Triple Alliance or the Dreibund made up of Germany, Austria, and Italy. Against them stands the tacit alliance of Russia and France.

I can conceive that in the event of the conflagration of war breaking out upon the European continent we should find that our interests were identical or at least lay alongside of those of Russia and France. It would not be so if England were to withdraw from this continent. With that withdrawal would end as far as it would be possible the schism of the English-speaking race which began more than a century ago. Then the forces of a common language, a common law, a common literature, and a common religion would draw us and England together with all their peculiar and appropriate force. To-day we are divorced because she insists upon holding on to her possession upon this continent, invidious and essentially hostile towards us.

For that we have great authority. The Articles of Confederation included a clause that at any time Canada could become a member. Our army in the Revolutionary war was called the Continental Army, because we proposed to include the entire continent. When we came to the peace of 1783 it was Franklin who constantly insisted with the British negotiators that we should have Canada, because thereby only could we have peace. Our experience in 1812 is a pregnant confirmation of his prescience and his wisdom and the truth of his declaration, although peace has prevailed from that time until now.

Mr. President, the McKinley act, which places practically prohibitive duties upon the natural products of Canada, was a long step in the true solution of this question. Even before it was enacted great restlessness was being manifested in Canada because of their need of access to our markets free from any tariff restraint.

Whatever may be the course that is taken upon this bill, it need not be expected that the American people will permit its enactment to stand as a settlement. You may succeed in passing the pending bill and strike this blow at the welfare and future peace of the English-speaking race upon the American continent, but that race is too strong, too sagacious, too sensible to permit this temporary obstruction to stem the tide of its imperial destiny. The pending bill is but the ephemeral expression of forces essentially secondary. The primary and everlasting forces will speedily reassert themselves. Four years hence will see a President and Congress here that will tear the bill to tatters and reënact laws and policies that are for the lasting welfare of all the people of this continent.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] on Monday last, after the cotton schedules in the pending bill had been passed over without debate, criticised the absence from the Chamber of several New England Senators, including those from New Hampshire. My colleague was out of the city for one day, and I had been called to another part of the Capitol for a short time. However, I did not intend to speak in connection with the cotton schedules, but to submit some observations, as I now propose to do, concerning both cotton and wool and the manufactures of cotton and wool, in connection with the woolen schedules now under debate.

I have no doubt that the subdivisions of the schedules fixing duties on the manufactures of cotton are judiciously made in form. I have little doubt that the duties on the lower grades of cotton goods made at the South are high enough, and I hope that the duties are sufficiently protective upon the higher grades of cotton goods made at the North, although I fear they are not. If the bill becomes a law time will tell whether or not the manufacture of the highest grades of cotton goods can survive the reductions of duties made by the pending bill. I shall wait the result hopefully, but with many apprehensions. Any reduction in existing rates is unnecessary and uncalled for by any sound public consideration.

There are many reasons of wise public policy for the protection and development of the manufacture of cotton cloths in the Southern States. The South needs diversified industries to promote that growth which her natural resources entitle her to attain. The condition of that section at the close of the war was indeed lamentable. All values had been destroyed, and nearly all the property itself had been destroyed. The agricultural lands, indeed, necessarily remained, but they were unfenced, unfertilized, uncultivated, and of little or no money value. Few buildings were in existence, except dwelling houses, and those were dilapidated. Horses and cattle were scarce; and tangible personal property had almost disappeared.

The railroads were nearly worthless, with bridges gone, rails worn out, and rolling stock shabby and insufficient. Five millions of slaves, who had been rated and valued as property, had become free. Whatever value there may have been in these slaves—and it was nominally a vast amount—had been lost by their owners. The banks and corporations had become insolvent. The value of all the credits or choses in action which survived the war was insignificant. The paper money of the whole South was good for nothing, and of gold and silver they had none. Surely never was a brave race, after a devastating and unsuccessful war which brought myriads of the strongest and most stalwart men to bloody death and forced grief and despondency into every household, left in a more pitiable condition than were the people of the South at the close of the war of the rebellion in 1865.

But the recuperation of the Southern States during the twenty-nine years since they found themselves in such sorrowful case has, on the whole, been rapid. The growth of cotton and its sale at the North and in Europe has brought much money to that section. The former slaves have labored intelligently and with assiduity, and have accumulated property for themselves and their employers. In addition to prosperous agriculture the vast mineral resources are being developed. Above all, manufacturing, which before 1861 was inconsiderable, has become an industry of vast importance. The "New South," so graphically described by the accomplished scholar and veteran editor, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], has become a hopeful reality. Newer, higher, and better prosperity has come to the land once depressed by the existence of slavery and all the concomitant evils which surround it and follow in its course.

In this new South the development of the coal and iron industries is perhaps the most marvelous. But the erection of cotton mills, giving profitable manufactures of cotton, is a striking evidence of the change which the new order of things has brought to the Southern country. During a recent trip to Asheville, N. C., I passed through one section of that State which was fairly filled with cotton mills all in busy motion. The wonderful growth of cotton manufactures in the Southern States, especially in Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina, will be made apparent by certain census statistics, which I now exhibit to the Senate.

Here is a table relating mainly to cotton industries in the United States. That portion covering solely the cotton industry is compiled from the Eleventh Census, Bulletin No. 242. After the total for the United States, figures are given for New England, the Middle States, which are New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland, and for the Southern States—Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Texas. In the Western States table, which includes all the rest, Ohio, Indiana Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Utah, Washington, Oregon, and California are given separately in the bulletin, but the others are consolidated. Subtractions are made to obtain the amounts of increase in the decade. The amount of yearly wages is obtained by dividing the total amount paid by the number of operatives; the cost of cotton by dividing the total cost by the number of pounds purchased, and the per capita product by dividing the total product by the number of operatives.

INCREASE OF CAPITAL IN COTTON MANUFACTURING.

Examine some of the results shown by the foregoing table. We had in 1880, in round numbers in the United States, $208,000,000 invested in the manufacture of cotton. This, in 1890, had increased to $354,000,000, the percentage of increase being 70. New England, which had much the largest part of the capital, only increased 55 per cent. The Middle States, which stood next, increased over $22,000,000, showing nearly $52,000,000 of investment, and 66 per cent increase. The Western States advanced 71 per cent. But the Southern States advanced 209 per cent—that is, more than tripled their capital, passing the Middle States in the race, and having $53,827,303 invested in this industry against $17,377,897 in 1880. New Hampshire increased its capital only 34 per cent, while Georgia increased hers 179, North Carolina 277, and South Carolina 301.

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF COTTON OPERATIVES.

Look next at the number of operatives. In the whole country the increase was 26 per cent, from 174,000 to 221,000. In New England the increase was 16.95 per cent; in the Middle States, 14.02 per cent; in the Western States, 41.83, and in the Southern States, 122 per cent. In New Hampshire it was 18.20; in Georgia, 66.4; in North Carolina, 161.50, and in South Carolina, 299 per cent.

INCREASE IN WAGES PAID IN COTTON INDUSTRIES.

The total amount of wages paid in the country increased from $42,000,000 to $69,000,000, being 65.35 per cent. In New England the increase was 55.14; in the Middle States, 62.75; in the Western States, 97.81, and in the Southern States, 184.20 per cent. In New Hampshire the increase was 50 per cent; in Georgia, 107; in North Carolina, 277, and in South Carolina, 332 per cent.

INCREASE IN POUNDS OF COTTON USED.

The number of pounds of cotton used in all the works of the country increased 49 per cent, from 750,000,000 pounds to 1,117,900,000 pounds. In New England the increase was 32 per cent; in the Middle States, 17.30; in the Western States, 60.25, and in the Southern States, 197.5 per cent. In New Hampshire the increase was 40.50; in Georgia, 104.8; in North Carolina, 350, and in South Carolina, 410 per cent.

INCREASE IN PRICE PAID FOR COTTON.

The sum paid for this cotton in 1880 was $86,945,725, and the price was 11.58 cents per pound. The amount paid in 1890 was $117,392,576, an increase of $30,446,851, and the price was 10.50 cents per pound, a little more than 1 cent fall. Of these vast sums New England paid in 1880, 72 per cent, and in 1890, 65 per cent. Cotton cost New England a cent per pound more than it did the Southern manufacturers.

INCREASE IN VALUE OF MATERIAL USED.

It required $102,000,000 in 1880 and $154,000,000 in 1890 to buy all the material required for use in the cotton factories of the country, and the rates of increase in the various sections and States were very similar to those already given.

INCREASE IN TOTAL PRODUCT OF COTTON MANUFACTORIES.

The value of the total product was in 1880 $192,000,000, increased to $268,000,000 in 1890. The value of the product per capita was $1,100 in 1880, and $1,209.39 in 1890, an increased value of output for every worker in the land of $109.38. The average product per capita in the South in 1890 was $1,116.92 and in New England $1,217.82, showing either the production in New England of a greater quantity, per capita, or of a better article. But the Southern States wonderfully improved the value of their per capita output in the decade under consideration, it being only $975.85 in 1880 while it was $1,116.92 in 1890, an increase of $141.07.

INCREASE IN WAGES PAID IN COTTON FACTORIES.

But by far the most important information revealed in this table is the result on wages. Much has been said and many wild declarations made on this question, but here are facts from the official records of the country which doubtless can not be controverted. During these ten years of protection there has been an enormous advance in the wages paid to the cotton operatives. The totals have been already stated, and to show the average per capita rates and to explain them more fully and plainly they will be stated in a different form:

	Average yearly per capita.		Increase.
	1880.	1890.
United States	$240.70	$313.60	$72.90
New England	253.00	335.59	82.59
Middle States	233.13	332.79	99.66
Southern States	164.20	210.32	46.12
Western States	213.61	298.00	84.39
New Hampshire	259.59	329.14	69.55
Georgia	179.03	224.70	45.67
North Carolina	131.50	188.30	56.80
South Carolina	185.55	201.00	15.40

This puts the whole subject of wages plainly before the eye. There was an average increase of wages to the cotton workers of the country from 1880 to 1890 of $72.90. They earned that much more money. The New England cotton workers had a larger increase. They earned $82.59 more in 1890 than they did in 1880; and looking up and down that column it will be seen that the New England operatives received more wages both in 1880 and in 1890 than the average, and were paid higher rates than in any other section. In 1880 the New England operative received $253, which was $89 more than the Southern, $40 more than the Western, and $20 more than was paid in the Middle States.

In 1890 the New England operative received $335, which was $125 more than the Southern, $34 more than the Western, and $3 more than the operative of the Middle States. This shows that while the Southern States increased their capital, the number of their operatives, the amount of material used, and the value of their product, largely more than any of the other sections the actual rate and the per capita rate of their wages was increased much less.

Taking the four States shown separately in the table, New Hampshire increased its average wages $69.55, while Georgia showed only $45.67, North Carolina $56.80, and South Carolina $15.45, and in 1880 South Carolina paid higher wages than any of the other Southern States and North Carolina lower wages. But while the wages of these Southern States are lower than those of any other section, the advances made are wonderful and creditable. Georgia and South Carolina paid out in 1890 $5,660,000 in wages to cotton workers instead of $1,950,000 as in 1880, this $3,710,000 increase being expended by those who received it in the very place where it was earned, instead of being sent abroad—that is, to New or Old England—to purchase cotton or other clothing.

INCREASE IN THE TOTAL MANUFACTURES OF ALL KINDS IN THE UNITED STATES.

As there is included in the first table presented a statement of the total manufactures for the United States and for the State of New Hampshire, showing the increase in the ten years from 1880 to 1890, it is proper something should be said in explanation. There never has been so remarkable a showing made. The increase from 1870 to 1880 in the capital invested was from $2,118,208,769 to $2,780,766,895, but little over 31 per cent, whilst in the last decade it was 120.76 per cent. The total amount of wages paid to officers, employés, and operatives increased from $775,584,343 in 1870 to $947,953,795 in 1880, an increase of 22.2 per cent, while in the years from 1880 to 1890 the increase was greater than the amount of wages paid in 1880, and amounted to 131 per cent. Wages increased on the average over $130 to each person employed.

The value of the products increased from $4,232,325,442 in 1870 to the value of $5,349,191,458 in 1880, or 26 per cent, and the articles manufactured were cheaper, taking the average, than they were in 1870. But the increase from 1880 to 1890 has been $3,705,243,899, equivalent to over 69 per cent; and again it can be said that every article of home manufacture is cheaper than it was in 1880.

This is the vindication of protection. In twenty years, under a Republican protective tariff, the value of the manufactured products of the country has increased from $4,232,325,442 to $9,054,435,337, more than double, and the products have grown cheaper all the time.

NEW HAMPSHIRE'S GROWTH IN MANUFACTURES.

New Hampshire can point proudly to its place in the ranks of the manufacturing States. With but one-half of 1 per cent of the population, it has more than 1 per cent of the capital in all manufactures, and produces nearly 1 per cent of the total values of all articles manufactured in the United States. It is the sixth State in the list in the production of woolen manufactures, and the third in cotton manufactures, and its people know that they owe their prosperity to the system of protection. They stand by that policy and want the people of every other State to do so, because it will bring prosperity to them.

The population of the State in 1890 was 376,530, of whom, it appears by the table submitted, 63,361 were engaged in manufacturing industries. The assessed valuation of the State for the year 1893 was—

Inventory of real estate and of personal property as assessed for taxation	$196,117,060
Savings bank deposits	77,024,282
Insurance capital	1,675,000
Total	274,816,342

According to the 1890 census estimates of wealth, New Hampshire had $325,128,740, or $863 per capita of her people, while it appears by the table submitted that the capital invested in the State in manufactures was in 1890 the sum of $79,375,360, and the value of the product for the year was $85,770,549.

THE GROWTH OF MANCHESTER, N. H.

The largest manufacturing city of my own State is Manchester, which had, in 1890, 44,126 inhabitants. Of these, 15,351, a little more than one-third of the whole number, were engaged in remunerative employment. They received yearly an average of $387.75 in wages, and turned out products to the value of $20,187,295, a per capita of $1,315.

Of these workers, 9,617 are engaged in cotton manufactures of various kinds, in which business there is invested $13,845,304. The operatives receive $3,417,235 wages, an average of $355.33, and produce cottons to the value of $10,957,219, the per capita product being $1,139.36. Taking the total amount of wages paid, the cost of material, $6,465,886, and the miscellaneous expenses, $535,946, a total of $10,419,067 is paid out by factories to secure goods to the value of $10,957,219, leaving $538,149 profit, which is not quite 4 per cent, instead of the vast sums we hear so much about as the profits of the cotton manufacturers.

THE PROSPERITY OF AUGUSTA, GA.

There is another city of which I have the statistics. It has a number of cotton factories, with a capital invested of $5,337,362. It has 2,982 workers, who receive $709,525 in wages, an average of $237.93. The value of the cotton products of this city is $3,979,042; the value of the product of each operative is $1,334.34. See the contrast between the two cities. In Manchester, N. H., the operatives are paid an average of $353.33 for producing goods to the value of $1,139.36; in this other city the operatives are paid $237.93 for producing goods to the value of $1,334.34. Yet the New England manufacturers are denounced for oppressing their workmen—for introducing cheap Canadian labor. The junior Senator from Georgia can verify these figures, for they are taken from page 722, part 2, of the Compendium of the Census, and apply to the city of Augusta, in his own State.

In this connection I will read a short extract from the Washington Post of June 11, 1894, credited to the Atlanta Constitution. It is as follows:

All through the dull seasons of the present financial depression the Southern cotton mills have been running on full time and yielding bigger dividends than those of their Northern competitors. The D. A. Tompkins Company's mill at Charlotte, which was mentioned as a notable example in these columns a few days ago, is so crowded with orders for its fine numbers that it has to run night and day. The cotton mill is destined to be the most powerful factor of Southern prosperity in future. When we manufacture our leading staple and sell the product of our mills to home and foreign markets, this will be the richest region on the globe.

The Senators who represent States in which these prosperous manufactories are situated should remember that there are other sections where the mills are silent, the workmen idle, their families destitute, and gloom and sadness prevail.

Mr. HOAR. Is the labor employed in the Georgia cotton mills white or colored?

Mr. CHANDLER. I am not informed as to that. My own impression is that in Georgia both white and colored labor are employed in the cotton mills. Will the Senator from Georgia kindly tell us?

Mr. WALSH. I will state for the information of the Senator from New Hampshire that all the employés in the cotton mills of the South are white.

Mr. CHANDLER. So far as the operatives engaged in the direct work of manufacturing the fabric are concerned?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

AMERICAN WAGES AND FOREIGN WAGES IN COTTON MILLS.

Mr. CHANDLER. The difference in the cost of labor in Europe and America ought certainly to be taken into consideration in determining the rate of duty upon any article we manufacture in this country. In my remarks about the cities of Manchester, N. H., and Augusta, Ga., an easy method of obtaining the labor cost in the cotton goods manufactured in these two cities was given. In Manchester $353.33 worth of labor produced $1,139.36 worth of material; in Augusta, $237.93 of labor produced finished goods to the value of $1,334.34. The percentage of labor cost in Manchester was 31 per cent; in Augusta it was 17.83 per cent.

Comparison of the daily wages of various classes of operatives in the cotton mills of the Northern and Southern districts of the United States, on the continent of Europe, and the island of Great Britain has been made under the direction of the Hon. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, and the result is to be found in the first volume of his Seventh Annual Report, pages 614 to 712, where are given the actual rates paid to 3,232 workers in textile fabrics in the countries and sections named. The Commissioner says (page 5):

In securing the information, experts and agents were sent directly to the producer. The personal method, that of sending well-informed, well-instructed agents to obtain what is wanted, is the only one on the whole that will secure satisfactory results.

Within the Northern district of the United States, in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland, thirty-eight establishments were examined. In the Southern district thirty-two establishments were examined, situated in Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Kentucky, and Tennessee (page 20, Report). The results are given in the following table:

In the figures taken from the Commissioner's report comparisons can be made between thirty-two examples in the northern district of the United States and the same number in Great Britain, as there are only that number given from the latter country. Averaging these thirty-two sets of wages paid, the amount the British worker gets is 75 cents per day, whilst the average to the Northern American is $1.48 per day, a small fraction less than two to one, so that a high duty is necessary to protect American labor from the cheaper labor of Great Britain.

There are thirty-eight examples given from the continent of Europe, and comparing these with the thirty-eight from the northern district, gives 55 cents as the average for the day's labor in Europe, and $1.52 as the Northern American's average. This shows that a much higher duty is required to protect our workers and put them on an equality with the German worker.

CHEAP LABOR IN THE COTTON FACTORIES OF CHINA AND JAPAN.

But it is not alone the low rate of European wages against which our American laborers are entitled to be protected.

I have already in this debate called attention to the remarkable paper of Mr. D. Lubin, Sacramento, Cal., published in the number for May, 1894, of the American Federationist, of New York, the official organ of the American Federation of Labor, where the second point he makes is as follows:

The influence on the American wage rate in the use of labor-saving agricultural devices and machinery by the semi-civilized races of the cheapest field labor in the world.

He says that the removal of protection would bring, in time, "the Chinese wage rate for labor. For, with free trade, there will be nothing to prevent a manufacturer starting shops and mills in China with Chinese laborers at Chinese wage rates, and sending his products to New York or San Francisco."

In the Manufacturer, published in Philadelphia, June 9, 1894, there is contained an article from the Boston Commercial Bulletin, of June 2, 1894, which I reproduce, headed "Foreign Competition on Cottons:"

Last week we presented some figures on the cotton-cloth industry, showing that its present prospects in the United States are far from rosy. Increasing pressure of foreign competition on our markets, foreign and domestic, seems to be the destiny of our cotton manufacturers.

The industry in England, and in fact in Europe, is particularly depressed. At the international meeting of textile workers at Roubaix, France, last November, the official reports told a terrible tale of foreign wages in the cotton industry. The weavers of Manchester, England, according to this report, earn on an average $6.63 for a week of fifty-six hours. The spinners average $8.53, the girls from 18 to 20 years earning $4.30 to $4.50. Piecers earn on an average $4.38 a week, and bobbin boys, $1.76 to $1.95.

In France the daily wages for fourteen hours' work, in Cambresis and the Department de l'Aisne, is 13⅓ cents to 19½ cents for weavers.

The representatives of a large German factory employing 1,500 hands and 90,000 spindles reported the average earnings of girls and women at $1.45 for a week of sixty-six hours.

Even these meager wages are, however, too high. The capitalists of England conceived the idea that operatives who required no clothing worth mentioning, and no food but oil and rice, could work more cheaply even than these unhappy toilers. So they established large factories at Bombay for the manufacture of the coarser cotton yarns.

The experiment was successful, and Manchester is suffering from the competition of Bombay, not only in India but also in China.

More recently Japan has come to the front, and is taking the China trade away not only from Manchester, but from Bombay. Last year there were 360,000 spindles in operation in Japan, and by the end of this year 750,000 will be turning.

The factories in Japan are at Osaka. They have the advantages of cheap coal, cheap skilled as well as unskilled labor, and a fixed rate of exchange, both Japan and India being on a silver basis. The prices on Japanese cotton yarns at Shanghai and Hongkong are cut sharply below both Manchester and Bombay rates.

The first spinning mill was erected in that country in 1865, and no other spinning mill was built until 1880, when three more were erected, and by 1886 eleven more were in operation.

By 1890, twenty-three were added to those already existing, and since 1890 the increase has been very great, not only in the number of establishments, but in the capacity of those already existing.

The average wages are 16.2 cents per day for male operatives and 8 cents per day for females, and the net earnings of the mills have been at the rate of about $4.25 per spindle.

The mills have all introduced electric plants and run two shifts of eleven hours each. The imports of raw cotton run from 4,400,000 pounds in 1886 to 104,900,000 pounds a year now.

In 1892 the mills began to export yarn to China, and it is estimated that the cost of production is 18 per cent less than the East Indian mills. As yet none of the mills have taken to weaving yarns, all the yarn now manufactured being woven on handlooms, either in China or Japan.

In addition to the bitter competition from ill-paid European labor, the United States has to face a new competitor in Asiatic labor.

Already Japanese refineries are displacing American refined camphor in our own market. The new cloud on the textile horizon may be small, but the Mikado's country is doubling its machinery yearly, and already has nearly as many spindles as the State of Maine.

Commenting on the foregoing the Manufacturer speaks as follows:

The workman in the textile mills of India earns about 15 cents a day, and he toils from twelve to fourteen hours a day including Sundays. In Japan male operatives in the cotton mills earn about 16 cents a day, and the female operatives about 8 cents. The manufacture of cotton fabrics under these conditions has just begun. It is capable of practically indefinite extension in both Japan and India. There are no finer artisans in the world than these people who earn in a week a sum of money upon which an American would starve to death if he earned it every day. What is to become of the manufactures of England, under free trade, if the industries of these countries shall acquire vast dimensions? What chance will American mills have of turning a spindle twenty years hence, if our tariff barriers are to be thrown down so that the products of this cheap Asiatic labor can be projected into our market? Japan is about to supply what may be called appalling demonstration of the folly of the free-trade theory that the highest priced labor is always the cheapest and need fear no competition. The ominous signs of industrial activity in the East are beginning to make some of the British free traders tremble. The Textile Mercury declares that Richard Cobden never dreamed of such a situation; and it warns British manufacturers that "the thing is advancing like a rising tide, and is coming to the dangerous and stifling point." The journal in question demands that something be done to stay it.

With all the conditions above depicted it is not wonderful that the framers of the present bill, the Senators from Missouri and Arkansas, have undertaken to make a cotton schedule that will protect the product of the rapidly increasing cotton factories of the Southern States of this Union. It is to be hoped that they have also equally protected the cotton mills of New England, including those of New Hampshire, which produce cotton goods of a finer texture and of more expensive finish than those made in the Southern factories.

CHEAP EGYPTIAN COTTON AND COTTON YARNS.

Mr. President, it is not only necessary to have duties for the protection of cotton manufactures in this country, but I call the attention of Senators from the Southern States to the fact that the importation of cotton and cotton yarns raised and spun by the cheap labor of Egypt will soon make it necessary to put a duty upon raw cotton, and certainly will soon require increased duties upon cotton yarns. The earliest tariff bill passed by Congress on July 4, 1789, for "the encouragement and protection of manufactures," provided a duty of 3 cents per pound on cotton. Soon will there be a demand for a renewal of the duty and even the raw material which cotton is, will not be allowed to come free to our manufacturers of cotton.

The imports of raw cotton from 1871 to 1890 increased from 1,196,840 pounds to 8,407,160 pounds. I herewith give a table showing the importation of cotton for the last four years:

Imports of cotton.

	Pounds.	Value.	Value per pound.
			Cents.
1890	8,407,160	$1,393,070	16.5
1891	20,880,920	2,833,528	13.6
1892	28,458,566	3,311,950	11.6
1893	43,330,286	4,686,439	10.8

Of the 43,000,000 pounds imported in 1893, the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW] says 28,000,000 came from Egypt. This is a fine cotton, superior to the South Carolina sea-island cotton.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator from New Hampshire say the cotton referred to is superior to South Carolina cotton?

Mr. CHANDLER. It is superior to the South Carolina sea-island cotton. This last named cotton has been allowed to degenerate in recent years and can not hold its own against the fine Egyptian cotton which is brought here raw or as fine cotton yarns, and used for making the great variety of cotton underwear now so abundant in this country. It is also mixed with silks in the manufacture of some goods.

South Carolina will find it necessary to secure a duty on this Egyptian cotton and cotton yarns made therefrom, and also to endeavor by improved methods and greater care in cultivation to bring her sea-island cotton back to the standard it occupied before the war. The transcaspian provinces of Russia are being developed as a cotton-growing region, and in 1892 produced 163,000,000 pounds.

I submit a table showing the importations for the last four years of fine cotton yarns:

WOOL AND WOOLEN MANUFACTURES.

Trusting that the facts about the cotton industries which I have thus submitted to the Senate may not be without interest, I proceed now to consider somewhat in like manner the condition of the woolen manufactures of the United States. PERCENTAGES OF CAPITAL, WAGES, AND OUTPUT.

Of the total woolen manufactures of the country, New England had of the capital invested 50.74 per cent in 1880 and 50.30 per cent in 1890. The Middle, Western, and Southern States in 1890 had, respectively, increased 82.65, 90.76, and 185 per cent. The wages, as in the cotton industry, were larger per capita in the New England than in any of the other States, both in 1880 and in 1890, being $111 more in New England in 1890 than in the Southern States, $95 more than in the Western, and $22 more than in the Middle States. The average annual output of the New England operative was nearly $200 above the average in 1880 and $138 in 1890.

It is a noticeable fact that there was an average decrease in the cost of wool of 6.55 cents per pound, but this decline doubtless resulted from the imports of cheap carpet wools, which enter into the general average.

INCREASED CAPITAL AND WAGES, WITH LOWER PRICES TO CONSUMERS.

The manufacture of woolens in this country is an enormous one, and under the fostering influence of a protective tariff has been rapidly developed. The table presented shows an increase in capital from $159,000,000 to $296,000,000, equal to 86.41 per cent. It shows that the operatives increased from 161,000 to 219,000, and the total wages paid from $47,000,000 to $76,000,000, whilst the average per capita wages increased from $293.25 to $350. The value of material increased from $164,000,000 to $202,000,000, and the value of the products from $267,000,000 to $337,000,000. The value of the product for each operative decreased from $1,654.73 to $1,541.39, and this is the most significant item in the table.

It has been stated here and elsewhere, so often as to be monotonous, that the high duties collected on woolen imports increased the cost to the consumer. No one will pretend to say that the operative of 1890 did not produce a larger quantity of the same quality of goods than he produced in 1880. In fact, everyone knows that with improved machinery and facilities the average quantity and quality of the goods produced, to the operative, was largely increased. What, then, becomes of the statement that the cost of woolens is increased to the consumer by the tariff?

The operative in 1880 produced a certain quantity of woolen goods of the value of $1,654.73, at which price they were placed on the market. The operative of 1890 produced an equal or greater quantity of woolen goods which were put upon the market for $1,541.39, a saving of $112.34 to the consumers of woolen goods in the United States upon the labor of every operative engaged in producing woolen goods; and as there are 219,132 operatives engaged in the woolen industry, this shows an actual saving in cost to the consumers of over $24,000,000 as against prices paid in 1880. With this plain and indisputable fact, it is time to cease repeating the statement that the duty on woolen goods will always be a tax upon the consumer.

Is it not plain to the dullest comprehension that if the operative engaged in producing woolen goods in 1880 and in 1890 produced a like quantity in each year, and that if the same quantity produced in 1890 sold for $113.34 less than a like quantity produced in 1880, the consumer purchased his goods that much cheaper? The figures given have been carefully collated from the official reports, and that is what they prove.

Mr. PALMER. At this point I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire how he accounts for the falling off in the price. How does the Senator explain it?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think it can be explained in various ways, but beyond all question the fall in the price of the materials used by the factories in 1890, as against the cost of the materials used in 1880, contributes largely to the result. It must be that, assuming that the operatives have grown more skillful, if anything, because here is the larger product to each operative than there was in 1880.

CAPITAL NOT EXCESSIVELY REMUNERATED.

It is the custom of the Southern tariff reformers to complain much of the enormous profits of the manufacturers of the North, and to repeat President Cleveland's foolish fallacy that every tariff duty increases the cost not only of the imported article, but also by a like amount the cost of every such article produced at home. One of the latest misrepresentations of this kind applied to woolen goods is admirably exposed in the following letter:

LACONIA, N. H., June 5, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: In following the tariff debate I run on to many very curious statements, which are so utterly at variance with the facts that it is simply amazing to try to account for them.

On page 6771, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Senator JONES of Arkansas is reported to have said, "Then the tax levied on the domestic consumption of woolen goods has amounted to about $171,000,000; the tax on the foreign goods to about $36,000,000, making a total tax on woolen goods of about $207,000,000. Of this vast sum only $36,000,000 goes into the Treasury, while $171,000,000 goes to the manufacturers."

In the Eleventh Census of the United States, page 4, Table 1, comparative statement of combined textile industries in the United States, is found the following statement:

Wool manufactures, 1890.

Number of establishments	2,489
Capital	$296,494,481
Employés	219,132
Wages	$76,660,742
Cost of materials used	$203,095,572
Value of product	$337,768,524

Now, the total amount of wages and cost of materials used is $279,756,314, and the difference between this and the value of the product is $58,012,210, which would be the gross profit.

How can the wool manufacturers of the United States have received $171,000,000 if their gross profit was but $58,012,210, or only one-third of $171,000,000? They did not receive $171,000,000, and Senator JONES stated what was not in any sense true.

The $58,112,210 gross profit is too large, because in the total product of the mills there is a duplication of products in the total.

On page 47 of same census report, this duplication is shown to have amounted to over $30,000,000, which reduces the amount of gross profit to less than $30,000,000, and renders the statement of Senator JONES as absurd as it is untrue.

If men like Senator JONES know no better than this, if such statements are made with gravity in the Senate, if Democrats thought worthy to represent States in this highest branch of our legislative body make in good faith such erroneous statements, it is indeed no wonder that we have such a bill under debate as you now are acting upon, and it will be a great mercy if the textile industries of our country have anything left after these men get done with them.

It does seem to an outsider as if these men in charge of the tariff bill should exercise a little common sense and not make any such statements as Senator JONES did, for if he had taken the trouble to look at the total capital in the woolen industry, $296,494,481, he would have seen that his $171,000,000 meant $57.77 on the capital employed, and the wildest tariff reformer must see the absurdity of that.

It is simply pitiable that a great industry, producing nearly $300,000,000 worth of goods per year should be subjected to legislation at the hands of men who show such ignorance in regard to it, and that it should be practically ruined by the proposed rates of duty while a great trust, like the sugar trust is so tenderly cared for by men who are suspected of enriching themselves by speculating in its shares.

Yours, truly,

JOHN T. BUSIEL.

Hon. WM. E. CHANDLER.

WAGES PAID OPERATIVES IN WOOLEN MILLS.

As in the consideration of the wages in the cotton industry, I call attention to the wages paid to the operatives in wool. The table shows an increase in the country at large, from an average of $293.25 in 1880 to $350 in 1890. This may be considered a fair annual wage, when the fact is taken into consideration that 12 per cent of the workers in woolen mills are children under the age of 15 years and 30 per cent are females. But it is none too much. In fact it is barely enough, and would be more if the present protective system should be continued, for it is a well understood principle "that like produces like," and as the protective system has produced an advance of 20 per cent in the per capita wages of the operatives in the last decade, there is no reason why we should not expect a similar advance should it be continued in the present decade, unless free trade or tariff reform arrests the increase.

Here are given the wages paid in the United States and Europe to thirty-eight classes of wool-workers:

Wages paid in United States and Europe in woolen manufacture as reported by the Commissioner of Labor, Seventh Annual Report.

The average, it will be seen, is $1.60 to the American and 68½ cents to the European. These figures, it must be remembered, are not from a campaign document, prepared to exploit a particular idea. They are from the report of a Government officer of high character; were collected during the first Administration of President Cleveland, and printed shortly after its close. Free trade in woolens would reduce the American worker in wools to the average of the European worker, for the nonsensical idea has been exploded that "because of modern inventions and improved machinery" we produce more to the operative than is produced in Europe. No "modern invention or improved machinery" which adds to the capacity of the operative is in use in America for a year but what its duplicates can be found in European factories.

The free traders and the tariff reformers want us to give up a market for the products of the farm, the field, and the workshop, where the operative in woolen goods gets an average of $1.60 per day, and go to where he gets only 68½ cents, and where we would have to compete with all other nations on equal terms. The protectionists want to build up this home market, where labor is well paid, and let the others severely alone. The whole question of the tariff is a question of wages. Shall they be maintained at the American or reduced to the foreign standards of Europe, or worse yet, to those of China and Japan?

THE GROWTH OF WOOL PRODUCTION UNDER PROTECTION.

Mr. President, it is not my intention in this speech, which is devoted rather to a submission of statistics than to argument, to repeat what I have already said in this debate to prove that the manufacturers of woolen goods are not only willing, but anxious, to have sufficient duties levied upon the importation of raw material of wool to protect the flocks of sheep in this country. They believe in protection to the farmer as well as to the manufacturer, and are disposed to resist any attempt, by depriving the farmers of the country of the duty on wool, to induce them to lend a hand in tearing down the whole system of protection.

The arguments in favor of the protection of wool have been ably stated by other Senators.

The growth of the sheep and wool industries in the United States under protection is displayed in the following tables:

To destroy through the Wilson bill the farmers' flocks of sheep and the whole wool industry by free trade in wool, while trying to protect more or less, either adequately or inadequately every other large industry except that of lumber, deserves the stigma of infamy if anything in connection with an economic question can be called infamous.

In my remarks on the 3d of May I stated the absolute necessity for some protection upon foreign wool on account of the fact that wool can be carried from Sidney, New South Wales, to New York and Boston for less than it can be transported from Oregon, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, and Arizona. The point was based upon a letter from Mr. John T. Busiel, Laconia, N. H., dated March 28, 1894. It is found in the record of the debate of May 3, and strikingly presents the facts, and they are also brought out distinctly in the remarks of the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] made on May 3, and also on June 12, 1894.

"Free wool" is an actual discrimination in favor of foreign wool by reason of the fact that water-borne wool can be placed in New York and Boston cheaper than the wool from the mountain States of this country, or even from Ohio. The facts are indisputable. I will not again enlarge upon them.

THE UNITED STATES NOW PRODUCE TWO-THIRDS OF THE WOOL USED IN CLOTHING OUR PEOPLE.

Mr. Busiel has also taken due occasion to contend that in justly considering the relative use in this country of home and foreign wools, in connection with the question of protecting wool by a duty, there should be excluded from any figures used the third-class or carpet wools, which are not worn as clothing.

This point of Mr. Busiel's is developed in an article written by him in the American Journal of Politics for the month of May, 1894. This journal is devoted to the free discussion of political questions, national, State, and municipal, by writers on all sides.

The article is entitled "On the consumption of wool, foreign and domestic, from a manufacturer's standpoint," and is written in answer to a communication in the February number of the same journal from Mr. Daniel Strange, in which he says, "We produce but little more than half the wool worn in this country."

Mr. Busiel refutes this statement so completely and shows so clearly how the law of 1890 increased the production of wool in this country that I shall read his article and incorporate it in my remarks. I do this all the more readily, as I know Mr. Busiel to be thoroughly competent to discuss the subject.

THE CONSUMPTION OF WOOL, FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC: FROM A MANUFACTURER'S STANDPOINT.

[By John T. Busiel.]

A curious case of the blind leading the blind appears in the article of Daniel Strange in the February number of The American Journal of Politics. He says "We produce but little more than half the wool worn in this country," and, further on, quotes George M. Bond, meaning, I presume, George William Bond.

I wish to present some figures from George William Bond & Co.'s annual wool circular for 1894—which show that Mr. Strange is incorrect in the above-quoted statement. I first give a table showing all foreign wool entered for consumption, the amount of wool used in all the goods imported into the United States, and the total wool product of the United States.

I begin with the year 1886, as the first year in which imports of foreign wool exceeded 100,000,000 pounds, and call this Table I.:

TABLE I.

Year.	Total wool entered for consumption.	Estimated wool used in goods imported.	Total product of United States.
1886	107,910,549	121,609,527	322,305,000
1887	114,404,173	132,705,729	333,500,000
1888	97,231,277	141,474,144	322,300,000
1889	126,181,274	158,044,449	295,779,479
1890	109,902,103	162,526,260	309,474,856
1891	119,390,280	129,606,230	303,401,507
1892	134,622,336	107,377,718	333,018,405
1893	175,636,041	110,963,712	364,152,666

It will be seen from this table that in only one year (1889) is it correct to say we produced but little more than half the wool worn in this country. In all other years, it will be seen, we produced considerably more than one-half.

But this table is constructed from the tariff-reformer's standpoint, and shows that when he refers to "wool worn in this country," he includes third-class or carpet wools. Now third-class wools are not "worn in this country" except on the floors of our houses, and, so far as wearing apparel is concerned, have no more right to appear in the table than importations of jute.

To show what part of the wool "worn in this country" is foreign and what part domestic, I will construct another table, which I will call Table II, and give the total first and second class, or clothing and combing wools in the first column; estimated wool used in goods imported in the second column; the domestic wool product in the third column, and the per cent of imported wool to total amount of foreign and domestic consumed, in the fourth column, for the same years as in Table I.

The first and second class wools are the wools imported to be used in the clothing "worn in this country."

TABLE II.

Year.	1.	2.	3.	4.
				Per cent.
1886	34,194,497	121,609,527	322,305,000	32.6
1887	32,899,696	132,705,729	333,500,000	33.2
1888	22,520,581	141,474,144	322,300,000	33.7
1889	29,624,807	158,044,449	295,779,479	38.8
1890	29,050,844	162,526,760	309,474,856	38.2
1891	33,494,591	129,606,230	303,401,507	34.9
1892	44,062,211	107,377,718	333,018,405	31.3
1893	42,438,460	110,963,712	364,152,666	29.6

It will be seen from this table that the United States has produced two-thirds of the "wool worn in this country" in every year but 1880, 1890, and 1891—and nearly two-thirds in those years. It will appear also that in 1892 and 1893, under the operations of the McKinley law, the United States not only produced the largest proportion of the total amount of wool consumed, but that the production was increasing relative to the total consumption. The increase of 10 per cent in the product of domestic wool in 1892 over 1891, and 10 per cent in 1893 over 1892, is striking evidence of the benefit of the McKinley act to woolgrowers.

Mr. Strange writes: "Manufacturers assure us the imported wool is never made up by itself. Neither is domestic wool. To secure the necessary strength and luster they must be combined; and 'not a spindle in America is running on either domestic or foreign wool alone.'"

Some one has sadly deceived and misled Mr. Strange. I have been in the woolen manufacturing business for twenty-six years, succeeding my father, who had been in it nearly all his life, and the above statement by Mr. Strange I can truthfully say is totally incorrect. Imported wool is frequently worked, or manufactured by itself. There is probably not a worsted yarn mill of importance in the United States which does not make yarns solely of imported wools, yarns of imported and domestic wools, and yarns of domestic wools alone. Such yarns may or may not be put into fabrics by themselves; they may or may not be put into fabrics with domestic yarns. In fact, they are used both ways.

In woolen mills (not worsted mills) cloths and hosiery are frequently and largely made purely of imported wool, but it is safe to say that a good deal more than half the woolen mills of the United States use no imported wool whatever in any shape or form, but run their spindles on domestic wool alone.

The statement that "not a spindle in America is running on either domestic or foreign wool alone" is so grossly inaccurate that it throws a strong doubt upon the sources of Mr. Strange's information. In my own State I am familiar with many mills that never use imported wool and run all their spindles on domestic wool. I have had occasion to use about three-fourths of a million pounds of domestic wool yearly for many years, and in twenty-five years have not used one hundred bales of imported wool. When I have used any imported wool I have usually used it alone, and not mixed with domestic.

Mr. Strange says: "It is imported under enormous duties—the tariff on some grades of scoured wool being over 100 per cent." He further on uses this rate of duty as if it were a common rate and fixed the price of imported wool to us, and of domestic wool also. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

In Table No. 24, United States Treasury Department, Annual Report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics on Commerce and Navigation, are given the quantities and values of imports of wool and manufactures of wool entered for consumption in the United States, and also rates of duty and amounts of accruing duties on the same, during the years ending June 30, 1892 and 1893. In this table it appears that we imported in 1892:

	Pounds.	Rate of duty.
		Per cent.
Class 1:
Unwashed wool	38,592,040	55.09
Washed wool	1,246	36.6
Scoured wool	47,187	63.52
Class 2:
Unscoured wool	4,068,224	63.21
Scoured wool	84	24.59
Sorted wool	20,171	37.76
Class 3 (carpet):
Wool, 13 cents or less	83,697,810	32
Wool, sorted	654,592	64
Wool, over 13 cents	2,106,212	50
Wool, sorted	76,159	100

In 1893, on lower prices of wool, the specific duty remaining the same, increased the percentage of duty, so that in class 1 the rates were 59.03, 48.86, and 66.09 per cent; class 2, 56.23, 43.60, and 91.68 per cent. In class 3 the rates are ad valorem in both years, and so do not change.

The only rate of 100 per cent is in class 3, carpet wool, sorted, and in this grade only 76,159 pounds were imported in 1892, and 10,780 pounds in 1893. Yet the statement is boldly made and skillfully used to convey the impression that our price of foreign wool is enhanced 100 per cent by the duty. The rates of duty on class 1 and class 2 are higher in percentage than when the McKinley law was passed, because the price of foreign wool is now lower.

Mr. Strange further on attempts to controvert Mr. McKinley's statement: "Every ship load (of imported goods) displaces American labor, and you can not get around that" by saying, "But if we but once think of the fact that they bring nothing here except in exchange for the product of our own toil, we then see that every ship load, instead of displacing labor, fills our homes with comforts and relieves our markets of our surplus, and thus gives employment to our laborers to create another surplus for another exchange, which exchange we do not make unless it is to our advantage to do so."

This is a familiar free-trade argument, which has so often been refuted that it seems unnecessary to expose its fallacy again.

Under the Walker tariff, from 1847 until 1860, there were but two years, 1848 and 1858, when we did not largely import more merchandise than we exported; in 1848 because imports were withheld to await the lower duties of the Walker tariff, and in 1858 because of hard times, brought on by the action of the Walker tariff in bringing about the great excess of imports over exports.

The excess of imports over exports in this period of the Walker tariff amounted to more than $400,000,000. This excess was paid for in gold and not by any "surplus" created by employment of labor, as Mr. Strange's theory should have worked to pay the excess. Had the mines of California not been discovered, and had they not produced such phenomenal quantities of gold for export to pay this immense excess of imports over exports, the condition of the United States would have been even worse financially than it was from 1857 to 1860.

It is not necessary to argue that the United States is not a nation which manufactures largely for export, and that it is a nation which does largely export agricultural products; these are self-evident facts.

It must pay, then, for imports of all kinds, if we pay by exchange of products, with such articles as we are called upon to supply to other nations; our exports must be agricultural products, since these are mainly what other nations come here to get whenever their other sources fail, or we can sell them more cheaply than other nations can sell similar products.

Now, the importation into the United States of more manufactures—of more shiploads of foreign manufacture—is not going to create more demand abroad for agricultural products. If England can buy the wheat of India or the Argentine or Russia, at lower prices than of America, she will not buy American wheat, simply because we are buying more goods of Bradford; she will buy in the cheapest market. So, too, of other nations supplying us with manufactured articles. Our imports of manufactured goods might double or treble and the chief articles of export not increase in amount exported, because of such imports. Again, the old system of barter or exchange of products between nations is no longer in vogue.

The submarine cables, the swift steamers—the rapid means of communication and transportation—enable a merchant to buy as easily in Hongkong as he can order a suit of clothes of his tailor, nor does he stop to consider the means of payment more carefully in one case than the other. He knows that if he can not pay for Bradford cloths in wheat, he can and will pay in gold, and that is just what he does when the scarcity of bills of exchange drawn against exported agricultural products is great enough to make gold exports necessary.

But, it is argued, we shall export more manufactured goods. Why or to whom? Every market of the world outside the United States is now supplied with goods made of free raw materials, and with much cheaper labor than enters into any goods made in the United States. Where is the new market in which our goods will be paid for at a higher price than is now paid there for foreign goods? There is no such market. So long as the present standard of wages is maintained in the United States and the present number of working hours for labor, the price of our manufactured goods in the case of nine-tenths, or more, of all kinds of goods will be higher than the foreign goods of like character, and they will not be largely exported. The only lines of cotton goods exported to-day by our people are such as contain the raw material as the chief element of cost, and into which labor enters to the smallest extent, the coarse grades of heavy cloth.

With free raw cotton we yearly import some $30,000,000 worth of fine cottons, in which labor is the chief element of cost, in spite of the McKinley tariff and free raw material. The same is true of silk goods, into which enters raw material free of duty. It is inevitable that imports shall exceed exports under a low tariff, and it is also inevitable that such excess will be paid in gold. If long continued, such a fiscal system will bring about great distress and widespread poverty, and will disorganize our monetary system to a degree which has not been equaled in the history of our country.

JOHN T. BUSIEL.

The points made by Mr. Busiel may be recapitulated as follows:

1. In answer to the charge that we produce but little more than half the wool worn in this country, he shows, by excluding the importations of carpet wool, that the true result is that of the wool worn in this country we produce two-thirds.

2. He shows that many of our mills are run entirely upon domestic wool.

3. He dispels the charge that the rate of duty on wool is over 100 per cent, and that the price of all wool is thereby enhanced 100 per cent. He does this by showing that the rates of duty on the larger quantities of wool imported, namely, on carpet wool and unwashed wool, have been only 32 and 55 per cent ad valorem.

4. He refutes the free-trade argument that importations into the United States of foreign goods increase our exports of agricultural products, because he truly says that no nation buys anything from us for any other reason than that she can obtain it at the lowest possible price. The world's needs and the world's prices, and not our duties on importations, determine the quantity of our exports.

5. He concludes that it is inevitable that our imports will exceed our exports under a low tariff, the excess to be paid in gold; and that such a system will bring about great distress and widespread poverty.

It is impossible successfully to dispute the correctness of Mr. Busiel's conclusions.

AMERICAN WAGES CAN ONLY BE KEPT UP BY PROTECTION.

Mr. President, I trust that the facts which I have to-day presented to the Senate, together with my desultory remarks intended to show the importance of protection to the cotton and woolen industries of the country, may not be undeserving of thoughtful consideration. The whole case may be summed up as follows: If the present high wages are to prevail in the United States, neither the cultivation of cotton nor the production of wool can be maintained with the admission of these so-called raw materials free of customs duties in the face of the cheap cotton of India and Egypt and the cheap wool products of the Argentine Republic and Australia. With the present high wages the manufacture of cotton and woolen goods can not be maintained without customs duties in the face of the cotton and woolen mills of China and Japan and of those of all the crowded nations of Europe.

PROTECTION AND THE REPUBLICAN PARTY WILL TRIUMPH IN 1896.

What, then, shall the national policy be? If free trade, all these industries are ruined. If a tariff for revenue only, it can not exceed 20 per cent duties upon all imported merchandise without distinction, which is also ruin to the industries. If a tariff is to be levied upon a different principle, can it be any other than one which designedly protects these great industries by duties amply sufficient to equalize the conditions in foreign countries and in this country, under which the industries are carried on? The principal inequality of conditions grows out of the difference in the wages of labor in the United States and everywhere else in the habitable globe. To this complexion, then, the question always comes at last, Shall tariff duties be maintained for the avowed purpose of protecting highly paid American labor against competition with cheaply paid labor in other countries? What will be the final answer to this question by the people of this nation?

Mr. CULLOM. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from New Hampshire——

Mr. CHANDLER. It is no interruption.

Mr. CULLOM. But I wish to inquire whether in his opinion if a tariff were made upon the basis of the difference of the cost of labor in this country and in other countries, we would or would not have sufficient protection to carry on our industries in competition with the balance of the world?

Mr. CHANDLER. That has always been my impression, and I have felt that the true Republican principle could perhaps be better enunciated in that way than in any other. That principle was distinctly voted down in the Democratic national convention of 1892, and the declaration was made instead that all protection is contrary to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from New Hampshire will bear with me one word further, I will state that I desire, before the consideration of the pending bill is finally concluded, to give the other side a chance to vote it down again if they wish to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from Illinois will give them an opportunity, but I have an impression that the Democratic platform of 1892 is already obsolete in this Chamber. I know of but one Senator on the other side who even professes to adhere to it.

During this debate the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has confidently predicted the approaching downfall of protection. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has met the assertion by the counter averment that protection is daily growing stronger with the American people, and by the prediction that it soon will be established permanently and beyond challenge as a part of the fixed economic and fiscal policy of the United States. The Senator from Maine must be right.

Whether the pending bill passes or does not pass, I feel sure that there will be an overwhelming defeat of the Democratic party which is trying to pass it inflicted at the polls in November next; that in the Presidential canvass of 1896 both parties will pronounce explicitly in favor of the protection by tariff duties of American industries and American labor, and that the duty of maintaining this principle upon which both parties will then agree, will be intrusted by an enlightened and aroused people to the ever faithful national Republican party organization.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. QUAY. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. QUAY. The Senator from Oregon is about to proceed to address the Senate, and I think it important that we should have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the woolgrowing industry is a great industry in the State of Oregon. During the discussion of the pending measure I have several times incidentally alluded to that industry, and I had intended when the woolen schedule was reached to discuss it more elaborately. I had collected some statistics and some quotations from eminent Americans which I intended to present to the Senate in addition to those I have heretofore presented. But I have been for the last two days in great doubt whether it would answer any useful purpose for me to further discuss the question as to whether wool shall be placed upon the free list. I have never believed that the Democratic majority in this Chamber could be induced to keep wool upon the dutiable list.

Since I have been a member of the Senate, several times a vote has been taken upon the question whether wool should be placed upon the free list, and with one or two exceptions, I think with but one, in the last eleven years the Democratic side of this Chamber have voted for free wool. But my friend from Montana [Mr. POWER] has been confident that the majority in the Senate would relent and that we could secure votes enough upon the other side of the Chamber in favor of a reasonable duty upon wool to carry the proposition.

I do not suppose that anything I can say upon the subject will have any effect whatever. The matter has been fully presented. The statistics of the woolgrowing industry in this country and the wool-manufacturing industry have been presented. I fear no appeal which can be made to the fairness and patriotism of the majority, no argument for the protection of this industry, and no showing that can be made concerning the iniquity of protecting the wool-manufacturing industry, the iron and steel industry, the cotton industry, and the manufacturing interests and other industries of the South, while placing wool upon the free list, will avail.

The wool industry is doomed. Our Democratic friends have for years, in this Chamber, been expressing great solicitude for the farmer. They have been lamenting over the pitiable condition of the workingman of this country, and have been denouncing the manufacturers and the millionaires of the country. Now, when they have an opportunity to legislate in the interests of the farmer, they propose to strike a deadly blow, not only to the wool industry, but to nearly all the agricultural interests of this country.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], the chairman of the Committee on Finance, in opening the discussion on this measure, evidently not familiar with the provisions of the bill, indulged in some of the old Democratic rhetoric in regard to the men who have accumulated wealth and have invested their money in the great industries of the country which give employment to American labor. The Senator from Indiana, apparently oblivious to the fact that many of the great manufacturing interests of the country will be reasonably protected by this measure, and that it is the industries of the farmer and the laboring people which are to be stricken down by the pending bill, employed his rhetoric to denounce the men who are engaged in carrying on the great industries which give employment to labor. I can not do better than to quote what the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] said in regard to the extravagant denunciations of the Senator from Indiana. He said:

> I listened the other day with considerable interest to the distinguished Senator from Indiana in his fierce denunciations of the people in this country who have been fortunate enough to accumulate a competence. He nearly exhausted the vocabulary of abuse in the anathemas which he hurled against them.

Mr. President, this denunciation by the Senator from Indiana appears to have been intended to answer for the whole majority and for the whole discussion of the tariff bill. There has been no repetition of it in this Chamber. There has been no other denunciation of robber barons, or the people who have grown rich by paternalism. The Senator from Iowa (Mr. ALLISON), I think, the next day or the same day intimated that the Senator from Indiana did not know what the bill contained, and did not understand this bill. Sir, the sequel has shown that the Senator from Iowa was correct.

How ridiculous does this denunciation, this display of rhetoric, appear when taken in connection with the subsequent discussion of the bill on the other side of the Chamber, and the provisions of the bill a bill in which the trusts are provided for; a bill in which the iron and steel schedules were made so satisfactory that they passed the Senate with scarcely a question, and even an amendment which my friend from Pennsylvania (Mr. QUAY) offered was agreed to without a division; a bill so satisfactory to the cotton manufacturers that the cotton schedule of ten pages was passed in thirty minutes; a bill in which every great industry of the South is protected; a bill which imposes a duty upon sugar; a bill which has been made satisfactory to the sugar trust; a bill which gives 83 per cent protection to the producers of rice; a bill which applies the doctrine of the Democratic party of tariff for revenue only and free raw materials to two great products of the Northern agriculturists and laborers, to wool and to lumber.

President Cleveland in his free-trade message of 1887, followed the lead of his distinguished Secretary of the Treasury, and advocated free wool. Mr. Manning in his annual report, advocated reform of the tariff and announced the true doctrine of tariff for revenue only substantially as being a tariff which levies duties upon articles like tea and coffee that we do not produce in the United States and which do not come into competition with articles of our production and admits free, or without protective duties, productions which do come in competition with the products of American industries.

The Secretary of the Treasury advocated free wool, but favored a revenue duty upon sugar, for the reason he said that when a duty is placed upon any product which comes in competition with American products, the consumer is compelled, not only to pay a tax upon the product imported into the United States, but the price of the domestic product is increased and the consumer is compelled to pay a tax upon it. He contended that inasmuch as we only produce about one-eighth of the sugar consumed in the United States, the tax which the consumer is compelled to pay upon the domestic product is small, and that therefore sugar is a proper subject for taxation, for the levying of revenue duties. Our Democratic friends argue that free wool will not decrease the price of wool, but that by the removal of the duties the price will be increased. At the same time on every stump they have argued that wool should be made free because wool is a product which is used for the manufacture of clothing, used by every citizen of the United States, and that placing wool on the free list, by making wool cheap, would reduce the price of clothing.

These contradictory and inconsistent arguments have been heard all over the country and in this Chamber. But President Cleveland did not deny that placing wool on the free list would reduce its price. He said:

> I think it may be fairly assumed that a large proportion of the sheep owned by the farmers throughout the country are found in small flocks numbering from twenty-five to fifty. The duty on the grade of imported wool which these sheep yield, is 10 cents each pound if of the value of 30 cents or less, and 12 cents if of the value of more than 30 cents. If the liberal estimate of six pounds be allowed for each fleece, the duty thereon would be 60 or 72 cents, and this may be taken as the utmost enhancement of its price to the farmer by reason of this duty. Eighteen dollars would thus represent the increased price of the wool from twenty-five sheep, and $36 that from the wool of fifty sheep; and at present values this addition would amount to about one-third of its price.

The President, then, basking in public favor, receiving a salary of $50,000 a year, surrounded by all the conveniences and luxuries which wealth can procure, paid for by the Government, forgot that in thousands and hundreds of thousands of households in the United States, $36, which he estimated would be the loss on the wool of 50 sheep, or at least $72, which he estimated would be the loss on a flock of 100 sheep, would probably be an amount greater than all the money expended by the household for clothing during the year. The President treated this depreciation of the products of flocks as a trifling matter; but accepting the President's estimate, which I think is too low, placing wool on the free list will cause a serious loss to all the flock-holders in the United States. Let us take the President's figures and make a little calculation.

Eighteen dollars the President estimates as the loss at the then price of wool upon the product of 25 sheep; $36 as the loss on the product of a flock of 50 sheep; $72 as the loss on the product of 100 sheep. Now, we will take larger flocks, and we will reach the owners of the flocks in Oregon, the men who are interested and engaged in this great industry there. The President's estimate would mean a loss of $720 per annum on 1,000 sheep, of $7,200 per annum on 10,000 sheep, of $175,000 per annum on the flocks in Oregon, estimated at about 2,400,000, and upon the product of the sheep in the United States, at the President's estimate, the loss would be over $3,500,000 per annum.

Mr. President, the State of Oregon is divided by the Cascade Mountains into eastern and western Oregon. Western Oregon consists of a succession of valleys and mountain sides, of prairies and forests. Time was when the sheep industry of western Oregon was a great industry, but owing to the increase of population, to the utilization of our beautiful valleys for the raising of cereals, for fruit orchards, and for hop yards, this industry to-day isprincipally conducted in Oregon east of the Cascade Mountains. About one-third of the State of Oregon is west of the mountains and about two-thirds east. With the exception of the slope of the Cascade range, of the Blue Mountains, and other spurs of the Cascade range, and the Rocky Mountain system and a few valleys, eastern Oregon is largely within the arid or semiarid regions.

The area in which agricultural products can be raised without irrigation is comparatively small. But in the large area of eastern Oregon, being some 300 miles north and south and nearly 200 miles east and west, are vast regions which are suitable for sheep-raising, where immense flocks of sheep graze, and if, in the dry season, the feed becomes short they are driven up on the mountain sides and to the watered valleys, places where they can find food. The wool raised in eastern Oregon mainly finds its way to market by being transported by wagon to the Columbia River, or to the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's line, a railroad which extends from Portland up the Columbia River some 200 miles or more, to Walla Walla and connects with the Northern Pacific, branches off at Umatilla, crossing over the Blue Mountains and entering Idaho at the boundary of the State.

Nearly all the wool product of eastern Oregon is grown so distant from railroad and water transportation that it has to be transported at great cost a long distance by teams. The product of last year is still largely held in the warehouses of eastern Oregon. There has been no buyer for the product of this year, and if you pass the pending bill you will perpetuate the present conditions there. It has been said that near some of the large cities in the East where there is a great demand for mutton, sheep-raising may still be prosecuted, but pass the pending bill and the wool industry in Oregon is doomed. The sheep will be driven out of the country. They will be driven to the slaughter pens.

The industry can not be prosecuted with profit. It must be remembered that whatever reduction there is made in the price of wool comes from the profit of the industry. When President Cleveland was arguing that the loss to the farmer by putting wool on the free list would be small, not more than one-third of the value of the product, he forgot that the expense of raising wool would be just the same, that the value of the land would continue the same, that the cost of feeding the sheep would be the same, that the cost of shearing and marketing the product would be the same, so that the whole loss caused by the depreciation in the price would come out of the profits of the industry; and, with wool at the price it will be if this bill passes and wool is placed upon the free list, I repeat, the woolgrowing industry in the State of Oregon will be doomed.

Only those who know something about that country know what that means to the prosperity of Oregon. It is the great industry of eastern Oregon, as I have said, embracing two-thirds of the area of the State; but when the sheep are sold and driven out of the State, or driven to the slaughter pens because they can no longer be fed and cared for and sheared and their product marketed at a profit, not only that industry and all that it has produced, all that it has added to the prosperity of the people of the State will be gone, the lands that have been occupied for pasturage will lie idle and be unprofitable; they can not be turned to any other profitable purpose; they are unfit for agriculture unless water can be gotten upon them, and the people who are now engaged in the wool industry will be driven to other employment to compete with those employed in our already overcrowded industries.

Mr. President, in view of the disastrous effect of the destruction of this great industry in my State, and in view of the other provisions of the pending bill, which will strike a deadly blow at other great industries of the State, which I have heretofore discussed—the provision putting lumber upon the free list, the provision reducing the duty upon hops, and the duty upon fruits—if I saw any way to defeat this measure I should certainly improve it.

But, as I said when I arose to address the Senate, I am becoming discouraged. It is whispered around that this bill is likely to come to a vote before long, possibly during the present month. If I had my way, if I could prevent it, the final vote upon the bill never should be reached until the people of this country should have another opportunity to render a verdict upon the tariff question and to say whether they desire the McKinley law to remain upon the statute books or this so-called Wilson bill to be passed.

It is the great Northwest which is to be the greatest sufferer from the effect of this bill if it becomes a law. As I have already intimated, many industries in the South are protected and provided for, many of the great industries of the country have been fairly protected, and even the woolen manufacturers, if we are to believe statements made upon the other side of the Chamber, are to receive considerable protection; and it is argued that the placing of wool upon the free list renders a less rate of duty upon imported woolen fabrics necessary for them.

I was interested in the discussion yesterday between the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] of Oregon] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I really began to think that possibly the Senator from Mississippi was relenting, and that he intended to vote with us on this side of the Chamber to put some duty upon wool; but when I found what he was driving at, when I understood the purport of his question, that what he wanted to know was if wool was given a duty, we on this side of the Chamber would insist upon an increase of the duties upon woolen manufactures, I saw that he did not understand the question of the protection of wool at all.

Mr. President, ample protection of woolen manufacturing is just as necessary to the continuance of the woolgrowing industry as a protective duty upon wool itself. What good would a duty upon wool alone do? Suppose you were to give us even the McKinley duty upon wool and remove the duties from woolen manufactures, do you suppose that would be of any benefit to the woolgrowers? No, sir. All the wool used in this country would come into the country manufactured; the woolen manufacturing industry would be destroyed; there would be no domestic market for wool, and there would be none imported. Domestic wool, if raised, would be compelled to find a market abroad where the wool was manufactured. It is entirely indifferent to the farmer whether the 160,000,000 pounds of wool we import comes into this country unmanufactured or whether that amount shall be brought in manufactured. It affects the industry the same.

The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], I think it was, the other day referred to something I had said about the wool industry, and quoted some figures in regard to the woolgrowing industry in several of the Southern States, comparing them with some of the New England States. I presented tables to the Senate the other day showing the number of sheep and the number of pounds of washed wool and scoured wool in each State of the Union, and I then segregated the table, showing the number of sheep in the Southern States and the number of pounds of wool produced there. I showed that only 20 per cent of the sheep of the United States to-day are owned in the Southern States, and nearly one-half of those are owned in the State of Texas, and about the same percentage of the amount of wool was raised there. The single State of Texas is the only State which is really interested to any considerable extent in the question of a duty upon wool.

I stated the other day that I had heard the argument made that if wool were made free of duty there would be large importations of the finer wools of Australia and other foreign countries, and the coarser wool of Texas would be in greater demand. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], I think it was, suggested to me another matter, in substance, that the conditions in Texas are more nearly like to those in foreign countries, where wool can be produced cheaply. There are large tracts of unoccupied land there, labor is cheap, the climate is mild, and it may be supposed that the wool industry in Texas can survive, while the industry in other States of the Union, the Northern States, where the winters are more severe and land and labor are dearer, will be destroyed.

Mr. President, it has been argued, as I have said, that placing wool upon the free list will make it cheaper and make clothing cheaper. It will make wool cheaper in the United States for a time, and until the industry in the United States is destroyed, but when the foreign producer and foreign dealer can control our market it is more than likely that the price of wool will be increased; but what will our condition then be? The wool industry is an industry of slow growth. It has taken years of patient toil to enable it to reach its present condition; but when our sheep are slaughtered, when the wool industry is abandoned, and there comes a change of the political control of this body, as there will come speedily, and a duty is placed on wool, then, sir, it will take years of protective duty and of care and attention to revive the industry in the United States.

If our friends upon the other side of the Chamber would consent to give us a duty, not a highly protective duty, but such a duty as would enable the industry to be prosecuted without a loss, enable the industry to live, prevent the sheep from being slaughtered, and leave the industry in a condition to be revived when there is a change of policy in regard to it, they would be doing a business-like and sensible thing. But, if they now destroy this industry and wipe it out, it can not be revived until after many years of patient effort and toil.

We hear a great deal of talk about the prices of clothing. Woolen clothing to-day is cheaper in the United States than it has ever been before in all our history. A month's wages in the United States to-day will buy more woolen clothing than can be bought by a month's wages in any other country under the face of the sun.

Mr. GRAY. Shoddy, you mean?

Mr. DOLPH. No, I do not mean shoddy. I never expect to convince the Senator from Delaware upon any proposition connected with the tariff or concerning any fact in regard to our products in the United States or their value. The Senator is wedded, apparently, to free trade; he is wedded to a policy which, as I told him the other day, if it had prevailed in his State, would have made the great commercial and manufacturing center of his State, now a credit to the State and to the nation, a country village. But the Senator will persist in his unsound theory, and will not be convinced, not even by the object lesson which is now afforded to the American people by the condition of our industries, brought about by the mere threat of free trade.

Mr. President, I repeat, that a month's wages in the United States to-day will buy more and better clothing than can be bought by a month's wages in any other country under the sun.

I suppose that there are somewhere from 3 to 5 pounds of wool used in a suit of clothing. If the duty were 10 cents a pound, that would be from 30 to 50 cents reduction in the price of the wool which enters into a suit of clothing. If that difference in price could be traced from the woolgrower through the commission merchant and the warehouseman and the wholesale buyer, and the manufacturer of cloth and the wholesale cloth merchant, and the retail dealer and the clothing manufacturer, and the wholesale dealer in clothing and the retail dealer, down to the customer, it would be but a trifle; but you might as well attempt to irrigate the arid plains of the West by pouring a pail of water on the top of the Rocky Mountains as to attempt to trace this difference in the price of the wool in a suit of clothing through all the middlemen, dealers, and manufacturers from the growers of the wool to the man who purchases the clothing.

Our free-trade friends contend also that if we had free wool we could manufacture woolen goods in the United States to supply the world's demand for woolen cloth. That is a most ridiculous proposition. We never could furnish the foreign markets until we put labor in this country upon an equality with the labor of other countries. There is imported annually in all countries, besides the United States, about $100,000,000 in value of woolen cloth, but we import annually from fifty to sixty millions in value at the foreign price, and in the neighborhood of from eighty to one hundred million dollars at the domestic price after the duty is paid. We should endeavor to secure our own market before we talk about securing the foreign market.

The absurdity of the claim that free wool would enable us to secure the foreign market for woolen goods is clearly shown by the following, taken from the report of the minority of the House Committee on Ways and Means upon the House bill to place wool on the free list in the Fifty-second Congress:

THE CHIMERA OF "FOREIGN MARKETS."

The majority of the committee declares that the cheapening of production that will follow free wool will enable American manufacturers, "within a reasonable time, to sell many grades of woolen goods in foreign markets, thus relieving them from the embarrassment of overproduction and enabling them to take advantage of the world's market. Instead of being limited in their market to the sixty-odd million consumers in this country, they would in a few years' time be able to compete successfully with their foreign rivals in supplying the hundreds of millions of people who patronize the markets of the world."

There is no chimera of the free-trader more flimsy and hollow than this one in a foreign market for American-made woolen goods.

Such a market can never be possible to us until we reduce the labor cost in woolen goods to the labor cost of similar goods made by the nations which now possess these markets.

In limited lines of cotton goods it is possible to obtain some foothold, the proportion of labor cost being relatively small, and superior organization and greater speed in machinery overcoming the disadvantage of higher wages; but in the woolen manufacture these conditions do not and can not exist.

But the greatest error of the majority lies in its extravagant overestimate of the importance of the "world's market" for woolen goods. The total amount of the net importations of woolen goods by all the countries of the globe, excluding our own, does not equal $100,000,000 a year.

The United States in 1890 imported $54,000,000 worth of woolens, foreign value, or about $85,000,000 in duty-paid value; so that that limited portion of the United States market for woolens which, up to the enactment of the present law, was held by foreigners was nearly equal in volume to the value of all the remaining available markets of all the world.

To hold that market for ourselves is worth far more to us, economically, than would be the opportunity to contest on equal terms with England, France, Germany, and Belgium for the woolen-goods markets for which these nations are struggling desperately in order that they may possess an outlet for their surplus products.

They esteem the American market, which the Democratic party proposes to surrender as a free gift to them, worth more than all other markets combined.

It is worth more to us than any other market, and it can be as well supplied by our own as by any other people.

The "open markets" of the world are no longer sufficient to consume the products of the machinery competing for them. There are no such "open markets" into which our trade in woolen goods could be extended under the fiscal policy of the majority.

The protective policy of the United States is now followed, to a greater or less degree, by every important nation, Great Britain alone excepted; and Great Britain is, by the general agreement of her Parliamentary committees and her citizens, the chief, and, in fact, the only sufferer from this universal application of the principle of a protective policy.

As was stated by some Senator to-day we produced in the United States over 300,000,000 pounds of wool last year and imported about 160,000,000 pounds. With the continued growth of the industry, which has taken place since the McKinley law was passed, it would be but a short time, if a protective duty were maintained, until we would produce all the wool in the United States which is consumed here.

It may not be generally known, but it is true nevertheless, that we can raise in the United States as fine wool as can be raised in any other portion of the known world. We can raise in California and in Oregon as fine wool as can be raised in Australia. I was surprised myself, when, as a member of the Senate Committee on our Relations with Canada—the committee was taking testimony in California and Oregon—I ascertained from experts upon the wool question that such was the fact. I am told by my friend from Kansas, now sitting near me [Mr. PEFFER], that as good wool is raised in Kansas as is imported from any quarter of the globe.

Why should we in view of these facts; why should we in view of the fact that we are importing largely of wool now, why should we in view of the fact that we are now growing 300,000,000 pounds of wool in the United States, and the industry is growing and the amount of production is increasing; why should we, in view of the fact that we have millions of acres of land unsuitable for general agriculture, but suitable for sheep-raising; that we have vast territories in which this industry can be profitably conducted, strike a blow which will destroy the industry? Why should we prefer the sheep-raisers of Australia and the Argentine Republic and of other foreign countries, where land is cheap and wages are low and the sheep require little care, to American citizens? No one has answered, and no one can give any satisfactory answer to that question. The industry of the farmers of this country is to be destroyed in pursuance of a theory only, the theory of free trade.

The wool manufacturers have not asked it, the farmers have not asked it, no class of citizens in this country has asked it. No one complains about the price of clothing, but the Democratic party is determined, having abandoned their principles as to everything else, to hold fast to free lumber and free wool in order that it shall not be accused of entirely abandoning its position upon the tariff question.

Mr. President, it is idle to claim, as some have claimed, that the price of wool in the United States will not be decreased by placing wool on the free list. The price of wool is fixed in the great markets of the world like the price of every other product of labor; it is fixed by the world's supply and the world's demand, and for years—in fact, ever since we have had a duty on wool—the price in the United States has been the London price with the duties exacted at the custom-house added; but when you put wool on the free list the price in London and the price in New York will be the same.

The Democratic majority in this body has abandoned its platform and abandoned Democratic principles, and has protected nearly everything except lumber and wool. As I have shown, the South has very little interest in the wool question. The pending measure proposes duties which give satisfaction to the Carnegies and to all the iron and steel manufacturers. The Democratic majority has given a reasonable schedule to the cotton manufactures; it proposes to maintain a duty upon woolen manufactures. It has shed tears over the condition of the poor farmer, and it talked week after week and month after month here during all the time the McKinley bill was under consideration about the robber barons, the manufacturers, and the money kings—has made provision for the manufacturers and for the wealthy people of the country, and proposes to strike this deadly blow at a great industry of the farmers and the laboring men of this country.

I submit a statement in regard to the market for wool in Great Britain and the effect of free wool upon the price of wool in the United States, taken from the circular of Messrs. Justice, Bateman & Co., issued June 1, 1894. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none, and the paper referred to will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

FOREIGN MARKETS.

In the event of wool being placed on the free list, it is conceded that London prices will be the free-wool American prices; therefore, unusual interest is taken in London quotations. Recent advices state that wools can be bought at an average decline there of 5 per cent below the last auction sales. In order to sustain the market 80,000 bales, or 30,000,000 pounds, were withdrawn, and the sales will be brought to a close to-day, instead of on the 9th, as advertised. This weak condition of the London market is a source of surprise, as it has been generally supposed that the placing of wool on the free list in the United States would cause an advance in the wool markets of the world. Leading London merchants declare that the effect of "free wool" in America upon foreign prices has been already discounted, and that but for the immediate prospect of a larger share of the American trade, foreign prices would inevitably have fallen much lower.

Quotations for the grease price of foreign wools are of but little use for purposes of comparing the prices of one year with another, or of comparing the wool of one country with that of another, on account of wide differences in condition of wools of the same breed and the same diameter of fiber; but when the wools of the world, varying widely in the grease condition, are scoured, carded, and combed, they are thus brought to one uniform standard, which is a fair basis for comparison. "Botany Top" is such a standard, and Botany Top, of such quality as would be made of the average of American fine wools, is selling in Europe at from 35 to 37 cents, the lowest on record.

The price of this article has varied for several years, the average indicating a wool value of about 30 cents for scoured wool similar to that produced from the average American staple. This value of 30 cents per scoured pound, therefore, must be taken as the basis for the average free-trade value of American wool. Territorial wools are not worth 30 cents scoured, while the sound, strong-fiber wool from east of the Mississippi is worth a shade above 30 cents scoured. The average scoured value of American wool during the past month was about 40 cents as against 60 cents previous to March, 1893; so that 60 cents scoured, and upward, may be considered the basis upon which the American clip under protection has grown to its present proportions. It now remains to be seen what will be the condition of the wool industry when prices are adjusted to an average scoured basis of 30 cents instead of 60 cents, as heretofore.

Mr. DOLPH. I hold in my hand a statement of the importations of wool, the number of pounds, the value, the duties collected, and the rates of duty for four years, 1391, 1892, 1893, and 1894.

In 1891 we imported 129,303,648 pounds, valued at $18,200,000, and we collected in duties $6,500,000 on a specific duty of 5 cents per pound and 35⅛ per cent ad valorem; in 1892 we imported 148,670,652 pounds, valued at $19,600,000, and the duties collected were $7,750,000, with a duty of 5¼ cents per pound and 39¼ per cent ad valorem; in 1893 we imported 168,433,836 pounds, valued at $21,000,000, and we collected in duties $8,250,000. Then the duty had been changed by the McKinley law to 4.9 cents per pound specific and 39¼ per cent ad valorem. In 1894 we imported 48,792,168 pounds, valued at $6,000,000, upon which $2,300,000 in duties were collected. It will be seen that both the importations and the duties have largely fallen off on account of the condition of the country.

This makes the total importation for the four years 495,200,304 pounds, of the value of $64,800,000, and the duties collected in the four years amounted to $24,800,000.

Our friends on the other side of the Chamber claim to favor a tariff for revenue, but there was a revenue collected from duties on imports of wool of $8,250,000 in 1893, which it is now proposed to throw away.

I have also a statement showing the imports of manufactures of wool during the same period. I shall insert in the RECORD the statement in full.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Imports of wool and manufactures of wool for fiscal years ending June 30, 1891–'92–'93–'94, under the McKinley law, together with amount of duties collected on same.

Years ending June 30—	Imports of wool.		Duties collected.	Specific (or per lb.) duty collected.	Ad valorem duty collected.
	Pounds.	Value.
				Cents.	Per cent.
1891	129,303,648	$18,200,000	$6,500,000	5	35⅛
1892	148,670,652	19,600,000	7,750,000	5¼	39¼
1893	168,433,836	21,000,000	8,250,000	4.9	39¼
1894	48,792,168	6,000,000	2,300,000	4.9	38½

Imports of wool and manufactures of wool, etc.—Continued.

Years ending June 30—	Imports of manufactures of wool.	Duties collected.	Rate of duty collected (ad valorem).
			Per cent.
1891	$41,000,000	$34,500,000	84.14
1892	35,500,000	34,000,000	95.77
1893	38,000,000	37,000,000	97.37
1894	22,500,000	21,900,000	97.37
Total	137,000,000	127,400,000

The figures for 1894 are all estimates based on the reported imports for first nine months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

This $24,800,000 duties collected on wool are, by the pending bill, to be given away at a time when the Government needs revenue.

This $127,400,000 duties collected on woolen manufactured goods, which are almost exclusively luxuries used by the wealthy classes, are, by the pending bill to be reduced two-thirds, thus making a present to the wealthy classes of over $80,000,000. This loss of revenue of over $100,000,000 heretofore collected, under the McKinley law, on wool and woolens is to be replaced by a tax on sugar, a necessary of life, the per capita consumption of which is as great by the poor as the wealthy.

All this revenue is to be abandoned at a time when the Government needs it for the payment of ordinary expenses.

Mr. QUAY (at 6 o'clock p. m.). Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. DOLPH. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. QUAY. Is it the desire of the Senator from Oregon to conclude his remarks this evening?

Mr. DOLPH. It is entirely immaterial to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. QUAY. The usual time of adjournment has arrived.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator from Oregon has not concluded his remarks upon this subject, and as he has never been heard before on the tariff question, I think he ought to have the fullest opportunity to be heard. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Tennessee is very kind, and I am very greatly obliged to him.

Mr. HARRIS. I knew the Senator would be, and he ought to be, for I have endured almost beyond the point of human endurance. I hope the Senator will proceed.

Mr. QUAY. I desire to mention to the Senator from Tennessee that I understood the Senator from Oregon to state that he does not desire to conclude his remarks this evening.

Mr. HUNTON. The Senator from Oregon said it was immaterial to him whether he concluded this evening or not.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope he will conclude.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. HARRIS. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called.) I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], but I transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] and vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], who is detained from the Senate by reason of sickness in his family. I vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I inquire if the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has not voted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] with the privilege of voting to make a quorum. I shall not vote unless I find that my vote is necessary for that purpose.

Mr. DANIEL (after having voted in the negative). I discover that the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], with whom I am paired, has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. CAREY (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], and desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is detained from the Chamber by illness, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. RANSOM (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine has not voted.

Mr. RANSOM. I beg leave to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with that Senator. If there is not a quorum, however, I shall feel at liberty to vote.

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones, Nev.	Platt,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Mitchell, Oregon	Power,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Patton,	Proctor,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Shoup.

Daniel,	Hoar,	Morrill,	Washburn,
Davis,	Irby,	Pettigrew,	Wilson,
Dixon,	Jarvis,	Pugh,	Wolcott.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. QUAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DOLPH. I do.

Mr. QUAY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ALDRICH and Mr. QUAY called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLANCHARD (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], and therefore refrain from voting.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). I again announce, for the evening, that I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], who will stand paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. JARVIS], and I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I again announce my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAREY. I desire to announce that I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. TURPIE. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS], but I am at liberty to vote to make a quorum. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who has not voted, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. DANIEL. In order to make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. I am authorized to vote in the absence of a quorum, and I vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. Under the pair I have with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], I reserved the right to vote to make a quorum, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Allison,	Hawley,	Patton,	Shoup.
Cullom,	Jones, Nev.	Perkins,
Dolph,	Mitchell, Oregon	Platt,

NAYS—34.

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Oregon yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DOLPH. I will.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, since the 2d day of April I have urged, as earnestly as I knew how to urge, the making progress with and the final disposition of this bill, not because I had any personal interest in it, but because the business of the country is paralyzed and will remain paralyzed until the country is informed of what the rates of tariff taxation are to be in the future. I have at no time sought or desired or been willing to subject any Senator to any inconvenience; but I have all the time thought, as I think now, that Senators can better afford to subject themselves to some slight inconvenience, to some slight discomfort, than to continue indefinitely this uncertainty that paralyzes business and distresses the whole country.

I had desired this evening that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] should conclude his remarks. I had an understanding with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], so far as two Senators could control the question, that we should take the vote upon the question of free wool before adjournment. He and I have been thwarted in our hopes. Is it possible now to get an understanding and an agreement as to the time when we can get a vote upon that question? I should be exceedingly glad to do so.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee has stated what took place between him and me in regard to a desire to reach a vote upon the pending amendment in regard to free wool this evening, and he has also stated that we have been disappointed in our efforts in that direction. I have been trying during the day, as the Senator knows, to get the floor for a short speech. I think the debate upon this particular part of the woolen schedule is practically exhausted, or nearly so. I know of no Senator, except the Senator from Oregon and me, who desires to be heard, and I shall not detain the Senate a great while.

I am inclined to think that to-morrow morning we may be able to come to an agreement as to the time when the final vote shall be taken upon this part of the schedule.

Mr. HARRIS. As the Senator from Rhode Island does not propose to consume much time, possibly the Senator from Oregon might give us some idea as to about how much time he will desire to consume.

Mr. DOLPH. I can not determine that to-night, Mr. President. If it will suit the convenience of the Senator from Tennessee any better, I might conclude this speech to-night and make another in the morning; but my present intention is not to continue at any great length. I do not, however, propose to agree at any time when I am in the Chamber, when that matter is brought up, as to the time when a vote shall be taken upon this schedule.

This is a matter in which the people of my section of the country are vitally interested, and we would a great deal sooner suffer some inconvenience until the 4th of March next rather than have a great industry in our State destroyed for years to come.

I had no definite idea as to how long I should take when I rose, and I have not now any definite idea how long it will take me to finish.

Mr. QUAY. I have no doubt that, if the Senate adjourns at present, there will be an agreement reached to take a vote to-morrow. I do not doubt it, though, of course, I am not able to guarantee it.

Mr. ALDRICH. My impression is that, after the Senator from Oregon shall have concluded, we may be able to fix a time at which a vote can be taken at some hour to-morrow, not late in the day. I suggest to the Senator from Tennessee that that probably is the best arrangement which can be made; that we had better adjourn now, and to-morrow, after the Senator from Oregon shall have concluded, try to make an arrangement for a vote.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, perforce, and not by inclination, I am compelled to submit to the inevitable. I think, however, I shall avail myself of this occasion to say that, after three days consumed on this particular schedule, not to mention the months which have been consumed in the same general character of debate, I hope we shall make progress to-morrow; and, if we do not, I hope that no Senator will complain, not even the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], in all the liberality and kindness and generosity of his heart, or the Senator from Oregon, with all his volubility, if he will pardon me, if I ask the Senate to stay here to-morrow without regard to time until we have made some progress with the bill.

I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 15, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 14, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. B. BAGBY.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LUCY A. M. JONES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the findings of the court in the case of Lucy A. M. Jones vs. The United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELY MOORE AND DANIEL WOODSON.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from the further consideration of Executive Document No. 221, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The title of the document was read, as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Second Comptroller, with enclosures certifying for an appropriation the amounts found due Ely Moore and Daniel Woodson under the joint resolution approved April 2, 1894.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference asked by the gentleman from Texas will be made.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit;

A bill (S. 1478) providing for an additional circuit judge in the seventh judicial circuit, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1813) providing an additional circuit judge in the ninth judicial circuit.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. WOLVERTON, for this day, on account of business.

Mr. LYNCH. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The Clerk proceeded to call the committees.

AMERICAN REGISTRY FOR STEAMER MARGARITA.

Mr. PIGOTT, from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6986) to provide for the American registry of the steamer Margarita; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. MADDOX, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6913), making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday an amendment had been offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. COFFEEN], which the Clerk will read.

Insert after line 4, on page 45, the following:

"For the purpose of conducting negotiations with the Shoshone and Arapaho Indians for the sale and relinquishment of certain portions of their reservation in the State of Wyoming to the United States; under the charge of a commissioner to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, there shall be appropriated the sum of $2,000, to be immediately available, the remuneration of said commissioner not to exceed $6 per day, and necessary traveling expenses: And provided further, That any agreement entered into for said lands shall be ratified by Congress before it becomes binding."

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, was a point of order made on that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order was reserved.

Mr. MADDOX. I now make a point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, on the ground that the amendment involves new legislation and increases appropriations.

Mr. COFFEEN. I hope that point of order will be withdrawn. If the Chair will indulge me a moment, I wish to say that this matter was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs this morning, and it was agreed (I think the chairman of the committee will so state) that the point of order should be waived and the amendment allowed to come in. Am I not correct in that statement [to Mr. HOLMAN]?

Mr. HOLMAN. That was the view of the members of the committee who were present. I hope my friend from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] will allow the amendment to come in. The amount involved is very small.

Mr. MADDOX. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is insisted upon, and the Chair sustains it. There was also pending yesterday an amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at the end of line 8, page 45, the following:

"Provided, That a sum not to exceed $5,000 may be used in completing three artesian wells at Pine Ridge, Rosebud, and Standing Rock Agencies, this amount in addition to the sum appropriated for that purpose by act of March 3, 1893."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Has the point of order been reserved upon that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been.

Mr. PICKLER. By advice of the committee I ask leave to withdraw the amendment at this place, and offer it at its proper place, in line 18, on page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The same amendment?

Mr. PICKLER. The same amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. PICKLER. It is suggested by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to page 32, line 18, for the purpose of considering the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota at that point?

Mr. MADDOX. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. To recur to page 32, line 18.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman that this money comes out of the Sioux fund, and is for the benefit of their common schools.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. This is the same amendment that was objected to at another place, and the gentleman only asks now that it be considered where it properly belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to the page and line indicated for the purpose of considering the amendment?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PICKLER. Let us have a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, there was an understanding between the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and myself last evening in reference to the amendment that I offered on page 44 after line 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the present understanding relative to the amendment of the gentleman.

Mr. MADDOX. Before that let me ask if the point of order is considered as pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to my friend from Washington that this subject has been referred to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and I presume we will have an answer in an hour or two. I ask, therefore, that it go over temporarily.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I simply wanted an understanding, Mr. Chairman, that we would recur to this when the information is obtained from the Department.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Let it be passed over informally, with the privilege of recurring to it hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over the paragraph and the amendment temporarily, to be recurred to hereafter?

Mr. MADDOX. It is understood that the point of order is reserved: otherwise I will insist on immediate action.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be reserved. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph at the bottom of page 44 has been passed over to be recurred to again. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the paragraph, as it was passed over at his request. No amendment is pending.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out the last word simply for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. I wish to inquire why in this paragraph, which provides an appropriation for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians, the committee has seen proper to reduce the amount from $40,000 for the current year to $30,000 in the next year?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Illinois must see that this work is being completed, and that so large an appropriation will not be constantly required.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Being completed?

Mr. HOLMAN. You do not propose to appropriate $40,000 every year for work that is gradually approaching completion?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why, Mr. Chairman, from the reading of the report of Mr. Donaldson, who made the Indian census, one of the most intelligent men and best informed in this country on that question, it would seem that we are just beginning the work. It ought to be done with discretion, but there are certain reservations where the allotment ought to be speedily completed, according to his report; and I am inclined to think he is correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I have read the report of Mr. Donaldson very carefully. What particular reservation does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, some reservations in the Northwest?

Mr. HOLMAN. After looking over the ground carefully, the committee were of the opinion that $30,000 was sufficient.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What portion of this bill are we discussing?

The CHAIRMAN. The last paragraph on page 44.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Was there an understanding to return to that?

The CHAIRMAN. There was, last night.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. All I desired to know was "where we are at." [Laughter].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. We are at the last paragraph on page 44.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I am much obliged to the gentleman for the information.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Before making a material motion—having moved to strike out the last word—I wish to ask whether the Indian Bureau agrees with the judgment of the committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. The estimate of the Department is $40,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What does the Indian Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior say about it?

Mr. HOLMAN. He makes no special recommendation, but estimates $40,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And the committee fixed the amount at $30,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Which is the amount that we believe to be necessary, owing to the present progress of the work. The gentleman from Illinois is familiar enough with the preparation of appropriation bills to know that while you generally follow the estimates, you must at the same time assume that the committee in preparing a bill will exercise some discretion in such matters. The amount here appropriated is in the judgment of the committee ample. If the gentleman, however, desires to move an increase he can do so.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not want it increased one cent. I would rather see it reduced, or stricken out entirely, if it can be without injustice to the service; and all I am seeking to learn is, inasmuch as we have entered upon the allotment of lands to Indians in severalty, whether the decrease of this amount by $10,000 will cripple the service.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, the committee think not.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I understand the committee think not, but that is arbitrary. How full have the inquiries been? What reservations are being allotted? What allotments will the $30,000 complete? Does this appropriation drag this machinery along for the benefit of hungry politicians, who hold places from year to year?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly the taking off of $10,000 would not have that effect.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, but there are a certain number of them in the service now. Is it proposed to give them lifetime jobs instead of giving what the Bureau estimates for, and completing the work as it ought to be completed? Now, I do not know. I simply ask, and I get the reply that the committee are of such and such an opinion. I have great respect for the committee, but I want the facts.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, since the bill was printed it has been carefully examined by the Indian Office, and no suggestion came for an increase of the $30,000. The office did suggest increases in all the items which it considered too small or which would interfere with the service, but this item was not mentioned, and hence we take it that this amount was satisfactory to the office.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, one word upon this item of the bill. I desire to say that as a member of the minority of the committee, I think the appropriation should be $40,000, for the following reasons: It is a well-known fact that we have been proceeding from year to year to make allotments of Indian lands in severalty. It is also well known that we have never had sufficient funds to carry out the work with the rapidity that was desirable. Now, owing to the fact that we have not sufficient funds, the matter has been delayed at various Indian agencies throughout the country, and it has cost the Government more money to turn back after a few allotments have been made, and endeavor to complete the work than it would to appropriate the whole amount and complete it with rapidity on the various reservations.

The work has been delayed for years at the Mission Agency, in Southern California. At the Yakima Reservation, in my State, the allotments have been going on for two or three years, and could have been closed up last year entirely if we had had the money. At the Colville Reservation 1,500,000 acres are to be allotted, but can not be allotted at all, because there are not sufficient funds to go forward and make the allotments. I think the appropriation ought to be the amount estimated by the Department, and I shall so vote, if opportunity is afforded me.

Mr. Chairman, the amount for survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and of lands to be allotted to Indians of $15,000 is entirely too small. The recommendation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon this subject is as follows:

> Surveying and alloting Indian reservations (page 46, line 13), $15,000.
> These are those reservations on which allotments are now in progress, the expenses of which are defrayed from this appropriation—the Mission, in California, and the Lower Brule and Rosebud, in South Dakota. It is probable that the work on the first will be brought to a close early in the next fiscal year, but on the other two it will not be completed before the close of that year.
> The expenses of each allotting agent, including his per diem, a surveying corps, and incidentals, amounts to about $8,000 per annum, so that the entire amount of $15,000 will be required to prosecute the work on the two reservations in Dakota.
> From this appropriation the expenses of all boundary surveys are paid, as well as the cost of subdividing lands in the several Sioux reservations. The entire sum of $15,000 could be advantageously expended in making surveys on the Pine Ridge, Standing Rock, and other Sioux reservations, which have been urgently recommended by the agents in charge.
> Wherever allotment work is commenced on an Indian reservation it should be prosecuted to completion without interruption, as any other course tends to suspicion on the part of the Indians, and frequently necessitates doing the work over again.
> The amount estimated for ($25,000) was the lowest sum this office believed to be necessary, and is the same as that appropriated for the current year, which was found to be insufficient.
> I strongly recommend that this item be increased to $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] moves to strike out "thirty" and insert "forty." The question is on the amendment.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON of Washington was rejected.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

> To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $75 each per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock-raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $70,000.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to amend the text.

Mr. BOWERS of California. My amendment will not interfere with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen from California [Mr. BOWERS] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 45, line 14, strike out the word "seventy" and insert in lieu thereof the word "five."

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, here is a section that appropriates $70,000. I believe that not a single good reason exists for the appropriation of a penny of that money. According to its terms, that appropriation would hire seventy-seven farmers for twelve months in the year. It would hire one hundred and fifty farmers for six months. Now, these one hundred and fifty farmers are to be in addition to the agency farmers. I want to ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. HOLMAN], who has this bill in charge, if he knows how many agency farmers are now employed?

Mr. HOLMAN. About sixty, I think.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Then we will have two hundred and ten farmers. What for? Now every man must speak on this subject from his own observation, or his knowledge, derived in his own locality. I propose to speak upon this subject from what I know about it in my locality. There are several Indian reservations in my district. We do not have any of these farmers that I know of in connection with reservations in Southern California. Why, in that country we hire the Indians for farmers. The stockmen and cattlemen hire them for vaqueros, and those Indians who are hired can teach every one of these political farmers, and give them all points in the business for which they are ostensibly appointed.

Now, then, what are you going to teach them? To plant corn! Why, God bless your soul, they planted corn before Columbus discovered America. [Laughter.] And many of these political farmers at $75 per month would not know whether the corn grew on the tassel or on the top.

A MEMBER. Or at the root.

Mr. BOWERS of California. They know no more about that than they do about growing peanuts, although they may know something about growing them. Now, what are you going to teach them? How are you to keep them employed for twelve months? Are you going to teach them to cultivate corn? Why they did that before the Indian Bureau existed. Why, whether the Republican party or the Democratic party were in, with both parties these positions are simply soft places, where we reward our men; and that is all there is of it.

Why not just call it that? If they are there to be bosses of servants, to aid the Indian agents, why not call them so? The whole of this farming business is nonsense; there is nothing in it. Here we see now 210 farmers for the whole year. Why, you only plant corn for a month or so. You are going to teach the Indian how to plant corn! It is ridiculous! One Indian can teach another. You can teach them to do it in a way, but the whole thing is a simple steal. We had a bill up here the other day providing for the payment of $200, an honest debt of the United States, and you kicked like a lot of bay steers; but here you give away $70,000, because both parties want it. The Republican party expect to have that little billet pretty soon, but it is all wrong.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Certainly.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Have not these appropriations been made heretofore?

Mr. BOWERS of California. They have always been made. Right along we have provided these places.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Have you been objecting to it?

Mr. BOWERS of California. Why, yes. You will find that ever since I have been here I have been objecting to it. I believe that the Indians of Southern California have not been benefited by the efforts of the Indian Department. I believe the system and the policy of the Indian Bureau (even if carried out with absolute honesty, and as to that we know it is not, and never has been) is wrong; wrong in its first teaching—and that is in teaching the Indians that the Government must support and take care of them. That is what the Indians have been taught everywhere.

In my own county a white man, a citizen of the United States, filed on 160 acres of land in accordance with law, lived on it for over four years, and until near the time for final entry. During this time he employed the Indians on the adjacent Indian reservation to do much of the work, and paid them for it. He cleared 100 acres, planted 10 acres in orchard, and as much more in vines. He built 2 miles of fence, a good house, and other improvements. He expended in various ways nearly or quite $8,000.

A few months before the time when under the law he could make final entry, by an executive order the Indian reservation was floated over his land and the reservation enlarged to take in his home. He was ordered off his land, out of his house, and the Indian Department took possession of his home and farm. It placed one Indian on it and gave him the house to live in. I saw the place two years after it was turned over to this Indian. The fences were down. The agent had ordered the Indian to roll up the wire and place it in the barn. The orchard was then nearly destroyed; the vineyard also. Neither had been cultivated or cared for, and to-day both are blotted out and have disappeared. One and one-half acres of the 100 cleared had been scratched over and planted to barley. Outside of that the whole place was going back to its primeval state. It is now to be allotted to the Indians. A more deliberate, cowardly, inexcusable robbery was never committed by any one person, corporation, or government upon a citizen than the robbery committed by the Executive of this Government, at the instance of the Indian Bureau, upon Charles Hensley, of El Capitan, San Diego County, Cal.

I believe the condition of the Indians of Arizona, of New Mexico, of California, have not been improved under the Indian Bureau, but that they were better farmers before the Indian Bureau existed than now, because they knew they must support themselves. Now they have been taught that they are the "wards" of the country and this knowledge has had a demoralizing effect. It has removed the incentive to work and support themselves.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I only asked for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have not occupied much time, and I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time may be extended for five minutes.

Objection was made.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I did not object.

The CHAIRMAN. A gentleman on this side objected.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I ask, then, to have permission to print an extension of my remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from California will be satisfied with permission to print the remainder of his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the request. The gentleman from South Dakota requests unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Objection was made on the Democratic side.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The gentleman from South Dakota is recognized.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I trust this appropriation will remain in the bill. I do not understand how gentlemen can talk one day about practical education of the Indians and then the next day turn around and absolutely cut out the appropriation that makes education practical. In my opinion there is no more practical appropriation in the bill than this, which provides the means for farmers and for stock-raisers.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Can you tell me where there are twenty of them employed.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I defy the committee to tell where they are employed.

Mr. PICKLER. I think I have the floor. They are employed on all the agencies; and I want to say to the gentleman from California, as much as he says about the political farmers, I think they are practical farmers that are appointed, and none other can be appointed. The gentleman is speaking about the condition in California. Now, in my State, where there are 20,000 Sioux Indians, we have large tribes, and there is not a farmer who can teach them in an hour how to farm there as the gentleman of California claims can be done. We have any amount of grasses on the plains; if we could use these Indians we could utilize and make those grasses valuable. We want practical farmers; men who understand stock-raising; men who are well informed in regard to farming, and who are stock-raisers.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I would like to know who was there first?

Mr. PICKLER. Stock-raising is something that the Indian naturally takes to [laughter] more than he would to raising corn.

Mr. COOMBS. Or to raising scalps.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will be in order. The gentleman from South Dakota has the floor.

Mr. PICKLER. Gentlemen, this talk of scalping may be amusing to you; but if you gentlemen want practical results from this appropriation you can not get it any better than by having these practical farmers. I was saying that the Indian would prefer to raise stock; and I will also state that in that country farming may not be developed in many places, nor profitable in some places. This is a great service for them, to teach them, and I think it is a thing that should be encouraged in them. We want them to have these practical farmers, men who know something about raising stock.

I know that the farmers out in my country give very valuable instructions to the Indians. The farmer makes his rounds from farm to farm and teaches the Indians all about running their wagons and keeping them in repair; all about running their plows and sharpening them, and all about harrowing; all about everything connected with farming, planting, cultivating, and harvesting, and I say that this is one of the most beneficial appropriations in the way of practical results that is provided for in this bill.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Will the gentleman tell what are the going wages for farmers in that part of the country where they are hired?

Mr. PICKLER. The wages for farm hands in my county are $25 a month and board, and the amount provided in this bill, where the farmer travels and boards himself, is very little if any more than we pay farm hands in my county. This is not an extravagant appropriation. It is not a cent more than these farmers are worth. It is a reasonable appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask consent that all debate on this paragraph close in five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very practical question, and I trust that this committee will not strike out the appropriation. The idea that this is a waste of money is certainly a mistake. I live on the borders of three Indian reservations where, twelve years ago, there was scarcely an acre of land cultivated by an Indian, and now under the system providing for farmers to instruct the Indians in the methods by which they can earn a living from the land, the Crow Creek Reservation to-day has at least two hundred Indians who are cultivating farms all the way from ten to one hundred acres of land each, and doing it successfully. They have been taught by these farmers to cultivate their lands. They have been taught the methods of farming; they have been taught the lessons of economy and of industry, and all this instruction tends to elevate the Indian, and bring him up to that position that we desire to have him attain.

Not only that, but they have been taught the rules of business through these farmers. These men have gone from farm to farm and have instructed the Indians how to use their implements, how to keep them in repair, how to take care of them, and when they have raised their crops they have been taught how to market them, and I have seen a line of twenty or thirty Indian wagons loaded with the produce of their own farms, which they had raised through the instructions they had received at these agencies. To discontinue this appropriation would be to set those Indians back. It is a great mistake to attempt to economize at this particular point. Those Indians are now beginning to adopt the methods of husbandry that is practiced among the whites, and the policy of the Government should be to encourage and continue that progress and not to discourage it.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think that it would be better to wipe out this appropriation and save that much money, and let those Indians who wish to work at farming go and hire themselves to practical farmers? It seems to me that the farming education they would get in that way would be much more practical, while at the same time the Government would be saved this expense.

Mr. LUCAS. I think not; for this reason. These Indians are on reservations generally far removed from white farmers, and it would not be practicable to separate them from their families and distribute them among the white farmers.

Mr. PICKLER. And there are no white farmers there.

Mr. LUCAS. No.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Is there not a scarcity of farm labor?

Mr. LUCAS. No.

Mr. BOWERS of California. The white farmers hire the Indians in our country.

Mr. PICKLER. Why, Mr. Chairman, in the country the gentleman is talking about there are two thousand Indians on the reservation and there are no white farmers around them at all.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct. These Indians are living upon their own lands which have been allotted to them. They are living there with their families. They are learning to cultivate their lands to advantage, and the object of this appropriation is to continue to instruct them in farming methods, and in my opinion it is one of the most meritorious appropriations in this bill, because the instruction for which it provides tends to make the Indian entirely dependent upon himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. BOWERS] to strike out "seventy" before the word "thousand," and insert "five."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 8, noes 84.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to perfect the text.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 45, after line 4, add as follows: "and no person shall be employed as such farmer or stockman who has not been at least five years previous to such employment practically engaged in the occupation of farming."

Mr. HUNTER. That is the law now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that that is the law and has been ever since the Forty-eighth Congress, if I remember correctly. However, to save time, if the gentleman from Illinois will consent to a vote, I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. There can not be any debate upon the question because the committee has already by unanimous consent closed debate on this paragraph.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I do not think debate is closed on this.

The question was taken on the adoption of the amendment, and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I ask for a division. I ask unanimous consent that I may have two minutes to explain this amendment.

Mr. MADDOX. I object.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then, Mr. Chairman, let us have a division.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I ask that the amendment be again read, and let us have order so that it may be heard.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I ask to be allowed two minutes to explain this amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the amendment, except that it is the law now.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ah, but you left it out of the bill last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he be allowed to speak for two minutes.

Mr. MADDOX. I object.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. CANNON of Illinois, there were—ayes 60, noes 58.

Mr. MADDOX. I ask for tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. This provision is now the law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] ask for tellers?

Mr. MADDOX. I do.

[Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I make the point of order that the request of the gentleman from Georgia comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Tellers were not ordered, only 25 voting in favor thereof.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars" in line 14, page 45, insert:
"Provided, That such practical farmers and practical stockmen shall be appointed from the State or Territory in which said agency is located."

Mr. MADDOX. I raise a point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia makes a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. WILSON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph has been exhausted. The committee, by unanimous consent, agreed to close debate on the paragraph; and debate is not now in order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, Mr. Chairman, I may have been in fault, but I did not hear——

[Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. MADDOX. I insist that the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from Georgia will make nothing by his haste.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Washington does not wish to violate the rules of the House——

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Certainly not.

The CHAIRMAN. Or the agreement entered into by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. But I wish to state that I did not hear, nor do I think members around me heard, the request put by the Chair for unanimous consent to close debate on this paragraph. And further, it is a well-known fact——

Mr. MADDOX. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, under the rules, can not allow this debate.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Very well, I will get in what I have to say on this subject if it takes all day and twenty days more.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian girls in housekeeping and other household duties, at a rate not to exceed $60 per month, and for furnishing necessary equipments, $5,000.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I move to amend by striking out the last three words. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the House for a moment while I give the reasons why I oppose this provision.

Mr. MADDOX. I rise to a point of order. I believe debate on this paragraph was exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. This is another paragraph.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman from Georgia does not know "where we are at."

Mr. MADDOX. You never do.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Of course not, according to the estimate of the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has the floor.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to state the point I make against this provision of the bill. All of us who know anything about farming know that the ordinary wages of a farmer are about $20 to $25 a month; and girls who work upon farms, doing housework, etc., receive on the average $8, $10, and $12 a month. Now, the trouble is——

Mr. TRACEY. It is impossible to hear the gentleman from California, there is so much noise in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Now, you propose to give to these women engaged to teach the Indian girls "housekeeping and other household duties" $60 a month; and you propose to give the farmers $75 a month. We all know that there are farmers all over the United States who would be very glad to get $25 a month. They would have been very glad during the last two or three years to have received $25 a month. We know, too, that these men engaged as "farmers" in connection with the Indian service do not do any work besides drawing their wages, except perhaps giving some directions.

Now, the point I am making is that we are not doing what is fair and right in this matter. We tell our farming people when we employ them to work on our farms that we are only willing to give you $15 or $20 a month at the outside; but if you can get an appointment as an Indian farmer we will pay you $75 a month. It is all wrong. It is a wrong to the people of the country, and especially a wrong to the laboring people. It is wrong to make these men pay such wages for such soft places. You all know it is wrong, and you know that the purpose is a selfish one, so as to secure some favored appointee a soft place somewhere. [Laughter and applause.] You are squandering the public money to do it, and the sooner it is stopped the better. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. PICKLER. I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph. Debate, I believe, is exhausted?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been closed by order of the committee.

The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "five," in line 19, page 45, and insert the word "ten."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the service of not exceeding eight hundred and fifty privates, at $10 per month each, and not exceeding seventy-five officers, at $15 per month each, of Indian police, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations and within the Territory of Alaska, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of equipments and for the purchase of rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $125,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I move to strike out in line 3, on page 46, the word "twenty-five" and insert "fifty;" so that it will read, "one hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

I make that motion with an interrogation point after it. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why it is that the appropriation for the Indian police is decreased $25,000? One hundred and fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for the current year, and you now propose $125,000.

Mr. SICKLES. They behave better now.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I want the gentleman to answer, in his own time, if in his opinion the good of the service will permit this reduction. If so I have no objection to it.

But I wish to say further that I had a little observation of this question some years ago, in a somewhat extended investigation of the Indian service in connection with the gentleman from Indiana himself, which satisfied me that the Indian police service was perhaps the most valuable service in connection with the Indians.

When you employ an Indian and clothe him with authority as an officer of the Government, at a small salary, of $10 to $25 a month, he is in touch with his fellows, and he can do more to keep them in subjection I think than perhaps half a dozen white men can do. It is an economical service, and a service that I would sooner see increased than decreased, because it is along the line of practical education and administration; and therefore I make this motion for the purpose of eliciting from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] a statement as to the change, if any, in the situation that justifies the decrease of this appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say that there was no intention to change the pay of the privates from $10 per month. Nor was there any intention to change the compensation of the officers from $15 per month. Whether the footing is correct or not, I do not know. There was no intention to make a change in the rates of compensation. So that for the purpose of looking into the matter, I ask that this be passed over for the present.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. For investigation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; I ask that the paragraph be passed over.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. That is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be passed over.

The Clerk, resuming the reading of the bill, read as follows:

For the purpose of continuing and completing the appraisal of improvements of intruders in the Cherokee Nation under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1893, $4,993, the same to be immediately available.

Mr. FLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 48, add——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment offered by the the gentleman from Oklahoma, which the Clerk is reporting. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 23, page 48, add:

"That the right of commutation is extended to all bona fide homestead settlers on the lands in Oklahoma Territory opened to settlement under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894,' approved March 3, 1893, and the President's proclamation in pursuance thereof, after fourteen months from date of settlement, upon the payment for the lands as provided in said act."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to examine the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, and for that purpose I wish to reserve the point of order until the gentleman is heard.

Mr. FLYNN. I contend that this amendment reduces expenditures. When the Government purchased the Cherokee Strip from the Cherokee Indians it issued Government paper in the amount of about $18,000,000, bearing 4 per cent interest. There is no section of Oklahoma Territory which to-day has not the right of commutation granted to it. The settlers residing upon these lands, for which they are compelled to pay two dollars and a half an acre, have petitioned for the right after fourteen months' residence, to pay the Government the money which is due to it, so that the Government will not be compelled to continue paying interest to the Indians upon this money.

I have no doubt that as soon as this becomes the law and the fourteen months expire, two or three million dollars will at once be turned into the Treasury of the United States, thereby stopping the payment of 4 per cent interest on that amount of money. I insist that when a man has got to pay for his land, after he resides upon it for fourteen months, he has earned it. The condition of the country to-day is such that we should be anxious to get every dollar into the Treasury that we legitimately can, and this, as I say, will immediately bring in two or three million dollars to the Treasury and stop the Government paying 4 per cent interest on that amount of money. I might say that this bill has been favorably reported, for a similar provision is engrafted in a bill favorably reported by the Committee on Public Lands. If gentlemen are desirous of economizing and having money enough in the Treasury to pay the running expenses of the Government, they can here, without injustice to any body and with fairness to the people in the Cherokee Strip, stop the payment of 4 per cent interest on $3,000,000, and have that amount of money turned into the Treasury.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is quite an important provision, and it changes existing law, so that for the present I shall have to insist on the point of order. The committee have not had an opportunity of examining the amendment.

Mr. FLYNN. Will the gentleman consent to allow it to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. HOLMAN. I should rather not do that.

Mr. FLYNN. The gentleman from Indiana is in favor of bringing money into the Treasury and reducing expenditures, of course?

Mr. HOLMAN. We wish to guard against any injury to the public lands.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. What objection is there to letting this matter go over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think we ought to do that. We have had no time to consider this, and it is a very important change in the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 23, page 48, insert the following:

"Provided, That paragraph 4, of section 10, of 'An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes, for fiscal year ending June 30, 1894,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"'And the provisions of said agreement so amended shall be fully performed and carried out on the part of the United States: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be immediately available and the remaining sum of $8,300,000, or so much thereof as is required to carry out the provisions of said agreement as amended and according to this act (to be payable at the pleasure of the United States in one or more payments after the 4th day of March, 1900, said deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, to be paid semiannually), and the amount required for the payment of interest as aforesaid is hereby appropriated: And provided further, That of the money hereby contracted to be paid, a sufficient amount to pay the Delawares and Shawnees their pro rata share in the proceeds of said Outlet shall remain in the Treasury of the United States until the status of said Delaware and Shawnee Indians shall be determined by the courts of the United States before which their suits are now pending; and a sufficient amount shall also be retained in the Treasury to pay the freedmen who are citizens of the Cherokee Nation or their legal heirs and representatives such sums as may be determined by the courts of the United States to be due to them. Nor shall anything herein be held to abridge or deny to said freedmen any rights to which they may be entitled under existing laws or treaties. The acceptance by the Cherokee Nation of Indians of any of the money appropriated as herein set forth shall be considered and taken and shall operate as a ratification by said Cherokee Nation of Indians of said agreement, as it is hereby proposed to be amended, and as a full and complete relinquishment and extinguishment of all their title, claim, and interest in and to said lands; but such relinquishment and extinguishment shall not inure to the benefit of any railroad company, nor vest in any railroad company any right, title, or interest in or to any of said lands: Provided, That said railroad shall be relieved from any further payments of compensation to said Cherokee Nation as required by law for running said railroad across said Cherokee Outlet: Provided further, That the extension of the time of payment, as above provided for, shall only become binding on the Cherokee Nation or its assigns, or on either of them, after the same shall have been accepted for the amounts of indebtedness which they hold respectively, and notice in writing of such acceptance duly filed with the Secretary of the Department of the Interior.'"

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, the amendment just read by the Clerk seeks to amend the act providing for the purchase of the Cherokee Outlet. The House will remember that this act was the result of a conference report agreed upon late in the night of the last day of the Fifty-second Congress. That act provided for dividing the payments into five equal annual installments, the supposition at the time being that the money to be paid for the lands by settlers would meet these various installments. It soon became evident that this calculation was very erroneous, and Senator JONES of Arkansas introduced Senate bill 515 as a proposed amendment to said act.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriation for current and contingent expenses, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894."

Be it enacted, etc., That the word "semi" shall be inserted before the word "annually" in the ninth and tenth lines of the fifth paragraph of section 10 of said act, so that it shall read: "said deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum semiannually."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, if it shall be deemed necessary, to secure loan authorized by said act to modify the terms of the contract authorized in the first paragraph of section 10 of said act, and the fifth paragraph of said section 10, so that instead of five equal annual installments shall read: "The first installment being held by the Secretary of the Interior to meet certain payments, the second, third, fourth, and fifth installments may be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 4th of March, A. D. 1899, or redeemed March 4, A. D. 1900.

The bill was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury and by him referred to the Secretary of the Interior by the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., August 23, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of Senate bill No. 515, to amend certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year 1894, approved March 3, 1893; also copy of a letter on this subject addressed to me by William. A Phillips for the Cherokee Nation.

I shall be pleased to have your opinion as to the probable time when the Government will be in receipt of the proceeds arising from the sale of the Cherokee lands which have been purchased and are to be paid for under the provisions of the act above mentioned.

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The Secretary of the Interior replied to this letter on August 30, fully considering the conditions under which the lands were being occupied by settlers. The letter closed with these words:

On review of the whole subject, and giving to it the fullest consideration, it is the opinion of this Department that it would not be safe to count upon a receipt of more than one-third of the proceeds of the sale before the end of seven years from the opening of the Outlet to settlement and the balance at the end of ten years.

The Secretary of the Treasury then returned Senate bill 515 to the Senate, accompanied by the following letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., August 31, 1893.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 15th ultimo requesting my views as to the legislation proposed in Senate bill No. 515, amending certain portions of the act of March 3, 1893, under which a contract was recently executed with the Cherokee Indians for the sale of certain lands, I have the honor to state that I approve of such a modification of the contract above mentioned as will enable the United States to defer paying the second, third, fourth, and fifth installments of the purchase money of said lands, until a part, at least, of the proceeds of sales to settlers shall have been received into the Treasury.

In this connection I transmit a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the time which must elapse before the Treasury will receive the proceeds of said lands; and I also submit draft of a bill which, in my opinion, would accomplish the object if enacted into law.

Respectfully yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. JAMES K. JONES,
United States Senate.

My information is that upon receipt of this letter, the Senate Committee upon Indian Affairs considered bill No. 515, and directed its favorable report to the Senate, with the modification suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, but soon thereafter an erroneous impression was created that the necessity for the legislation did not longer exist, and the bill was never placed upon the Senate Calendar and the papers became mislaid.

Mr. FLYNN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Yes, sir.

Mr. FLYNN. If the amendment which I just offered were allowed to prevail, is it not a fact that there would be no necessity for this, as the money would be paid in by the settlers?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The Secretary of the Treasury thinks it would not.

Mr. FLYNN. The Secretary of the Treasury does not know anything about it. It is the business of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The Secretary of the Treasury has made an exhaustive examination, and we have letters from the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. FLYNN. Is it not a fact that the Cherokees have parted with all interest in these bonds, and that they are now held by Eastern banks?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. They did part with a greater portion of the Government obligation, but not all.

Mr. FLYNN. How much is there remaining in their hands?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. About one-fifth.

In the meantime the Council of the Cherokee Nation passed a resolution appointing a commission to negotiate a sale of a portion of the obligation of the Government which was due them, and the same resolution empowered and directed the commissioners to secure from the Government such modifications of the act creating the obligation as might be desired by the purchasers of the obligation, of course with the condition that such modifications should meet the approval of the Government.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Do you provide here that nothing shall be done without the consent of the Cherokee Nation?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Certainly; and it will be filed in writing. I trust there will be no objection to this, because it is essential for the settlement of this business.

It is recommended by everyone connected with the matter. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior, recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and requested by every person that has an interest in the Government obligation.

Mr. LYNCH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. Certainly.

Mr. LYNCH. Has this bill ever been considered by a standing committee of the House?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I saw the subcommittee, and the gentleman who asks me the question told me that he would advocate it.

Mr. LYNCH. I do not recollect.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I had a talk with you, and with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], and every member of the committee I could find. I went to the committee room several times, and I thought every member of the committee favored the amendment.

Mr. LYNCH. It seems to me that this is too important a matter to be disposed of under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The only change it makes in the law of 1893 is this, that instead of having the payments run along for five years, it allows it all to be paid at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to have a few minutes more.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then, make it three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. PICKLER. I would suggest that this amendment go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. There is but very little difference between this amendment and the existing law. It simply changes the time of payment and then it makes no other material change.

The original act provided for the retention in the Treasury a sufficient amount to pay the Delawares and Shawnees and freedmen the amounts which might be found to be due them.

It was estimated that this would take about one and a half million dollars, and the meaning of the act evidently was that this money should be retained out of the money contracted to be paid, but the wording of the act was—

That of the money hereby appropriated a sufficient amount to pay the Delawares and Shawnees their pro rata share in the proceeds of said Outlet shall remain in the Treasury of the United States until the status of said Delaware and Shawnee Indians shall be determined by the courts of the United States, before which their suits are now pending.

Now, the original act does not appropriate any part of money contracted to be paid, but only appropriates the interest, and in order to comply with the letter of the law and at the same time administer the act, so as to carry out the evident meaning and intention of Congress, it is necessary to substitute for the words "hereby appropriated," the words "hereby contracted to be paid."

This could have been accomplished by a short bill substituting words, but it is better practice in amending a paragraph of a law to set out the entire paragraph in the language which is proposed to be substituted for the original.

Again, the original act authorized the Cherokee Nation to issue bonds for the principal and interest of the deferred payments, and as the act provided that the debt should be divided into five payments, it would of necessity require the issuance of five different series of bonds, which would involve considerable useless expense, all of which would be saved if all was made payable at the same time, so as to require but one series of bonds.

It will be observed that the Secretary of the Treasury recommended this amendment last summer. He afterwards verbally recommended the amendment in the language as read at the Clerk's desk, and recently the Secretary of the Treasury has again in a letter to Mr. HOLMAN, the distinguished chairman of the committee on Indian Affairs, commended the amendment as read by the Clerk.

In addition the Hon. J. W. MADDOX, a member of the subcommittee which has the bill in charge, informs me that he submitted the amendment to the Secretary of the Interior, who also recommends its adoption.

I will remind the gentleman from South Dakota that he is one of the gentlemen of the committee to whom I submitted the amendment, and he assured me that it met his full approval.

It seems that the proposed slight modification of the law is desired by the Treasury Department, the Interior Department, the Indians and their assignees, and it also appears that it will be beneficial to all parties, an do not a particle of injury to anyone. I therefore trust no one will make any objection.

It is clear that the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Under the law as it stands one installment of $1,660,000 will be payable March 4, 1895, during the current year for which this bill provides, and therefore it would be the duty of Congress to include an appropriation for that amount in this bill.

Now, this amendment is in the nature of a substitute for such an appropriation, and therefore reduces the bill by that amount.

Then it is certainly germane to the bill, and it is eminently proper for the Indian appropriation bill of 1894 to correct or amend the the Indian appropriation bill for 1893.

For years it has been the practice in Congress to incorporate in appropriation bills amendments to previous appropriation bills which appropriate for the same general purpose.

This has been a so very universal practice that it would be difficult to find adjudications in cases like the present.

I recall one in the first session of the last Congress. It was then decided, page 1792, that—

An amendment to the pension appropriation bill providing that no fee shall be paid to a member of an examining board for services in which he did not actually participate is not subject to a point of order under this rule, since, while changing existing law, its effect is to reduce expenditures by decreasing compensation.

The case under consideration is somewhat similar. The effect of the amendment now before the House is to reduce the amount of the appropriation for the current year, which is the same as reducing the amount of money covered by the bill. Again, in the Fifty-second Congress, first session, page 1792, it was decided that—

An amendment to the pension appropriation bill, tending to increase the class of persons prohibited from the benefits of the pension laws, is in order, because its effect would be to reduce expenditures.

This amendment has the same tendency.

It certainly tends to increase the items which can properly be omitted from the bill, and its effect is to reduce expenditures for the current year.

I could multiply similar decisions, but I feel confident that it is unnecessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. What about the railroads? I did not understand what it provided about the railroads from the reading of the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It does not change that. There are no changes except as I have explained. The amendment uses the exact language of the original act, except the change in the time of payment, which is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the substitution of the words "contracted to be paid" for the word "appropriated," and this, too, is recommended by Mr. Carlisle.

The only other change is the correction of the spelling of the word Shawnees.

The amendment is a printed copy of the bill which was printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs many weeks ago, a copy of which the gentleman from Indiana referred to Mr. Carlisle, and which Mr. Carlisle, the Secretary of the Treasury, sent back with his approval and recommendation to the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

In addition I have had other letters read in which the Secretary of the Treasury recommends the passage of a similar Senate bill, and have also read an extract from a letter from the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will you not send up the letter of the Secretary of the Interior, and let that be read?

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. It is a long letter. I read the closing part early in my remarks. I would be glad to have the entire letter read. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 30, 1893.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of August 23, 1893, transmitting a copy of Senate bill No. 515 to amend certain provisions of the Indian appropriation act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat., 612, 641, and 642); also copy of a letter from Mr. William A. Phillips to you in relation to the proposed amendments. Referring to the inclosures, you request my "opinion as to the probable time when the Government will be in receipt of the proceeds arising from the" lands in the Cherokee Outlet, purchased and to be paid for under the provisions of said act.

The inquiry you make is a difficult one to answer, with even an approximation to exactness, because of the very many contingencies which may arise under the legislation relating to the subject-matter.

Under the terms of said act and the rules and regulations established by authority thereof, the ceded lands in the Outlet can only be disposed of under the homestead laws; and paragraph 7 of said section 10 declares that each settler on said lands "shall, before receiving patent for his homestead," pay to the United States for the lands so taken by him $2.50 per acre for land east of 97½° west longitude; $1.50 per acre for land between 97½° and 98½° of west longitude, and $1 per acre for land west of 98½° of west longitude; and shall pay interest on the purchase money at the rate of 4 per cent per annum from date of entry. It is thus seen that the entryman is only required to pay for the land "before receiving patent."

Under the homestead laws, five years' residence, etc., is required before an entryman will be entitled to patent, and proof of such residence, etc., must be made within seven years from date of entry. Under the rules of the Department, the payment of the purchase money for the land, with the interest thereon, is required to be made at the time that final proof is submitted.

Therefore, if each quarter section of land were entered at the time of the opening of the Outlet by a party who is able and willing in good faith to comply with the requirements of the homestead laws, and acquire the same as a permanent home for himself, the earliest day at which the proceeds of the sales would be in the hands of the officers of the Government would be five years after opening, or in September, 1898; to this should be added the time necessary for the transmission of the money to the Treasury. But it is safe to say that no such promptitude will be exhibited, and it is far more probable that the larger number of those who will be promptest to prove up and pay up will take the full time allowed—that is, seven years.

There are some few grounds, such as sickness or climatic reasons, on which the Department may be induced in individual cases to extend for a year the period within which proof is to be submitted.

But it is most improbable that all of the first entries will be made for permanent settlement. On the contrary, looking to the experience of the Department in land matters, it is safe to say that not over one-third of the first entrymen will consummate their entries by purchase. The contests, because of disqualifications or of other sufficient causes, alone will reduce the number. Inability from sickness, impecuniosity, or other causes will induce many abandonments, and the constant temptation to sell out and relinquish the right of entry offered by speculators or newcomers will reduce the number more than all the other causes put together.

Under the law a party might enter a tract, hold it for seven years or less time, and then sell his relinquishment to another who would make entry and who could proceed exactly in the same way—sell to another in six months or six years, and so on indefinitely.

It is further to be considered that the land in the western portion of the Outlet is reported as being poor and undesirable, the price being reduced for those reasons to $1 per acre. These lands in all probability will not be so readily entered or proven upon as the others, and further and greater delay in payment may occur as to them than the others.

On review of the whole subject, and giving to it the fullest consideration, it is the opinion of this Department that it would not be safe to count upon a receipt of more than one-third of the proceeds of the sale before the end of seven years from the opening of the Outlet to settlement, and the balance at the end of ten years.

Very respectfully,

JNO. M. REYNOLDS,
Acting Secretary.

To the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. HOLMAN. This subject is one of interest; perhaps it has not been considered by all the members of the committee. I would ask that the gentleman have permission to print this letter in the RECORD, so that it will appear to-morrow morning, and let the amendment go over with the point of order pending.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the amendment go over until to-morrow, with the point of order pending. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. How often are we going backwards and forwards in this matter?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. By agreement, this whole paragraph goes over until to-morrow.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following paragraph:

For support of Indian day and industrial schools and the erection and repair of school buildings on Indian reservations, and for other educational purposes not hereinafter provided for, including the pay of the superintendent of Indian schools the salary of $2,500 with traveling expenses as prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and pay of draftsman to be employed in the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, $1,000,000, $20,000 of which may be used for the purchase of horses, cattle, sheep, goats, and swine, and poultry for schools, and $30,000 for the transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools: Provided, That not more than $167 of this appropriation shall be expended for the annual support and education of any one pupil, except in such cases as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior a larger expenditure is absolutely necessary to prevent a serious impairment of the efficiency of the school, a full statement of the specific reasons for such additional expenditure to be made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in his annual report: And provided further, That no more than three supervisors of Indian schools shall be appointed or paid from this fund: And also provided, That $3,000 of the amount hereby appropriated shall be expended in the construction of school buildings for the Cherokee Training School at Cherokee, N. C.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that it might be well to ask unanimous consent that all the paragraphs in the bill touching appropriations for schools should be treated as one, should all be read as one paragraph, and then should be open to amendment. I make this suggestion because that method of considering these paragraphs would give scope for amendment that would be uniform in the event of any amendments being adopted, and also scope for a substitute or substitutes if such should be the sense of the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection myself, Mr. Chairman, to that suggestion, but the question has not been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs. If the gentleman's suggestion should be adopted, I suppose the paragraphs would be treated as one down to the end of page 58.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LYNCH. I object to the request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH] think it will not be advisable to read these paragraphs through together and have them subject to amendment?

Mr. LYNCH. I think we had better proceed in the regular way. We shall get through faster.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No, you will not make any time in that way, because unless some concession can be made to this side on some of these matters along some line, we shall have to use what privileges we have later on and make the point of no quorum.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer some amendments on behalf of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will first recognize the chairman of the committee to offer the committee amendments, and after that will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. HOLMAN. I am directed by the committee to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 49, line 22, where the name "Ware" occurs after the letter "W," insert the letter "e;" making the name read "Weare."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I object.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 56, noes 4.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is simply for the purpose of correcting the mis-spelling of a name, and I withdraw it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It is too late, after a division has been had.

The CHAIRMAN. If objection is made the amendment cannot be withdrawn. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Washington, Mr. WILSON, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN.

The tellers took their places, and the committee again divided.

Mr. WILSON of Washington (pending the division). I withdraw the point of no quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn, and the amendment is agreed to.

An amendment previously sent up by Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "two thousand five hundred," in lines 12, page 50, and insert in lieu thereof the words "three thousand."

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Judge HOLMAN, who opposed with such vigor the other day the appropriation of $5,000 to defray the expenses of the Board of Indian Commissioners, whether he will not consent that this amendment, putting back the salary of the superintendent of Indian schools to the amount at which it now stands, may be adopted?

Mr. HOLMAN. I could not consent to that without consulting with the members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Indiana desires to offer any other amendments on behalf of the committee?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. I wish to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 50, line 11, insert after the word "school" the words "and twenty-five hundred dollars of this fund is also hereby made available for the pay of one superintendent of Indian schools, and one thousand for the pay of the necessary traveling and incidental expenses of said superintendent."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. One other amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "one million," in line 15, insert "and seventy thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized to offer his amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana was read, as follows:

Strike out the words "two thousand five hundred" on line 12, of page 50, and insert in lieu thereof the words "three thousand."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on that amendment. It strikes out language which has just been inserted by order of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana if that was his purpose in getting his amendment in first—to cut out my amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, not at all. On the contrary, this was agreed to soon after the bill was reported to the House.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed ten minutes.

Mr. WEADOCK. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, while the debate with respect to this bill has been progressing, I have not been entirely without information as to the character of the measure, or as to the circumstances attending its birth. The bill upon its face seems to have some peculiarities, and I think it may be said to be somewhat unique in its formation. It is certainly loaded down with various kinds of sins, those of commission as well as those of omission. Members of the committee, and pretty bright members, too, have told me that the bill had undergone so many changes at the hands of the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who has had it in charge, that it became absolutely impossible for them to follow it, and that they had thrown up their hands in despair. That the gentleman is largely controlling this bill is evident from the parliamentary maneuver which we have just witnessed, the sole purpose of which was to prevent an increase of the salary of an officer of this Government, who deserves every dime which the amendment I propose would give him.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend knows——

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman will please not interrupt me. I am not in a mood to be interrupted.

Mr. HOLMAN again made a remark.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman is consuming my time, and I do not desire to be interrupted. I desire to be heard through.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEADOCK], who objected to extending the gentleman's time, is now ready to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WEADOCK. I was under a misapprehension in objecting.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to allowing the gentleman from Indiana ten minutes?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no objection, if the same courtesy is to be allowed on this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. With that understanding, the Chair hears no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, as to the circumstances of the birth of this bill, inasmuch as I have not the honor to be a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I trust that if I happen to divulge some of the secrets of the committee room it will not be thought that I am violating either the etiquette or the ethics of parliamentary law. I understand that in the first place the formulation of this place was referred to a subcommittee of which the chairman of the full committee was also chairman, and that when the result of the labor of this subcommittee was reported back to the full committee, it had so unmercifully and outrageously "cut" the appropriations which are usually made for the benefit of the Indian service that out of a sheer feeling of shame and self-respect the full committee enlarged the measure to its present ample proportions, proportions so gigantic that I believe they fall only about $320,000 short of the amount which the sworn officers of the Government have solemnly declared was necessary for the decent administration of the Indian Bureau, and only about $1,200,000 short of the amount appropriated for the current year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to what end is all this? Under what banner is this pretended battle for frugality being waged? What is the significance of the red cross which this new crusade bears upon its breast? I lower my voice to a respectful and awe-stricken tone when I inform the House that it is all done under the Democratic shibboleth of "economy, retrenchment, and reform." I have no doubt that, considered from the mere standpoint of dollars and cents, the mere saving of money, this bill is a great achievement on the part of the committee, especially when one loses sight of the ulterior consequences which are to flow from this niggardly economy, and lays out of view entirely all the sacrifices which it necessarily entails.

So far as I am personally concerned, however, I trust I may be pardoned if I suggest that it might not have been an unstatesmanlike thing to have considered somewhat the humanities in the formulation of this bill; and that it might also not have been a bad thing to have considered something as to the education, the civilization, and the moral and physical advancement of the North American Indian. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that I am a very great fool. In fact a number of people have been kind enough to suggest to me this fact as I have limped haltingly along the humble and mediocre pathway of my uneventful life; and I have also evolved this knowledge from my inner consciousness, in those reflective and introspective moods in which I have sometimes been compelled to indulge with the view of relieving the monotony of my existence.

But poorly equipped as I am, I think I have rubbed up against my fellow-men enough to have acquired some knowledge of human nature; and I have not put my hand on the public pulse without being able to give some kind of a guess as to what were the sentiments of my countrymen. And I am very much mistaken if the American people have not sufficient sense of discrimination to distinguish between that just economy in the expenditure of the public money which the gentleman who is chairman of this committee seems sedulously to have avoided and that parsimonious disposition which he seems steadily to have courted in the formulation of this bill.

If I am not wrong about this matter, when the people have an opportunity to express themselves at the polls this enlightened sense of public discrimination will bear proper fruit. If it does not, I am willing here and now to say that I will come back to this House after the November election and get down on my marrow bones to the distinguished economist from Indiana, apologize to him, and make reparation to him if I have done him any wrong, and I will also cheerfully in this prediction admit to my colleagues and the country that I am not only the fastest talker, but also the most unscrupulous liar in the American Congress. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the North American Indians have been subjected to a great many hardships and trials during their existence. The marrow in their bones has been congealed by borean blasts; they have been the victims of tornadoes which have visited the country where they reside. They have not always come off first best in their struggles with "fire-water;" for the American Indian, like one of the leading characters in one of Mr. Thackeray's novels, is sometimes his own worst enemy. They have been afflicted with contagious diseases; they have been robbed without stint by post traders, and unmercifully plundered by Government officials. They have been gradually pressed back from the land of their fathers toward the setting sun, until at last they are entrenched simply on a miserable remnant of land in the shape of reservations, and the white man is now seeking to despoil him even of those.

But with all these evils I doubt whether the noble red men have ever stood in the presence of a genuine calamity until they faced the gentleman from Indiana as chairman of the Committee on Indian Appropriations. I have no doubt that if the aborigines who greeted Columbus when he landed on this continent had been gifted with the power to look down the vista of the future and see what was to befall them and their posterity, they would not have been appalled at anything until they saw the apparition of the gentleman from Indiana in the noonday of the nineteenth century, standing up in the American House of Commons with his well-known face, begrimed all over with the war paint of economy, holding in the one hand his scalping knife and in the other that instrument of still worse torture, his contemptible, penurious Indian appropriation bill, and with the scalps of his victims dangling on the belt which encircles his familiar form.

I have no doubt that if they had witnessed that sight they would have committed suicide then and there in the presence of the adventurous Spaniard, preferring to die by their own hand rather than live to breed a posterity which, after enduring so many trials, would finally be totally exterminated by the slow and tedious process of starvation, through the manipulation of an Indian appropriation bill in the hands of the gentleman from Indiana.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask that my time may be extended.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the problem what to do with the North American Indian is one which has invited the attention of a great many mediocre men in Congress, and of some of the wisest men outside of Congress. There has been some diversity of opinion as to what we ought to do with "poor Lo." Some men have thought he ought to be ostracised, or what is about the same thing, ought to be colonized. Some idealists have said that he ought to be Christianized. Philanthropists have said he ought to be civilized; and some gentlemen, judging from their conduct, have thought that he ought to be brutalized.

But I think we are a great deal nearer the solution of the Indian problem now than we ever were before. I think that if we just give full range to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs for about two or three years, he will solve the much discussed problem—not solve it probably along the line of humanity, but solve it very effectually, nevertheless; for, with all the physical hardihood and vitality of the average North American Indian, I doubt very sincerely whether he has constitution enough to live very long under the system of legislative strangulation which the gentleman manifests the disposition to apply. And it will not be long before he will turn up his toes, go under the daisies, and be gathered into the happy hunting grounds of his fathers.

Now, Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen, who ignore the fact that language is the most appropriate vehicle through which to express thought, and have been content to make their meaning apparent by sundry and divers mysterious winks, nods, and gesticulations, have been unkind enough to intimate hereabouts that there was a specific purpose and deep design behind the promotion—mark you, I say the promotion—of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to a chairmanship where he controls one appropriation, from a chairmanship where he controlled all appropriations. It has been unkindly insinuated, I believe, that certain gentlemen who had a very high estimate of the value of Indian lands, and a very low estimate of the value of Indian lives, and who wanted to get hold of the remnant of the Indian's property, had insisted that the gentleman should be appointed to the chairmanship of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Now, I am not disposed to say that that charge is true, because if it is true it necessarily involves the honorable Speaker of this House in the unpleasant alternative of being either an idiot or a knave; an idiot if he permitted such a covert and cruel scheme for the extermination of the North American Indian to be carried right on under his nose without perceiving it, and a knave if, having observed what was going on, he consented to allow such a thing to be done. Be that as it may, I want to suggest that the gentleman from Indiana, by the little parliamentary artifice to which he resorted a little bit ago, as well as by his general conduct with reference to appropriations, has taken a long step toward the extermination of the dusky son of the forest. I very much doubt whether the average chief, by the time he has run the guantlet of the present appropriation bill, along with his squaw and papoose, and a buck or two, will have much left him outside of a greasy blanket or so and a spavined pony or two from the whole domestic outfit with which he is at present provided.

Such, Mr. Chairman, is the possibility from the manipulation of an appropriation bill. Verily, verily, all wisdom did not die with the fathers, but some of it has survived to the present generation. I want to suggest to the gentleman that this parsimonious legislation of his is a beautiful spectacle to present to the country and the world. It simply illustrates, as I have said, the possibilities in the hands of a small and penurious man, of juggling with one of the greatest appropriation bills introduced by one of the greatest committees in the greatest legislative body of the greatest nation upon the face of the globe.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think the attack that has been made on the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] by his colleague [Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana] is one that is thoroughly uncalled for.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not notice such trash. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. However much I may disagree with Judge HOLMAN'S ideas of economy, I do not propose to stand by and see such an attack made on him in the House of Representatives without showing that I for one resent it. From my boyhood I have read of him as a gentleman who has done more to prevent steals, to carry on our Government under rigid economy, to enact appropriations in the interest of American people, than any other member who in the last third of a century has found a seat upon this floor, and after hearing such an attack on him, I can not refuse to say that I utterly disagree with it, and that I think it ought to be resented.

Now, as to this appropriation for Indian schools; two years ago, when my attention was first called to it, I was utterly opposed to the idea of educating the Indians at all, because all the information that I had had upon that subject in the past had led me to believe that the result of the education that was given to the Indians had been disastrous to the Indians and wasteful and expensive to the Government of the United States. But of late I have had some experience upon that subject, and I am somewhat a convert to the doctrine of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and to the remarks that he gave here upon the floor of the House yesterday; and I must say that, as I listened to the remarks of that gentleman, I was forcibly reminded of what was once said of Edmund Burke. I felt sorry that the gentleman from Maine so often gave up to party what was meant for mankind.

I was some months ago a visitor at the Indian school at Hampton. I was there for several days and I had an opportunity to observe for myself the effect that was brought about by the education of the Indians. I saw there a large number of pupils who had been there for a few years and another number who had recently come in, and I found that the difference between the Indian girls and the Indian boys who had had one or two years of instruction, and those who were new recruits, was as wide and as far apart as the poles.

I saw Indian girls there who were competent to be sent forth as teachers, who could converse in the English language, who were able to talk on literature, on critical and scientific subjects, with a facility that utterly surprised me. I am a convert, sir, to the theory of the gentleman from Maine—that is, that our fault is thus far that we are educating too few of these people. The trouble is that the few we have educated, when they are sent back and circulate amongst the great mass of the Indians, are not sufficient in numbers to do any great amount of good, and the tendency on their part is to lapse to their original condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana increasing this salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have made the point of order against the amendment, Mr. Chairman, that it proposes to strike out matter which has been inserted by a vote of the committee.

Mr. PICKLER. That was simply perfecting the text; that would not affect the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think it is in order to move to strike out matter that has just been inserted by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It is within the power of the committee to do so. The insertion of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana certainly would not affect the power of the committee to strike out the entire paragraph, nor would it prevent the offering of the amendment proposed by his colleague, which is to increase the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I beg to differ with the Chair. While this matter was pending and before the committee had taken action upon it under the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs, it would have been entirely in order to move to strike out the $2,500 fixed in the paragraph and insert $3,000, or any other sum, but after the adoption of the amendment fixing the salary at $2,500, it seems to be entirely inconsistent with the rules of the House that you may go back and amend the paragraph still further.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on this amendment, and I ask the committee to give me its attention for a few minutes while I call attention to the facts in connection with it.

The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized by the Chair as the prevailing amendment, the Chair, as I understand it, having overruled the point of order, and the proposition is to increase the compensation of the Superintendent of Indian Schools $500—that is, leave it at what it was last year, the proposition of the committee being to reduce it $500.

This Superintendent of Schools under the last Administration and for the last two years received $4,000 per annum. It was afterwards cut down to $3,500 per annum, and afterwards to $3,000. Now, when the gentleman that has been appointed under this Administration, Prof. Hailmann, who is from the gentleman's own State of Indiana, takes charge of this important work—and I know of no greater work than is given to this Superintendent——

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. PICKLER. Not now. I say when this gentleman has been appointed to this important position and the salary of $3,000 is fixed by law, I think it altogether unfair to undertake to cut it down, especially when it is already a low salary in view of the importance of the work that he is called upon to perform. It is an exceedingly important position. The Superintendent of Indian Schools has charge of all the Indian schools in the United States. It is one of the most important positions in the Government, and this Indian service depends largely, as I know personally, upon the Superintendent of Schools.

Now, it was proposed, in the first place, and the majority of the committee gave its assent to it, to abolish the office. Better judgment, however, finally prevailed; but it is proposed now to cut the salary down $500. That is not fair. He is not that kind of a man. In my opinion he is a valuable man, one of the most valuable that could be appointed, and is worth the price. The service he performs is most valuable. It is worth more than the service which is rendered in most of other schools in the United States; and this gentleman could command an equal or a larger salary in any other school throughout the country. There is only one such position in the United States. With the large number of Indian schools in my State, I recognize the importance of this work, and it is just as important now as when the salary was $4,000 heretofore. He has the same work to do that he had then, not a whit less than before, and I trust his salary will not be brought down as is proposed by the committee.

I believe that Prof. Hailmann, after he has been induced to accept this office, after he has given up other work in which he was engaged to accept it, is justly entitled to receive the compensation which was awarded to him at the time he accepted the position. I have had considerable acquaintance with him since his induction into office, and I know the valuable services he has rendered to the Indian service. We believe that he is the right man in the right place, and I trust the committee will not, after he was engaged at a salary of $3,000, go in now and cut it down, as proposed here, to $2,500. It is not right and it is not fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MADDOX. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman from South Dakota a question.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MADDOX. Have you ever read the rules that were promulgated by this Superintendent?

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; I have looked over them.

Mr. MADDOX. What do you think of them?

Mr. PICKLER. Well, I do not know about the rules. I do not claim to be an adept on rules. There is no member of Congress who, it would appear, does not know all about the Indian service better than the Indian Commissioner himself. There is no question about that. I do not undertake to set up my judgment as to whether the rules of the Superintendent are good or not. He is a practical man, a man of ability, a man who was selected on account of his peculiar fitness. He has been out among the Indians, and has looked at the Indians on the reservations, and in their schools. I believe he has promulgated some rules, and I think that he believes them to be good ones, and I presume they are.

Mr. MADDOX. Do you think they are practical rules?

Mr. PICKLER. I have not examined them particularly to see. I dare say that some of them are not. Every one of them may not be practical; but we know that nobody can make rules every one of which would be practical at the beginning.

Mr. MADDOX. One more question. Do you know what he is engaged on now?

Mr. PICKLER. Do I know what he is engaged on now?

Mr. MADDOX. Yes.

Mr. PICKLER. He was attending to official business the other day when I saw him.

Mr. MADDOX. He is making an arithmetic; a special one for the Indians.

Mr. PICKLER. It is very likely that they need something more simple than the system which is commonly used.

Mr. MADDOX. You are mistaken about that, and about it being more simple.

Mr. PICKLER. One of the propositions that this Superintendent made to me struck me as showing that he had a full conception of the subject he had in hand. He said there was too much of this education, that it was not practical enough, that he wanted to have all the boys and girls sent to these Indian schools and to teach them from the ground up, and that he was trying to establish——

Mr. MADDOX. I did not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

I desire to say to the House that the rules that have been promulgated by the Superintendent shows that he is not a practical man——

Mr. PICKLER. But you ought not to cut his salary down.

Mr. MADDOX (continuing). And that he is not fit for the position to which he is appointed; and the gentleman from South Dakota knows it.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, I desire to say that the gentleman from Georgia and I agree in most matters as to this Indian service, but I undertake to say that neither he nor I are capable of determining so well what are practical rules for the government of the schools as this Superintendent, about whom he is making this speech.

Mr. MADDOX. I say that you are mistaken. I insist that we ought to have a little common sense in this Indian business.

Mr. PICKLER. This Superintendent is a man of common sense.

Mr. MADDOX. My friend from South Dakota is altogether mistaken. I admit that he is a very good man. I have nothing to say in that line; but so far as injecting any common sense into this Indian service, I think we will have to get it from somewhere else. If the rules promulgated by this Superintendent are any evidence of his capacity, then we had better get a new man.

No such foolishness has ever been submitted to the American people; and not only that, he is not satisfied with the arithmetic that the children of this country study, and which we have in our schools, but he has gone to work to prepare one especially for these Indians, which is not a simple one by any means. I have made an examination of it. It is one he has especially prepared for the Indians, and because he has nothing else to do but to make an arithmetic. It is all nonsense, and I hope the amendment will be voted down by men of common sense in this House.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise to enter the protest of a class of people who, if they were present, would not participate in this political wrangle, but whose judgment and whose experience is entitled to some consideration by those who have the true interest of the Indians at heart. For a period covering centuries the relations of this simple sect of people, in their dealings with the red man, have been honorable and successful from the first day that they signed a treaty which was faithfully kept so long as they had control of it, and which never caused a drop of blood to be shed in its fulfillment. They have continued their relation in the treatment and in the education of the Indians from that day until this; and there is no body either civil or religious whose testimony and whose judgment is entitled to greater consideration than the Society of Friends, commonly known as Quakers. [Applause.]

Mr. PICKLER. That is right.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I have the honor of claiming many such among my constituents, and I rise to present their protest against certain features of this bill, and especially against the one now under consideration. I have received letters from the Quakers of Philadelphia, in which they protest against the reduction of this salary.

We have had the appropriation taken away from the commissioners and we have heard the astounding announcement made on this floor that the original cause of the creation of that Commission was that the corruption in the Indian Department was so great that it was necessary to have these outside and impartial observers. We have further heard it stated that it was still necessary to continue the existence of this Commission, because that department was not yet purged of all evil and corrupt influences.

Now, we come to another phase of the subject, that relating to the education of the Indians, and it is proposed to strike down the salary of this Superintendent of Schools. Stop for a moment and think of the proposition that a man who is capable of supervising the instruction of wild, unlettered Indians is not worth a salary of $3,000 a year. The position is a much more responsible one than any that is occupied by a school superintendent in the East, the task is a more difficult one, and it requires certain qualifications that are very, very difficult to find anywhere in this country, or in any other. These friends who have charge of schools in Pennsylvania, both in the city of Philadelphia and elsewhere, well know the qualifications that are required of a man to fill this position. They indorse the qualifications of the present Superintendent, and they protest earnestly and most vehemently against any reduction in his salary.

In fact, they go further and say that it is their firm conviction that this is a blow intended to force the present Superintendent out of office, because, as has been already well said, his services are worth much more in other quarters. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in behalf of those upright, pure-minded people, who for centuries have controlled in a proper and friendly spirit their relations with these unfortunate aborigines of our country who have been driven by the white man from pillar to post until now they have remaining but a strip of what was originally their own great domain, I protest against this policy. I protest against it in the name of these good people, who approach the question from no political standpoint, who approach it from no interest in supplies and contracts, who approach it simply in the spirit which pervades their creed and their religion, that of humanity and justice to all their fellow-men.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to suggest as a point which will certainly appeal to the common sense of this committee, that if it be true, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] suggests, that the present Superintendent is incompetent, that he has promulgated rules which are impracticable to be carried out and absurd in their character, there is an easy way of dealing with that matter, and that way is by the Superintendent's removal and by the appointment of a man who is competent and who can promulgate rules that are practicable. Certainly it is not the fair way in the middle of a public servant's term of office to reduce his salary. If there is one principle that the people of this country have given general adherence to, it is the principle that the salary of a public officer shall not be raised or reduced during the term of service for which he is chosen, and that is certainly a principle that ought always to apply. But if it be true that this general Superintendent has been making bad rules and false arithmetics, the gentleman from Georgia will not claim, I am sure, that all the superintendents of the Indian schools acting under this general superintendent have been doing that sort of thing. They have not all of them been inventing systems of mathematics; and yet if you will look through this bill you will find that, one after another, the salaries of the superintendents in the local schools all over the country have been reduced. And in the mean time their labors—I ask the committee to bear this in mind—in the meantime their labors have been increased. In the schools where the number of pupils at present is only 300, provision is made in this bill for 350 or 400, and yet the salary of the superintendent there is reduced from $2,000 to $1,500.

Mr. PICKLER. If I may interrupt the gentleman, I wish to state that this reduction is not recommended either by the Secretary of the Interior or by the Indian Commissioner.

Mr. QUIGG. I was about to speak of that. None of these reductions are recommended by the Indian Bureau or by the Secretary of the Interior, and yet they extend throughout the whole of our Indian educational system. Now, I appeal to the common sense of my Democratic friends. I am just as anxious as they are that this Congress shall make a record for economy. No man here wants more money spent than ought to be spent, but is this a good object to make a reduction upon?

Is the education of these people, whom we have from time immemorial neglected and wronged, for whose care we ought to have done a great deal more than we have, for whose education we ought to have made a much better provision than has been made at any time—is their education a good object to begin reductions upon? I protest that this is unfair; I insist that it is unwise; and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], in despite of his possibly too ardent protests against the economies to which his colleague from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is addicted, will prevail.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If I understand the gentleman, he protests against improper administration on the part of the Executive, improper according to the opinion of individual members, being reached by the cutting down of the salaries of persons who hold office, the offices themselves being necessary, under wise administration, for the well-being of the service?

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman has stated my protest and objection with great clearness and force.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Before the gentleman takes his seat I want to announce to him that my possibly too ardent protest against the economy of the gentleman from Indiana was not made entirely on the ground of his frugality. In the first place, it grew out of the fact that having cut down the salary of this official, he had come into the House and attempted by a subterfuge to prevent any amendment to rectify the wrong being offered.

Mr. QUIGG. Well, I hope the gentlemen on the other side of the House, in voting on this amendment, will not take into consideration the language of the gentleman to his colleague, but will vote on it with regard simply to the justice or injustice of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I hope at the same time gentlemen will not fail to have the courage of their convictions.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. Chairman, I should be disposed to agree with very much of what was said yesterday by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] on the question of education, and with what was said a little while ago by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON]. It is perfectly possible to educate people too much. It is perfectly possible to educate the Indians too much. And I should be the last man to deny that a great deal of all education, high and low, in this country has been thrown away, and applied to objects that can not well receive it. But for all that, sir, education is coming to be a science. It is already recognized as being an art; and it is altogether impossible to carry on education, high, low, or medium, by any rule of thumb, by any mere application of "common sense," or by any of the methods that answered a hundred, or fifty, or even thirty or twenty years ago.

There is no principle now more thoroughly recognized in the educational systems of our country than that we must employ superintendents; that a system of education must be put under one head. It may be that originally this office of superintendent of education was constituted as a sinecure, and that the salary was cut down because there was really nothing for the officer to do. But as Indian education stands now, whether we carry it on upon the reservations, whether we carry it on at contract schools, whether we carry it on at Carlisle or anywhere else, whether it is to be practical, industrial, mechanical, literary, or musical, I care not what, if Indian education anywhere in this country is to be worth anything at all it must be under a single superintendent, with great powers and with a large salary, because that is the recognized way in which education is now carried on.

This is a matter on which I have a right to speak as an expert. And gentlemen from any part of the country who have paid any attention to education know that if there is anything better established in the science and art of education than another, it is that a system of education should be put under one responsible head, whose supervision shall be extended over the whole system which the Government—general, State, or municipal—is undertaking to carry on.

Now, I say that to attempt to legislate a given official out of office by lowering his salary is no way to do, on any principle, political or economical. Some of our superintendents of Indian education have been injudicious men. They have had the sentimental element too strong in them; they have had the missionary element too strong in them; they have not looked at the practical side of matters; they have not realized the demands of the question. The present Superintendent was selected by the Secretary of the Interior upon advices from numerous sources. He is a man who has studied education scientifically, and I hesitate not to say practically. If he has been giving some of his time to preparing a special arithmetic for the Indians, I can tell gentlemen of this House, if they do not know it, that he could hardly do a better thing; for there is scarcely anything in this country that needs revising more than the prevailing arithmetical text-books scattered among our schools.

Mr. COOMBS. I hope the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts will be extended.

Mr. EVERETT. I should like to have a few minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the time of the gentleman for five minutes?

Mr. MADDOX. I object, with all respect to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I desire to be heard briefly on the merits of the amendment. I have offered it in good faith, and I believe logic and good sense require that it should be adopted.

The regularity with which Congress has been cutting down the appropriation for the salary of this Superintendent of Indian Schools is striking, if not commendable. First, he was awarded a salary of $4,000. That was reduced to $3,500. At a subsequent session Congress reduced it to $3,000, which was the amount appropriated for the current year. Now it is proposed to cut it down to $2,500. The House can readily see that at this rate of progression, or rather retrogression, for such it is, we shall soon reach that point where because of the inadequacy of the salary it will be impossible to get the services of a first-class man to fill this position.

I think this is a very inopportune time for this reduction; and I wish to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I think he is mistaken in saying that the present incumbent of the office got up himself these rules which have been referred to. I understand that he simply adopted these rules for the time being, until he could get time to formulate a more matured system of rules, and that they were the rules adopted by his predecessor in office.

I doubt not that the present incumbent of this office may have come to the discharge of the duties of his office without being entirely familiar with the needs of the Indian service. That is highly possible; but that he will familiarize himself with those duties in a short time and make an acceptable Superintendent of Schools I do not at all doubt.

Prof. Hailman is a graduate of a Swiss university; subsequently he graduated at an Ohio literary institution; after that he graduated at a medical college located in the same State. He was for a time superintendent of schools in the city of Detroit, Mich., and was on the board of education of that city for a number of years. After that he was superintendent of schools in the city of Laporte, Ind., for a number of years, and in every instance, as I am informed, discharged his duties faithfully and with excellent capacity. He is a gentleman of intelligence, a man of large educational experience, and fine executive ability. He has come into this office with the purpose of thoroughly devoting himself to the discharge of its duties; and he has set about learning how to perform those duties in such a way as will soon enable him to promote the good of the Indian schools.

I hold in my hand a list of the duties which he is required to perform; and they are very onerous, as the committee will discover when I read it, which I will now do:

It shall be the duty of the Superintendent of Indian Schools to administer the educational work of Indian schools; to organize the Government schools for Indian youth; to examine, select, and assign to duty superintendents, teachers, matrons, and other employés in the school service; to prepare courses of study and circulars of instructions concerning the educational management of the schools and methods of work; to examine and select text-books and other school appliances; to devise a system of reports from agents, superintendents, teachers, and matrons concerning the conduct and progress of the schools; to visit and inspect, in person or through accredited agents, all schools in which Indians are taught in whole or in part from appropriations from the United States Treasury; and to report to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs concerning their condition, defects, and requirements, and to perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Chairman, the Superintendent of Indian Schools sustains to the Indian schools the exact relation which the superintendent of schools sustains to the public schools in a great city. It is absolutely necessary that there should be some supervising, controlling power in charge of the Indian schools, to classify them, reduce them to order, and oversee and direct them, and which should also be the medium of communication between these schools and the Secretary of the Interior and the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Mr. EVERETT. And $2,500 is a very poor salary for such a man.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there is not a city in this country, with a population of 25,000, that does not pay its superintendent of schools more than the amount which is proposed to be given here for the salary of the Superintendent of Indian Schools, and his duties are much more onerous, much more difficult to perform, much more responsible in their character. Why, you are proposing even now to abolish the Congressional appropriation for sectarian schools for the education of Indians, which you have been accustomed to make for years. This officer already has a supervisory and visitorial jurisdiction over those schools, but if this proposed nonsectarian legislation is carried out you will increase all the more the onerous duties which he has to perform. It ought to cause the blush of shame to rise to the face of every Representative on this floor that it is here seriously proposed to require this able executive officer to perform the duties of this high and honorable office at the paltry salary which is proposed in this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the Superintendent of Indian Schools. I do not even know his name; but I have before me letters from friends whom I know take a very great interest in this subject of educating the Indians of the country, and from them I understand that this officer is a very worthy and capable officer and gentleman, and deserves to be sustained in the good work in which he is engaged; and I rise simply to say that I hope his salary will not be reduced—in other words, that the amendment offered to increase the salary will be adopted and the salary remain as it is.

These schools are scattered over a vast extent of country; the office is a very important and a very responsible one, and there certainly should be a good man at the head of these schools. And now, as I understand, the present Superintendent of Indian Schools to be a capable and efficient officer, I hope he will be sustaind by an adequate compensation.

I trust, Mr. Chairman, the salary of this responsible officer will not be reduced as proposed by the bill under consideration.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to submit as a matter of wise legislation and public policy, so far as I am concerned, when an official has been duly appointed and inducted into his office, and is properly performing the duties of that office, having made his fiscal arrangements on the basis of the salary paid at the time of his appointment, a change in his compensation is an unjust and unwise legislative act, unless it takes effect in the future, beyond the expiration of his term, or unless there is an all-controlling reason for the change.

Gentlemen will remember a few weeks ago the Committee on Appropriations brought in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. In that bill was a proposed reduction of the compensation of the Register of the Treasury from $4,000 to $3,600. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] protested emphatically against the change, and in filing that protest made these statements, simple in language, but truthful, and to my mind potential. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] said:

Now, I undertake to say that after an efficient, competent gentleman has been brought here and put into this work, responsible as it is, in the midst of his term it is unjust and unfair to reduce the salary, and therefore I hope the amendment will prevail.

The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON] said:

Mr. Chairman, I am utterly opposed to this warfare on the present Register of the Treasury. From my information about him, he is an honest and capable officer. He was appointed to this position and accepted it entirely with the expectation that if he performed his duties he would serve at least a four years' term, and, as I understand it, he has done like other gentlemen under similar circumstances, has left his business, left his matters at home and come here, locating himself, expecting to receive the salary fixed by the law at the time of his appointment. So far as I have information, up to this hour, he has served efficiently.

I do not believe, sir, that this House should now in the middle of his term single him out for the purpose of cutting off a part of his salary and making an example of him almost alone in the entire legislative bill. I think the policy unwise, and that when a man has been appointed to fill a position of responsibility, as this gentleman has been, I do not believe in making his salary, a small one already, still smaller by attempting to cut it down in this manner just when he is rendering faithful and efficient service. I oppose that principle entirely, and hope the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee will be adopted.

So the debate went on, and when the question came to be determined by the committee, the proposition of the Committee on Appropriations was rejected, and the compensation of $4,000 was continued. Therefore it will be no severe criticism upon the gentleman having charge of this bill, if this committee in its wisdom determines upon a policy, that when a man has been appointed at a certain compensation, it should continue through his term as a fair, equitable consideration, for the obligations which he incurred when he entered upon his term of office.

If the Superintendent of Indian Schools is incapable, turn him out; if not, then keep your faith and pay him in accordance with your contract both specific and implied.

Mr. PIGOTT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take the floor not for the purpose of indorsing the criticism of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but merely to say that I do not want to have this question considered as a political question, in which way it seems to have been considered pretty generally by those gentlemen who have taken the floor, and especially those who favor the pending amendment, with the exception of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. EVERETT]. But as a representative of an intelligent constituency, as a representative of Yale College, the professors of which great institution take a deep interest in the question of Indian education, I merely take the floor for the purpose of saying that they are entirely in sympathy with the amendment which proposes to give the gentleman occupying the important position of Superintendent of Indian Schools an adequate salary.

I speak, then, their wishes when I say I trust that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will be adopted. I do not know the gentleman who occupies this position, and do not care who he may be; but if he is incompetent to perform the duties of the office, let him be removed and a competent man substituted in his place.

But there is another objection to the cutting down of this salary which has not been thus far alluded to in the debate, that is, if because of incompetency or for any other reason, personal to the present incumbent, you reduce the salary, you thereby make it almost impossible, when a competent man gets the place, to have the salary restored to what it ought to be.

I trust that my Democratic friends on this floor will bear in mind that there are many men in the East in sympathy with the Democratic principles of economy who are unwilling to reduce this salary, and for that reason I favor the adoption of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not profess to any particular familiarity with the Indian service. I have had, perhaps, the same experience that most gentleman living east of the Mississippi River have had in regard to this service. But gentlemen situated farther West are, of course, more familiar with it than we can reasonably be expected to be. I know, however, something about the duties of the office of Superintendent of Indian Schools.

This office was created during the Forty-seventh Congress, known as the Keifer Congress, Mr. Keifer of Ohio being the Speaker of the House. At the time the office was created on an appropriation bill, and not by law—no law having been enacted on that subject—and the salary was fixed at $3,000 a year. That was one of the most expensive Congresses, as gentleman are aware, that we have had in our time. A great many salaries were raised, and at that time this office was created.

The question was what service could this Superintendent render, or whether he could render any, and if so, if he could render any service which gentlemen here could render, why not devolve the duties on the Superintendent of Education, an office that is only slightly important, as the business of education is not a Federal business, but belongs to the several States. It was then thought that it could be conferred on the Superintendent of Public Instruction. Others thought that any duty which might be required of him could be performed, as now, by and under the Commissioner of Indian Affairs; for I wish to call your attention to the extraordinary fact that this office is after all, so far as the Superintendent is concerned, under the charge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. There has been an effort to abolish the office from time to time years ago, but of late that subject has received no attention. The salary at one time went up to $4,000. It was then subsequently reduced to $3,000.

Now, what does this official do? There is no explanation of the duties at all. You had under the last Administration a superintendent and six supervisors. I will not speak with certainty, for I have not examined the matter lately, but I believe the supervisors received either $1,500 or $2,000 a year and their traveling expenses.

Mr. PICKLER. Let me ask the gentleman a question. We have recommended in this bill to cut off two of the supervisors——

Mr. HOLMAN. I am coming to that. Under this Administration there are now four persons employed as supervisors. Now, what duty is performed, let me inquire of gentlemen who profess to know all about the subject, and especially my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. EVERETT], who spoke so well, what duties are performed except the duties performed by the supervisors? You have, I repeat, four of them now. This bill proposes to continue three of them. They report to whom? To the gentleman who is supposed to be at the head of this educational system in the Capitol? No; they report directly to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. What does the Commissioner of Indian Affairs say about their duties?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed for a few minutes.

Mr. PICKLER. Let him proceed without limit.

Mr. EVERETT. I object.

Mr. PICKLER. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. EVERETT. I should be happy to withdraw my objection, but objection was made to my continuing a speech.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did I object?

Mr. EVERETT. No, sir; but a member of the committee did. However, I will withdraw the objection. I admit that the chairman of the committee has peculiar claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I ask no more than any other member, Mr. Chairman.

Now, the supervisors, of whom there are four, go from one school to another and examine. Their traveling expenses are paid. The reports come to the Commissioner on Indian Affairs, and in the office of the Commissioner is a small bureau, known as the Bureau of Education.

Now, with that little board of education the Superintendent of Schools has nothing to do. That is a board, I believe, composed of seven persons.

Mr. COX. Who are they?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know who they are. I do not know one of them.

Mr. PICKLER. They are clerks.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, with a head. That board has always managed this business. The superintendent stands upon exactly the same footing as one of these supervisors. He travels when he thinks proper among the Indians, and you pay him, as proposed in this bill, $1,000 for expenses of traveling, which is substantially making his salary $3,500 a year. You pay him that, and yet he performs exactly the same duties that these supervisors perform, to whom you pay smaller salaries; but who are very intelligent men, and the superintendent has nothing to do with them.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. HOLMAN. If I may be allowed further time.

Mr. PICKLER. We will give you all the time you desire.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. PICKLER. Does not the superintendent of education stand in exactly the same relation to the Indian service that the superintendent of education stands to the State?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. PICKLER. And does he not stand in the same relation to these supervisors as the State superintendent would to county superintendents?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, not at all. They all make their reports to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. PICKLER. No, sir. Their report is sent in to the Superintendent of Education.

Mr. HOLMAN. Their report goes to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. PICKLER. He is at the head of Indian education.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly; and that little bureau transacts the business.

Mr. PICKLER. Under his direction.

Mr. HOLMAN. I want to say in reference to this gentleman who now holds the office, that he is a reliable gentleman, a very reliable Democrat, and a very good man. I want to emphasize that—that he is a very good man. I never saw him but once or twice in my life, but I was very much impressed with him; and I understand him to be thoroughly a good man. But what has that to do with it?

Mr. COGSWELL. The Indiana man is a good man, but the other men you do not know anything about?

Mr. HOLMAN. I said the Indiana man was a good man.

Mr. COGSWELL. But as to the other seven, why, you do not know anything about them?

Mr. HOLMAN. I never saw them, that I know of. Do you suppose that I would vote to pay a man a large salary simply because he is a clever gentleman? This salary is above the average for that class of employment.

Mr. PICKLER. I never knew the gentleman to discriminate against an Indiana man before.

Mr. QUIGG. Does the gentleman discriminate against the superintendent on account of the rules he has promulgated?

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman from South Dakota does not know whether I discriminated against any man.

Mr. QUIGG. Does the gentleman discriminate against the rules which the superintendent has promulgated?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a superintendent of the schools at the agencies and he is paid a handsome salary, and is usually a very competent man; and then the agent there is an intelligent gentleman. These schools are all on the agencies, beyond the Mississippi. The agent at the Indian agencies has some supervision over all those people.

Mr. PICKLER. But the agents are not school men.

Mr. HOLMAN. These schools are first under the supervision of the superintendent of the schools, and secondly under that of the Indian agent, who is almost uniformly a competent man.

Mr. PICKLER. But they are not school men.

Mr. HOLMAN. A few years ago I visited those agencies with my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and we always found intelligent men at the head of the schools. The superintendent of the school was under the eye of the Indian agent on the ground. Then we have the supervisors and inspectors, five in number, constantly visiting these schools, and also special agents, who are doing practically the same work. Why, gentlemen, the whole fact about the matter is this: This man performs exactly the same duty that twelve other persons perform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. QUIGG. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask that it be ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks that the time of the gentleman from Indiana be extended ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HAINES. I object.

Mr. KEM. I move that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COX. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

Mr. COX. Now, you have got those supervisors in regard to these schools?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. We have got four of them in the field.

Mr. COX. Now, let me draw your attention to the point. What are they for?

Mr. HOLMAN. They are to do any duty in connection with the Indian service, and the main duty is an educational duty.

Mr. COX. Now, then, what do you want with a superintendent?

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not need him at all. We do not need the office.

Mr. QUIGG. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as I understand, withdraws the imputation made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] as to the incompetency of this Superintendent.

Mr. MADDOX. The gentleman from Georgia has made no such charge.

Mr. QUIGG. I think you have.

Mr. MADDOX. I have not done any such thing.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me state what supervision we now have. In the first place we have, as gentlemen say here, a competent superintendent of schools. Then there is the Indian agent, right on the ground, whose principal duty is to look after the schools. Then there are the five inspectors, who look after everything pertaining to the schools, and they are generally competent men. Then we have five special agents to look after these schools and after the agents themselves. Then, in addition to that, we have in the field to-day four men who are performing the same duties that would be, or could be, performed by the Superintendent of Indian Schools. All these make their reports to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. We have all this superintendence, and yet there is a clamor here, gotten up by letters from all over the country—I have received hundreds, many of them from my own part of the country—crying out with a loud voice against the slightest reduction of this salary.

Mr. KYLE. Do all these men make separate reports?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly they make separate reports. They all report to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. PICKLER. Who gives them their instructions?

Mr. HOLMAN. They have their instructions from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. PICKLER. No; they have their instructions from the Superintendent of Education.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to have this considered as a party question, although it has assumed that aspect, I admit. [Laughter.] In the interest of economy, I insist on this reduction. I do not think this office ought to exist at all.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question. When this subject was before the subcommittee there was some disposition to make the salary of this office three thousand or four thousand dollars——

Mr. HOLMAN. Nobody mentioned more than $3,000.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, perhaps it was $3,000; but in the Fifty-second Congress it was $4,000. Now, we have agreed to cut it down to twenty-five hundred.

Mr. HOLMAN. The office was created in the Forty-eighth Congress, I think, and enlarged in the Fifty-first Congress, and somehow or other it has always been a political office.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Now, is not this amount—$2,500—that the committee agreed upon, about the average salary received by professors in colleges other than the highest throughout the country?

Mr. HOLMAN. Where can you find in any of the colleges of the West any official of this kind so well paid?

Mr. PICKLER. You can not find a man in the United States fit to occupy such a position that can be had for $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. The salary here is $2,500, and you have not an official connected with education in your State who gets as much.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I would not detain the committee longer upon this subject, only that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is so woefully mistaken in regard to the facts of this question. He talks about these different supervisors of Indian education being turned out loose without any head. If there is no general head over them, who is to instruct them in their duties? This matter is really very easily understood. You have a corresponding system in your several States. You have a superintendent of instruction——

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, that is not this case at all.

Mr. PICKLER. I have the floor. You have your State superintendent of public instruction, and then you have your county superintendents. Now, the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is to abolish this office altogether; that is, he proposes to expend all this money for the education of the Indians without having any head to supervise his expenditure.

Mr. HOLMAN. What about the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. PICKLER. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs has a dozen other things to attend to.

Mr. EVERETT. And he is not a professional educator.

Mr. PICKLER. No; he is not an educator. He is chosen for other qualifications. We have never had a professional educator for Commissioner of Indian Affairs so far as I can recollect. Now, just consider for a moment the idea of the gentleman from Indiana that we are to appropriate these large amounts of money year by year for these Indian schools, and yet are to have no head of Indian education, nobody to guide the men who are engaged in educating the Indians. The gentleman talks about the different supervising officers that he has enumerated making their reports to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Why, sir, everybody in that Bureau makes his report to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Commissioner turns over these reports to the Superintendent of Education.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend knows that the committee were informed that the reports made to the Commissioner went to the Indian Bureau.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, there were one or two men who had an ax to grind, who wanted this office abolished, and who testified to that effect; but the Commissioner of Indian Affairs will tell you that all these matters are turned over to the Superintendent, and the present Administration has conferred more authority upon the Superintendent of Education than he has ever had before.

Mr. HOLMAN. We had before the Committee on Indian Affairs two of the most competent men connected with the Indian Bureau, one of whom had served during the last Administration, and one serving under the present; and they both informed us that there was no excuse whatever for the existence of this office.

Mr. PICKLER. One of them, I believe, was turned out of office some time ago, and has "an ax to grind."

Mr. HOLMAN. He was a Republican, though.

Mr. PICKLER. The question comes right down to this—whether you want to expend all these millions of dollars for these educational purposes, with no head to the educational establishment, with no one to direct this work of education.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was not the work done without this Superintendent before this office was created?

Mr. PICKLER. The very reason the office was created was because the need for it was felt. There is not another man connected with the service who is a specialist in educational matters. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is not a specialist.

Mr. HOLMAN. He is a scholar.

Mr. PICKLER. He is a scholar, but not a practical educator. We certainly ought to have for this duty a man who has been engaged in practical school work and who understands it. I understand that there is not in any college of the United States a man occupying any such important position who does not receive $3,000 or more a year. I defy any gentleman on this floor to name such a man. It can not be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the salaries paid in your State?

Mr. PICKLER. In some cases $2,500, and in other cases $3,000. But we have not in my State any such position as this.

Mr. HOLMAN. What college president in your State receives $3,000?

Mr. PICKLER. There is no college president who occupies such a position as this.

Mr. COX. As a substitute for the pending amendment, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Superintendent of Indian Schools be abolished, and the salary provided be omitted from the bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, if this discussion has developed anything, it is that this office of superintendent is unnecessary in the administration of Indian affairs. You have supervisors of instruction receiving their salaries——

Mr. HOLMAN. With traveling expenses and all?

Mr. COX. Yes; you pay them their traveling expenses as well as their salaries. This bill provides for a certain number of supervisors of instruction for Indian schools. These officers are paid a salary and their traveling expenses. Now, I am at a loss to know what they are to do except to attend to the schools provided for these Indian children. The pending proposition is that we must have a superintendent over these supervisors——

Mr. WILSON of Washington rose.

Mr. COX. The gentleman must excuse me just now. I want to state this matter as I understand it. You have first your supervisors to supervise these Indian schools. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That is correct.

Mr. COX. I do not want to misstate any fact, for I do not profess to know much about the Indians or the Indian service.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Does the gentleman understand how these supervisors are appointed?

Mr. COX. I take it for granted they are appointed for the purpose of taking care of the schools. That is all they have to do.

Mr. PICKLER. They do not do anything but what the Superintendent directs them to do.

Mr. COX. What have they to do except to attend to the schools?

Mr. PICKLER. If you abolish the Superintendent, there will be nobody to direct them.

Mr. COX. Now, let me ask, who directs these supervisors in the absence of a Superintendent? Why, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, of course. Now, you put in the Superintendent as a kind of supernumerary—"a fifth wheel to the wagon." And it would seem, he does not, in fact, superintend anybody. What is the use for him?

Mr. PICKLER. The gentleman might as well ask what use there is for the governor of a State? He might as well propose to abolish the office of governor, and let the State machinery run itself.

Mr. COX. If these supervisors control the Indian schools——

Mr. PICKLER. They do not control them at all.

Mr. COX. Then who does?

Mr. PICKLER. The Superintendent of Indian Education, the man you are proposing to abolish.

Mr. COX. Who controls him?

Mr. PICKLER. Nobody.

Mr. COX. Well, then, he is a greater power in this service than anyone else. Now, what can be the reason or policy of appointing seven supervisors of Indian schools——

Mr. PICKLER. There are only three.

Mr. COX. Well, I do not pretend to know the number. And then after appointing these supervisors you appoint a superintendent to supervise them; and then you have a Commissioner of Indian Affairs to supervise the Superintendent.

There is no use talking about this matter; you are putting a man into this office to be like the fifth wheel to a wagon.

Mr. PICKLER. These supervisors bear practically the same relation to the Superintendent that your clerk does to you. The clerk does what you direct him to do; these supervisors do what the Superintendent directs.

Mr. COX. Oh, well, I understand all that; but when you go to appoint a Government officer, and pay him a certain amount of money, and other officers perform all of the duties, what is the necessity for continuing the office?

Mr. PICKLER. But that is not the case here, by any means.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. In all the cities, as the gentleman knows, we have a school board——

Mr. COX. Oh, I understand that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Just hear my question out. Then we have a superintendent——

Mr. COX. I understand all of that, of course; but it has no connection here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You do not allow me to finish my question. We have, then, the teachers——

Mr. COX. Do you honestly believe this man, this Superintendent of Indian Schools, is essential to the service, or is worth one cent to the service?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I think he is worth very much more than that or I should not have offered the amendment. I think it would be a most serious mistake to abolish the office.

Mr. COX. Suppose the office is abolished; will not the supervisors do all the work?

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Unless you have some central power, a superintendent, to act as an intermediary between the teachers and the Indian Bureau, then you have no proper connection between them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Washington was recognized.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to be heard for a few moments for the purpose of asking if an amendment would lie to abolish the office—and I will offer it for the time being anyhow—in this shape:

Provided also, That the office of Commissioner of Indian Affairs be, and is hereby, abolished.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Will the Chair state the parliamentary status?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to be heard for a moment on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee is an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment in the nature of a substitute, as the Chair is advised.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And subject to an amendment under the rule.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I think that the understanding of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I only speak as my own recollection, was at the time we had the item for the compensation of the Superintendent of Indian Schools up for consideration that I wanted to let the salary remain as it was. I believe my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], perhaps the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX], thought $2,500 with traveling expenses was sufficient.

Mr. MADDOX. I had nothing to say about it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I was only giving my recollection, and of course withdraw the reference to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. LYNCH. I did not either.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. At all events, there was an agreement in the subcommittee that the salary should be $2,500. I am inclined to the opinion that the compensation paid for the service of the Superintendent of Indian Schools is sufficient when you include the traveling expenses and per diem.

Mr. COOMBS. What do you mean by traveling expenses and per diem?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, he gets a certain per diem which is allowed for traveling expenses. My recollection is that he gets $3 per day for traveling expenses while visiting the reservations and schools.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Now, you have a supervisor, and this Superintendent—what does he superintend?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, as a matter of fact, it has been the duty of the Superintendent of Indian Schools to visit all, or as many of the schools as he could.

Mr. COX. Precisely; that is a frank answer.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. But his duties in that connection are arduous.

Mr. COX. If it interrupts the gentleman I will not persist.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It is no interruption. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. COX. Now, if the supervisors do their duty, what is the need of the Superintendent?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, if the Indian agents do their duty, I might ask, what is the use of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. COX. If you put somebody in the shape of a supervisor to attend to this business, you do not need the Superintendent.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Now, you have cut down the salary from $4,000 to $2,500. I think, as I have already said, and as was believed in the subcommittee, that that is a fair compensation for the work when you include the traveling expenses.

It is as much as is received by any professor or any president of any Western college of which I have knowledge. And while the gentleman at present occupying the position is a man of the very highest education and character, I think the salary paid him is sufficient, and I am of the opinion that the agreement reached by the Committee on Indian Affairs should prevail.

A few days ago I made some observations to the effect that the present Superintendent was engaged in getting out a new arithmetic. This morning I received a letter from him stating that he was not engaged in getting out a new arithmetic; that he was simply engaged in getting out a new method by which arithmetic might be taught to the Indians. And in so far as I stated he was engaged in getting up a book, I desire to make a correction at this time. He is only getting out a new method of cube root by which and through which the Indian may be taught a higher and more perfect civilization.

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina. A more perfect system of digging roots. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACK of Georgia. I move to close debate on the pending amendments.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia moves that all debate on the pending amendments be closed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I hope that will not be done until my amendment is read. The gentleman will save time now by allowing us a little more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the motion is only to close debate on the pending amendments, not on the paragraph.

The gentleman from Georgia moves that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] be closed.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, debate on the pending amendments was closed.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to offer it before a vote is taken on the other amendments?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes; to add to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] the words, "and the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby abolished."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the attention of the committee to this amendment. The President of the United States being the executive, has his branch offices or departments, the Interior, the Post-Office, and so on. They are his aids and helps. But the President is the executive. When you come to the Interior Department there are ten or twelve bureaus, because this Department has a great deal of business. The Indian Office is one of the bureaus of the Interior Department. Congress in its wisdom, in former years, has seen proper, step by step, in the interest of the public service, to create these bureaus. Then, again, many of the various bureaus, much larger than any department of this Government fifty years ago, are divided into divisions. All this saves labor, and gives uniformity and efficiency in administration.

Now, in my judgment, this branch of the service that superintends the schools which educate 16,000 Indian children, with 200 different schools, expending between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000, is of great importance. Congress, in its wisdom, thought there ought to be a head to this service. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] think there ought not to be a head.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; I distinctly disclaim that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. They think there ought not to be a head to this division?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is misstating me. I have not suggested that.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is misstating me also.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Well, an amendment comes to abolish the office. Now, if they wish to do that, I want to see them, and go them one better, because we can save the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and let the honorable Secretary of the Interior, Hoke Smith, whose friends claim he is the best worker in the country, shoulder up and administer that office, too.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend know that the salary of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is carried on the legislative bill?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Oh, well, all bills a place and all seasons a time to save money—to economize. This is a proposition to abolish an office. Now, I have nothing to say against the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He is from my State, and so far as I know he is an able and competent official; but here is a chance to save that salary, and let the honorable Secretary of the Interior look after the details himself. This is mere bureau work.

Mr. COX. Now, will the gentleman yield to me for one moment?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Do you mean to say that when an office like that of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is created, and when you find a supernumerary under him who is not necessary, that in order to abolish the supernumerary it becomes necessary to go back and abolish the head of the Department?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. In my judgment this official at the head of this school service is just as important in his sphere as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs presiding over all the divisions of the Indian Bureau is in his sphere.

And while I am not in favor of my amendment, abolishing the Commissioner of Indian Affairs [laughter], I offered it here to call the attention of the gentleman to what he is doing.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the fact that his amendment would seem to come in more properly at the end of the section, inasmuch as the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee is to strike out certain lines in the bill. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will be treated as coming in at the end of the section.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MADDOX. I move that debate be closed on the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I just want to know if an amendment would be in order to abolish all the Indian agencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not pass on any question until it arises.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please withhold his amendment until a vote is taken upon the pending amendment, upon which debate has closed. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], increasing the salary from $2,500 to $3,000.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 61.

Mr. SHERMAN. I change my vote from no to aye.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). The amendment is disagreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask for tellers.

Mr. TRACEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] as tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 76.

Mr. TRACEY. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we might as well have a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Then I will inform the gentleman that he will have the point of no quorum raised again.

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. In view of the fact that this is a subject to be voted on in the House, I will there call for the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws the point of no quorum.

Mr. MADDOX. I renew it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I desire to give notice to the gentleman that I will call for a quorum every time until this bill is concluded if he persists.

The Clerk continued to call the roll.

Mr. MADDOX. I give you notice that I do not care if you do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You can get a vote in the House. Why, then, make the point of no quorum now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen are not now in order. Gentlemen in the front of the Chair will please be seated.

Mr. MADDOX (to Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana). You are not bulldozing anybody.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I do not want to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. MADDOX. I say that you can not bulldoze me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. You can get in a vote in the House.

Mr. MADDOX. You need not throw out your threats to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I say you can get a vote in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia will be in order. The Sergeant-at-Arms will request gentlemen to take their seats.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (to Mr. MADDOX). You ought to be good-natured.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please be seated.

Mr. MADDOX rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Indiana will be in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I am trying to get the gentleman from Georgia to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please take his seat and observe the rules of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The roll was called, when the following-named members failed to respond:

Mr. COOMBS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my colleague [Mr. GRAHAM] be excused, on account of sickness.

Mr. NEILL. I ask that the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLISH] be excused. He left the House on account of sickness.

The committee rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration the bill H. R. 6913, found itself without a quorum.

The Chair directed the roll to be called, and I herewith report the names of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 6913, found itself without a quorum; that he directed the roll to be called, and reports the names of the absentees. The names of the absentees will be entered on the Journal. Two hundred and eight gentlemen having answered to their names, without motion the committee will resume its session under the rule.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 94; so the amendment was rejected. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX]; which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Superintendent of Indian Schools be abolished and the salary provided for be omitted from this bill.

The question being taken, the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX. I ask for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 8, noes 107.

Mr. COX made the point of no quorum, but immediately withdrew it.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize first the gentleman from Iowa, and afterwards the gentleman from California. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

Insert in line 19, after the word "schools," the following:
"And it is hereby declared that it is the intention of this act that no money herein appropriated shall be paid for education in sectarian schools, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby charged with the duty of so using and administering said appropriation as to carry out said object, and he is hereby authorized and required to make all needful rules and regulations necessary to prevent the use of any part of said fund for education in sectarian schools."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I make the point of order.

Mr. GEAR. Then I will speak to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will reserve the point of order until we understand the amendment.

Mr. GEAR. I think if the gentleman from Indiana has any objection to this on a point of order he ought to state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know whether I have or not, but I desire to reserve the point of order until the amendment is fully understood.

Mr. GEAR. Let the gentleman state his point of order.

Mr. TRACEY. I make the point of order that it is new legislation and does not reduce expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa on the point of order.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which provides for the education of the Indians and appropriates certain moneys therefor. The amendment which I have sent to the desk to be read simply provides how that money may or may not be disbursed. It seems to me that the point of order is not tenable. I will ask the gentleman from New York to state wherein this changes existing law.

Mr. TRACEY. The point of order I made was that the amendment was new legislation and did not reduce expenditures.

Mr. GEAR. That point of order is not tenable. The amendment simply provides how the money herein appropriated shall be disbursed. It is not new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very clear that the proposition advanced in the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa is new legislation, and does not retrench expenditures, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GEAR. I will state to the Chairman that the amendment does not change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. If it makes law which is different from the law existing to-day, it changes existing law.

Mr. GEAR. But it does not change existing law. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!" and confusion in the Hall.]

Mr. GEAR. I would like to have order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. GEAR. This amendment does not change any existing law; it simply puts a limitation upon the expenditure of the money herein appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled that in his judgment it is new legislation and does change existing law.

Mr. GEAR. Will the Chair state what law it changes?

The CHAIRMAN. It changes the existing law which is in the appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. GEAR. Not at all. I beg to differ with the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has ruled. The gentleman from Iowa has it in his power to appeal from the decision of the Chair if he chooses.

Mr. GEAR. Of course, I understand my remedy, Mr. Chairman, but I think the Chair is under a misapprehension. This amendment does not change the law of last year at all. We are now making a law for the next fiscal year, and this simply proposes to provide a limitation as to how the money here appropriated shall be expended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled upon the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the proposition of my friend from Iowa is not open to the objection that it changes existing law, but is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is not in order. The Chair has ruled.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move to strike out the last word of the pending paragraph.

Mr. GEAR. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman. I can not be taken off the floor by the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no right to the floor. The gentleman having made his point of order and the Chair having ruled upon it, the gentleman has lost his right to the floor.

Mr. GEAR. But I want to exercise my right to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair gave the gentleman ample time to do that, but if he chooses now to appeal the Chair will recognize him for that purpose.

Mr. GEAR. I do. One word. This is a matter of some importance. I will not discuss the merits of the amendment now, but will state here and now that I propose to offer at the proper time a motion to refer this bill back to the committee with instructions that the amendment I offer be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appeal is withdrawn, I understand.

Mr. GEAR. No, sir; I insist on my appeal.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, on that question, then, I wish to say a word in answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR], for the motion he has made implies that there are some what he would call "sectarian appropriations" in this bill. My friend misapprehends the fact; there are no sectarian appropriations in the bill, as I understand the matter. I hold in my hand a list of all the contract Indian schools as they have existed for years and as they exist now and will probably exist in the coming year. Attached to this list is the following statement of the Indian Bureau:

This list sets forth the schools with which contracts for the education of Indian children were made for the fiscal year 1894 (the present fiscal year), and which were not specially appropriated for. It will be noticed that contracts were made with individuals and not with denominational bodies, except such incorporated institutions as Hampton, Va., and the Lincoln Institute at Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania.

I understand that at the Indian Office they never inquire whether the party with whom the contract is made belongs to one denomination or another, but make the contracts with the persons having charge of the schools, without any regard to the denominations to which they belong.

Mr. GEAR. That is not the question. We are now making appropriations for the year 1895, not for 1894.

Mr. HOLMAN. But we are making them on exactly the same basis as in former years.

Mr. GEAR. And there are some persons who think, and very properly, in my view, that they have a right to determine the kind of legislation which shall now be adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is the same legislation and system of Indian school contracts as existed under the last Administration.

Mr. GEAR. It is not a question of which Administration. It is simply a question whether we are now going on to recognize this class of appropriations as has been done in the past. There is no politics in this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course not. I understand from the Indian Office that no contract has been made either during the last Administration or the present with any denomination or with the board of any denomination. Formerly contracts were made with boards having a certain denominational character, growing out of the "peace policy" which was inaugurated in 1869 under the Grant Administration. But now, instead of contracts being made with denominations they have been made for years past—during the last Administration and under the present Administration up to the present time—not with boards of the various denominations, but with the individuals having charge of the schools.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: Is there any appropriation carried in this bill for any sectarian school?

Mr. HOLMAN. Not for a sectarian school. But I have no doubt Baptists, Methodists, Catholics, Presbyterians, and all the other denominations are in some way or other, as they have been for many years past, connected with these various Indian schools. Not as sectarians, but as individuals. It could scarcely be otherwise; for in this country nearly everybody belongs to some religious denomination.

A MEMBER. And so they ought.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I am assured by the Indian Bureau that no contract has been made in recent years with any board of any denomination or with any denomination for the education of Indian children.

Mr. GEAR. I do not say that there has been; I simply say that I do not believe it is the policy of this Government, either the General Government or that of the States, to recognize anything but a common-school education. And that is what is proposed in the amendment I have offered, which it was my intention, if it had been adopted, to supplement with suitable provisions for carrying it into effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the amendment propose to abolish all these existing contract schools?

Mr. GEAR. I am not discussing the relation of the Government to any individual or any board; I simply propose to extend to these Indians what I believe to be the right kind of education; to give them the same kind of education that we give our own children.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would the gentleman confine appropriations by the Federal Government to schools on the reservations?

Mr. GEAR. I want to apply this principle to the whole system.

Mr. HOLMAN. But the gentleman does not propose to abolish all these existing schools outside the reservations, does he?

Mr. GEAR. No, sir; but I am advocating what I believe to be a sound principle——

Mr. HOLMAN. What does the gentleman propose to do with the six or eight thousand children in these various contract schools?

Mr. GEAR. These very appropriations will provide for them; or if not, I should offer a supplemental amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to carry out this policy in its full spirit and tenor.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend does not assert, and I presume he will not, that any contract has been made for this year or for four years past with any denomination or with any board of any denomination.

Mr. GEAR. I am not making any such assertion; the gentleman is putting words in my mouth. I simply say that in a broad, general way I am in favor of educating the Indian to the highest degree that his capacity will permit; but I am in favor of educating him in accordance with the same methods that we adopt in educating our own children in the public schools of the country. That is all there is in this question. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I think nobody is opposed to that.

Mr. GEAR. If I were to read the bill, the gentleman from Indiana is in charge of, I would take, in my judgment, a different view when I look over the class of schools for which large appropriations have been made. Why, Mr. Chairman, we have appropriated for this class of sectarian schools within the last eight years some $4,000,000. In 1894 we appropriate nearly $400,000, and a large portion of it is paid out for the support of what may be termed, in ordinary parlance, sectarian schools. Now, I am not in favor of that system.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend would reduce the schools?

Mr. GEAR. If my friend from Indiana will permit me, I know somewhat of the system of missionary work amongst the Indians. I was the son of an Indian missionary, and I know how much has been done by these missionaries, who go among them and preach, as the gentleman from Arizona properly has said, the meek and lowly Jesus, and I know that they have done very much good. But I do know and believe as honestly as I do anything else that the class of legislation conferred on these wards of the Government is not, in my opinion, in the line of the better thought and judgment of the people of this country. That opinion is entertained by a very large number of respectable people throughout the country. It is the substance of a petition to be presented here to the House to-day, a petition signed by 400 of the ablest men in the United States, opposing this principle of sectarian education.

Mr. COOMBS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I would like to know how this discussion comes in?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. COOMBS. I thought a motion had been made by some gentleman to lay that on the table? [Laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. I took that back.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman knows that that motion could not be entertained in committee.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, the discussion has been somewhat desultory, and there has been, by common consent, some talk permitted upon the bill and its merits, although the question pending, I know, is the appeal from the decision of the Chair. In view of that fact I will avail myself of the courtesy of the House, and ask that this petition be read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. TUCKER. And not read?

Mr. GEAR. I am having it printed with my remarks, and ask just to have the heading of it read from the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States: A petition concerning sectarian appropriations——

Mr. BYNUM. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYNUM. The only question before the committee is the appeal from the decision of the Chair. The gentleman now asks to have something read that has no connection with that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold, if it has no connection with the appeal, that it could not be read.

Mr. GEAR. I only ask to have the caption of the petition read.

Mr. BYNUM. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not have the petition read, or any part of it, at this time.

Mr. GEAR. I make the point of order that the Clerk had commenced to read the petition, and I insist upon the reading of it.

Mr. BYNUM. I object to its being printed now.

Mr. GEAR. Do I understand the Chair to hold that I can not have this petition read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that if it has no relation to the pending question it can not be read or printed in the RECORD without unanimous consent. The Chair understands, however, that the gentleman desires to have it printed as a part of his remarks.

Mr. GEAR. I want to have the petition of it read.

Mr. BYNUM. I object to that. The gentleman can discuss nothing accept the appeal pending. He can not discuss the merits of the proposition and, therefore, the petition is not in order here.

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible for the Chair to determine whether what the gentleman desires to have read is pertinent or not until he has heard it.

Mr. BYNUM. Does the Chair hold that it can be read in the face of objection?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not know whether it can or not, until he hears it.

Mr. BYNUM. What does the Chair know? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. He knows that it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Iowa if the petition has anything to do with the appeal?

Mr. GEAR. I had stated, Mr. Chairman, that by common consent, as it were, we had had some little debate here that was outside of the pending question, and as a part of my remarks I desired to have read the caption of the petition which I would then have printed in the RECORD by consent. The Clerk had begun to read the petition when the distinguished gentleman from Indiana made his objection. I claim that the gentleman was too late to interpose objection after the reading had begun.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that the fact that the Clerk had begun the reading of the petition would make any difference. The point of order can be interposed at any time, even after the reading has progressed for some time. The Chair understands the gentleman desires to have this paper printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SOMERS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SOMERS] objects to this petition being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GEAR. If the Clerk will pass it back to me, as I have the floor, I will read it.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GEAR. I will read this petition myself.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. If the gentleman reads this petition, I want to know if I can not get in an article from the New York Times also? [Laughter.]

Mr. GEAR. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] still objects to allowing the Clerk to read this, I will read it myself.

Mr. BYNUM. I make the point of order that it has no bearing on the question before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BYNUM. The gentleman has no right to read it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I submit this as a parliamentary proposition. I do not care whether the petition is read or not, but the gentleman from Iowa has taken an appeal. He has the floor, and having the floor, has it for an hour. If there is objection to the manner or matter of his debate, all the Chair can do is to say to him that "the gentleman from Iowa will proceed in order." Otherwise it would be in the power of the Chair and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BYNUM] to make his speech for him.

Mr. BYNUM. I understand it is the province of the Chair not only to decide that a member shall speak to the question before the House, but to make him speak to the question before the House, and if he does not do it, to order him to take his seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SOMERS] withdraws his objection to printing this petition in the RECORD. If there be no further objection leave will be granted. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Chairman, in support of the position that I take I am going to read this.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already had leave to print it.

Mr. GEAR. (Reading)—

To the Congress of the United States:
A petition——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. GEAR. I have the floor, Mr. Chairman, and I do not yield.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I call the gentleman to order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio calls the gentleman from Iowa to order. The gentleman from Iowa will please take his seat.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman is addressing the Chair upon an appeal, and that is the only business before the committee. The gentleman proceeds to read a petition addressed to the Congress of the United States which in nowise whatever relates to the parliamentary question before the House.

Several MEMBERS. How do you know that?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It is not necessary that we should know the contents of it to know that a petition addressed to Congress upon the merit of a bill or measure before it can in nowise relate to a question of parliamentary law that is to be considered by this committee at this time.

Mr. GEAR. I think it probable——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The gentleman himself has admitted that this petition does not relate to the question of order.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already ruled that the petition is not in order, because the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] has himself stated that it has no reference whatever to the appeal.

Mr. GEAR. No, I beg the pardon of the Chairman, I did not so state. Do I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SOMERS] has withdrawn his objection to printing this petition?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GEAR. All right; then I will let it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SOMERS. Inasmuch as the gentleman has not availed himself of the withdrawal——

Several MEMBERS. Oh, let him print it.

Mr. GEAR. Then I will take it back and read it in my time. Does the gentleman renew his objection?

Several MEMBERS. No.

Mr. QUIGG. The Chair has already decided that the petition may be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. GEAR. Did the Chair hold that this petition can be printed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Chair submitted the request, and there was no objection.

The document referred to is as follows:

A petition concerning sectarian appropriations for Indian education.

[A careful perusal is respectfully requested.]

To the Congress of the United States:

The National League for the Protection of American Institutions petitioned both sessions of the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses concerning sectarian appropriations by the National Government for Indian education.

The league now addresses the following petition to the Fifty-third Congress concerning Indian appropriation bills.

The league petitions against the violation of the American principle of the separation of church and state which is involved in making any sectarian appropriations for Indian education.

The highest official bodies of the Congregational, the Methodist Episcopal, the Presbyterian, and the Protestant Episcopal Churches have determined to withdraw their applications for funds from the United States Treasury, because of the principle which they now see is involved in this dangerous practice, and they propose henceforth to support their own schools without Government aid.

The league petitions that the General Government now adopt a definite, permanent, and uniform principle, in accord with the spirit of the United States Constitution, for advancing education among the Indians on the basis of the American free common school system, in order that the dangers involved in departure from the American principle of keeping separate and distinct the functions of church and state be no more fostered by any actions of the General Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GEAR. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 40.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. No quorum, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] to act as tellers.

Pending the count,

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. HICKS. I renew it.

Pending further count,

Mr. HICKS. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. On this question the yeas are 125, the nays 9. The ayes have it, and the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment I desire to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 7, page 51, the following:

"Provided, That from and after the 1st day of July, 1896, no money shall be appropriated or expended for the transportation of any pupil to or from any Indian school, nor for the support and education of any Indian at any school except such as is located on or near an Indian reservation or convenient thereto, and under Government control, and excepting also the public schools of any State or Territory.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, for the present I wish to reserve the question of order.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on that question, the point of order being reserved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the inconsistence and the incongruity of this bill in some respects is only equalled when compared with that nondescript, that "what is it," called the tariff bill, which is undergoing dissection in the other branch.

Now, on page 44 of the bill $30,000 is appropriated for the purpose of making allotments to Indians, which is the most important business of the Indian Bureau. It is important above everything else to make them citizens, to give them farms, and make them self-supporting. On the next page we find $70,000 appropriated for hiring farmers; and up to this time not a man on the committee has ever been able to state where any of these farmers are located, or what they are doing, or to assign any use for them. They have "seen" this $30,000 for allotments, doubled it, and "gone $10,000 better" for these farmers. If that allotment goes on—and it is right—it takes away the opportunity, it takes away the chance for the appointment of the two hundred farmers and the other officers that you "stake" out there at the expense of the Government.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of business, and I ask you gentlemen as a business proposition, is it business to expend $30,000 in kidnapping, in netting, in catching, in grabbing Indian children and transporting them 3,000 miles across the continent? It is not a business proposition, and no business man would so hold it. True were the words of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] yesterday, and no less true the words of the gentleman from Arizona yesterday, and they receive the approbation of every thinking man in the United States who is not interested in an appropriation for the Indian Bureau. When I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] boasting that his State welcomed the red men to its borders, I thought "yes," but with all due respect to him, I must reserve the right to believe that if these red men did not come bearing gifts to that State to the tune of $100,000, we would not have heard the point of the great generosity of that State made so energetically; because, so far as my observation has gone, Mr. Chairman, I find that such eloquence all circulated around an appropriation or for an increase of same for salary.

Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of any church; but so far as my observation has gone there is not much difference in these denominations; they are much alike; but I want to call your attention to the scene presented in this House during the last week. This House has witnessed an acrimonious religious debate, brought on through appropriations made for the support of sectarian schools. It is a question that you must meet sometime, and very soon, and I think my amendment meets it. I think it is cruelty to these Indians to transport them across this country and educate them, to place them for several years in surroundings they can not have and can never hope to continue in, and when they get back they are not satisfied with their tribal relations or their tribes or homes, and they can not take the other place and keep up. I say it is wrong.

The solution of this question as to the education of these Indians is to make them self-supporting, and the great mistake of the Indian Bureau and the Indian system of this country is that you have always taught the Indians that they were to be "wards." I say that that is a mistake. They should be taught that they are to earn their own living like anybody else, and that they are no better than anybody else. The system now in vogue has been actually a detriment to the Indians, and as a rule no one can point out where they have been bettered by this system. It is all wrong.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I see the gentleman from Indiana before me, and I desire to ask him a question for information. It will be remembered that at the committee's sittings there was an agreement to increase the amount from $15,000 to $20,000 for the allotment of lands, on page 46 of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That will be attended to.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. That amendment has not been offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; but I have it before me. Mr. Chairman, after reading this paragraph again, I am not inclined to press the point of order.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Just one word more, Mr. Chairman. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this is not to go into effect until 1896, thus giving two years to make arrangements for it and not interfering with present contracts or anything of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I ask the indulgence of the committee for a minute or two on this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California, that he be allowed to continue his remarks?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that debate be now closed on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Can not you give me a couple of minutes?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that in two minutes and a half debate on this amendment be closed.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Then I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, this subject has been brought to my attention in Southern California, where there are numerous reservations. There is a school at Perris, which is full of Indian scholars. It is convenient to two or three reservations. In San Diego there are three or four reservations, and many of the Indian children are now being taught at the public schools adjoining the reservations—schools under the supervision of the State and of the county—and they are being taught at one-half what it costs in the reservation schools.

This question will settle itself in a business way if you have business men to settle it, by the Indians sending their children to the public schools. Three or four of the schools in my county are supported in part by the Indian scholars, who come in the morning and going back to their homes at night. In those schools they are taught the things that are necessary for them to know—not the "higher education." This is the solution of this question in a large part, and every business man must see that the only practical way to do any good to the Indians is to locate the schools at their homes. Mr. Chairman, history relates that many years ago Russia used to send her young men to school in countries outside of her own dominion, and one day when they were talking that matter over at court, the court fool said to the Czar, "You are a fool."

"What do you mean?" said the Czar. "I will prove to you," said the court fool, "that you are the fool, not I." He took a piece of paper and made a crease in it and said to the Czar, "Take that crease out." The Czar and his cabinet tried, but they could not take the crease out of the paper. Then the court fool said: "When you send your young men to foreign countries to be educated, they get a foreign crease in them and you can never take it out; and that is why I say you are a fool for sending them there." So it is with the Indian who is educated in these schools off the reservation. When he goes back to his tribe he is neither white nor Indian. There is a crease in him which can never be got out. You are doing the Indians great wrong by that system. I am a friend of the red man as distinguished from a friend of Indian agents.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to come to some understanding, Mr. Chairman, as to how much time shall be consumed upon this amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not want to consume any. I simply want to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I am now pretty well satisfied that my friend from California [Mr. BOWERS] does not know what he is talking about. [Laughter.] I did suppose that he knew something about the Indian question, but now I doubt it.

I took the trouble last evening to interview three Indian delegates who are here representing their tribes. I interviewed the delegate of the Creek Indians, who is not only the speaker of the upper house of the tribal legislature, the House of Warriors, but a successful farmer; I interviewed the delegate from the Choctaws, the Osages, and other tribes, and these men say, without any hesitation or qualification, that the very best people they have in the Indian Territory to-day are those who have been educated at the Virginia and the Carlisle schools.

I have in my hand a list of members of the Creek Nation who graduated in the class of 1889, and if I had time to state the positions that those men occupy to-day and the occupations they are engaged in it would be interesting to every member of this body. Now, sir, with all the arraignment that we have heard here of the Eastern schools, where is there a gentleman, either in this Congress or elsewhere, who can find any representative of the Indian tribes who wishes to strike down these Eastern schools?

I defy the gentleman from California to find any such one. I can give him the names of five hundred Indians who have been graduated at Carlisle and other schools, with the places where they live and the occupations they are engaged in, and I defy him to point to a solitary Indian man from any tribe who was educated at said school, and who has gone back into savagery or into criminal life. Can the gentleman name one?

Now, I say the Indians want these schools maintained. The people who represent them here in Washington want these schools maintained. They say that they can be taught reading and writing on the reservation, but that is not the education they want. They want to go away to some place where they will be severed from the tribal relations, where they can see the farmer at work on his farm, where they can see the banker in his bank, where they can see the merchant in his store, where they can see the mechanic in the great machine shop. Observing in this way the active pursuits of men in civilized life, they acquire an education that they can not get upon an Indian reservation. And this makes them better citizens; and it sends them home well educated, on lines that no reservation school can afford. I am in favor of this education by observation, because it is such education that broadens and deepens the mind. Our people are getting tired of these attacks on the Eastern schools. If gentlemen want to strike them down, all right; but first let them produce their evidence showing what is alleged, that the Indians educated there are worse by reason of the education they receive.

Mr. PICKLER. We do not want the Eastern schools abolished. Many of us believe in the Eastern schools, and want to keep them up.

Mr. MAHON. I am glad of that. I am willing to join with our Western friends in educating Indian children on the reservations by Government aid. I want to advance their welfare in whatever may be best.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I challenge the gentleman to give the names of fifty of those Carlisle graduates to whom he has referred.

Mr. MAHON. I can do it.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Only fifty—I do not say five hundred.

Mr. MAHON. I can give them, if you will give me time.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BOWERS of California, it was rejected, there being—ayes 2, noes 96.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "schools," in line 19, page 50, add the following words: "Provided no part of said sum shall be applied to the expense of transporting any Indian child to any school situated at a distance greater than 40 miles from the reservation home of such child."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of two hundred and fifty Indian pupils at Albuquerque, N. Mex., at $167 per annum for each pupil, $41,750; pay of superintendent, $1,500 per annum; in all, $43,250.

Mr. QUIGG. I move to amend by striking out the word "five," in line 12 of the paragraph just read, and inserting "eight," so as to make the salary of this superintendent $1,800.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to resist unduly the evident purpose of the majority of the committee to reduce expenditures in the conduct of the Indian schools; and I trust this amendment will not be accepted as indicative of any such purpose. But I think it suitable to call the attention of the committee to the precise state of facts with regard to the propositions offered by the gentleman in charge of the bill in relation to the salaries of the superintendents.

I do not refer to the salary which we have already disposed of—that of the General Superintendent of Indian Schools. I refer to the salaries of the superintendents of the various Government schools located here and there over the country. In the bill before the committee I find that in nine case the salaries of these superintendents have been reduced by amounts of from $200 to $500, aggregating the picayune sum of $3,400. Now this small sum of money is saved out of the salaries of nine men who, if they are worth a cent in teaching the Indian children, are worth every dollar they are now getting.

The salary of the school superintendent at Albuquerque is reduced from $1,800 to $1,500; the salary of the superintendent of the training school at Cherokee, N. C., is reduced from $1,400 to $1,200; the salary of the superintendent at Carson City, Nev., is reduced from $2,000 to $1,500; the salary of superintendent at Chilocco, Ind. T., is reduced from $2,000 to $1,500; the salary of the superintendent at Fort Totten, N. Dak., is reduced from $1,800 to $1,500; the salary of the superintendent at Genoa, Nebr., is reduced from $2,000 to $1,500; the salary of the superintendent at Phœnix, Ariz., is reduced from $1,800 to $1,500; the salary of the superintendent of the industrial school at Pipestone, Minn., is reduced from $1,500 to $1,200; and the salary of the superintendent at Salem, Oregon, is reduced from $2,000 to $1,500, making a net saving in all these nine salaries of the small sum of $3,400.

It appears when you compare this bill with last year's bill that in several cases the work required of these superintendents is increased; in no instance is it decreased. The number of pupils for whom they have to provide is in every instance the same as it has been, or it is much larger. The number of pupils at Carson City is increased from 100 to 125; the number of pupils at Chilocco, Indian Territory, is increased from 250 to 350; and the number of pupils at Genoa, Nebr., is to be increased from 325 to 350. Now, it is observable, Mr. Chairman, that these salaries are reduced in every instance in the Government schools. The provision for the contract schools for the various religious organizations, remains as it was. There is no reduction in any of them.

Let me say right here that I do not agree with my friend from Iowa who proposes that we shall not continue these contract schools. I have visited the Indian country and spent six months among the reservations. I know the work these schools are doing; and while I disapprove of the system of having our duty done by others, yet the work of the religious societies is a good and faithful work. It should not be too suddenly supplanted, nor should the pupils now being taught at the contract schools be allowed to suffer for want of the teaching the churches now afford.

We must make provision for them; and if the Government is going to continue, as this bill seems to imply, a policy of neglect and inattention—if, indeed, its policy is to become one of reaction—then all the more need is there for the religious societies of the country to enter the field, and all the more occasion is there for the Government to encourage them. The fact of the matter is——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIGG. May I have two minutes more? I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that I do not propose to offer any further amendments if this is rejected. I will assume that the action of the committee in regard to this amendment will govern in reference to all others.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to the gentleman proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. QUIGG. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to gentlemen that in my opinion the thing that this committee ought to do is to resist every one of these reductions proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs. It ought not to engage in a policy of reaction in the matter of education. Every dollar that is needed to provide for the proper care and education of these school children ought to be appropriated. You know that you are not in this bill providing for the number of school children for whom provision should be made. Probably you are providing for the number that can, under all the circumstances of the case, be conveniently accommodated. But the work of educating the Indian is at the very beginning, and is not by any means concluded. You ought not to take a back track in that direction, or discourage people who are engaged in the practical work of education by cutting down salaries or dealing with them in a mean and niggardly way. We ought to encourage, help, and sustain them, and do all that we can to give more pupils to the schools and give larger work and better facilities for the education of these people. I hope, therefore, that the amendment, in view of these considerations, will prevail.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Indian Affairs, after careful consideration of all the salaries, and in view of several facts which were brought to the attention of the committee, were impressed with the idea that a few persons employed in this service might have their salaries reduced without detriment or injury to the service; in those cases especially where favoritism had manifestly been carried out in former appropriations. The qualifications of the superintendent of one of these schools are about the same as the qualifications that are required in the common schools in all parts of the States.

Mr. QUIGG. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I know that there are few instances where such employments are paid as high as under this bill.

The gentleman must bear in mind that everything at the agency belongs to the Government; the buildings, the horses and carriages, and everything of that kind, belong to the Government; so that it is not simply the $1,500 salary, but the further use of a very comfortable house—sometimes, in fact an elegant one—to live in; which has, as a general rule, no connection with the agent; and so, too, with the horses and carriages. The superintendent of schools practically has the use of them, as they belong to the Government. I suppose as a matter of fact the salaries of these gentlemen will average as much as $2,500.

Mr. QUIGG. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. The highest salaries would certainly average that. These privileges, the gentleman must remember, are very valuable, and when taken into account will show fully that average.

Mr. QUIGG. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. The privileges are important and valuable; and the salaries, I repeat, are ample, beyond the average paid in any State whose system I have had occasion to investigate.

Mr. FLYNN. Let me suggest to the gentleman further the fact that in many instances these teachers, while against the law and contrary to it, live on the rations provided for the Indians.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; and you can not prevent it. All of these things go in to make up the salaries.

Let us have a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment of Mr. QUIGG was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of one hundred Indian pupils at St. Boniface's Industrial School, at Banning, Cal., $12,500.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out in line 15 the words "at St. Boniface's Industrial School."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 15 the words, "at St. Boniface's Industrial School;" so that it will read: "For support and education of one hundred Indian pupils at Banning, Cal., $12,500."

Mr. HULL. This does not interfere with the appropriation. I understand that at Banning they have a good-sized village, with public school facilities, and this appropriation can go to the public schools there and not deprive a single Indian of any advantage or privilege of education that he has to-day.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is as to the privileges they get under the common-school education?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the case all over the country.

Mr. HULL. Now, sir, so far as I am concerned, wherever I can by my vote, on any amendment to this bill, give the public schools the right to educate the Indian child, I shall vote for such amendment; and I shall vote for it not because I am opposed to any church or denomination, for I recognize the fact that any religion is better than none, nor shall I stop to inquire what church has charge of the matter.

I am in favor, first, of educating these Indians. If the Government can not educate them through the public schools—nonsectarian schools—I would then vote the money to sectarian schools, although I believe that the principle of giving one dollar to sectarian schools for the education of any of the youths of this country, no matter of what nationality, is contrary to the correct theory of our Government.

Mr. BOWERS of California. Your amendment does not prevent the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from directing that these pupils be educated at this school. It simply leaves it to his discretion.

Mr. HULL. Now, I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana that the Methodists and Presbyterians and Baptists are all in this same boat as well as the Catholics, so that this is not a blow at any church. It is simply an attempt to get our school system back to the line it ought to be on, of educating the children of the country in secular affairs, and allowing the churches to educate them in religious affairs.

Mr. EVERETT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. EVERETT. Does this public school, where the gentleman thinks the Indian can be educated as well as at St. Boniface School, have the industrial element in its course of teaching?

Mr. HULL. I can only say that the industrial element is an element that does not enter into our public schools as a rule, and I can not see why we should go outside and give any denomination the right to teach our Indians how to work.

Mr. BOWERS of California. You can hire them to work.

Mr. HULL. You can hire them to work. You can put teachers there to teach them to work. That is no argument against the amendment I offer. I simply offer it for the purpose of bringing this question of education back where it should be, so that where there are public schools, where the Indian can be educated just as your children and mine are educated, there shall be no discrimination in favor of sectarian schools.

Mr. BOWERS of California. The gentleman's amendment still leaves it with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Bureau, to keep these Indian children at the school where they now are if it is desirable.

Mr. HOLMAN. As a matter of fact, if the appropriation was not made at all, your common-school system would embrace these Indian children.

Mr. HULL. Where there is a large reservation close to a town, if you are going to throw the burden of educating Indian children on the public schools, the Government ought to give as much to the public schools as to a sectarian school.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am inclined to admit that; but if the Government made no appropriation at all, the Indian children would still have the benefit of the public schools.

Mr. HULL. I do not believe that would be so in all cases.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The proposition of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL], as I understand it, is to give the Indian children the benefit of the common schools of the country, wherever we can.

Mr. HULL. Wherever we can.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. But what will you do in cases where there are no common schools? Take a large reservation that is miles and miles away from any of the public schools of the State or Territory in which the reservation may be located; what method will the gentleman adopt for the education of the Indian children upon those reservations? Take, for the sake of illustration, the Yakima Indian Reservation, where the agency is 40 miles away from any public school of the State.

Mr. HULL. How many schools have they in that reservation?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Two.

Mr. HULL. Then those schools are 20 miles apart?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. No, they are all at the agency.

Mr. HULL. And the pupils are 40 miles from the schools, you say?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. PICKLER. They bring them in from a hundred miles away, sometimes.

Mr. HULL. Can they not bring them in just as well in this case? But, I will say to the gentleman, that it will be time enough to consider that question when it arises.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DEFICIENCY IN PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill, after which the Chair will ask if there be objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

An act (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, namely:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

For the public printing and binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, including the salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks or employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract) and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, including $20,000 for the Department of the Interior, being for the fourth quarter of the fiscal year 1894, $100,000.

To enable the Public Printer to pay to the employés heretofore or now employed in the Government Printing Office since July 1, 1893, such sums as may be due them for leaves of absence, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, had been granted to such persons in said fiscal year on account of service rendered in the preceding fiscal year, and also to pay all employés of the said office any leave of absence which they may have failed to obtain from the lack of necessary appropriations or other cause, $65,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Hereafter the Public Printer is authorized to pay pro rata leave of absence, out of any appropriation for leaves of absence to employés of the Government Printing Office in any fiscal year, notwithstanding the fact that thirty days' leave of absence, with pay, may have been granted to such employés in that fiscal year on account of service rendered in a previous fiscal year.

CUSTOMS SERVICE.

To defray the expenses of collecting the revenue from customs, being additional to the permanent appropriation for this purpose, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, $185,000

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, if the House will give me its attention I will explain the necessity of passing this appropriation this evening.

Mr. BURROWS. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas what is meant by the appropriation there for leaves of absence of employés of the Government Printing Office? As I caught the reading, it provides that a leave may be granted for a part of a month, or thirty days, to an employé, notwithstanding the fact that such employé may have had thirty days' leave of absence in the preceding year. Is that correct?

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, under the law as it now exists, and as construed by the Court of Claims, an employé of the Printing Office, in order to secure any leave, must have served twelve months. In other words, if he shall have served the last fiscal year he would be entitled to leave at the rate of two and one-half days per month for the entire year, but he would not be paid until after the close of that year. Now, it so happens that the 600 or 700 employés who have been discharged lately by the Public Printer in fact earned leaves during the present year at the rate of two and one-half days for each month while employed; but inasmuch as this fiscal year during which they were paid for leave earned in the previous fiscal year has not expired, they would not be entitled to receive their pay at the present time. They have really earned their leave, and it ought to be paid.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. They have earned their pro rata of the thirty days' leave, and this provides that these men shall be paid the proportion that they have earned, notwithstanding the fact that they have not earned the entire thirty days?

Mr. SAYERS. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is exactly right, and I wanted to have that expression made. I think it has always been the law, but it has not been so construed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SAYERS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 210) for the relief of Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo., and

A bill (S. 513) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs Reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Barry Hospital.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Also, protest of Julius Nathan & Co., Fort Wayne, Ind., against extension of the bonded period for whisky—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MORSE: Petition of Edwin D. Mead and 5 other citizens of Boston, asking for the abrogation of the extradition treaty with Russia—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PAGE: Resolutions of the Board of Trade of Providence, R. I., for legislation regarding the interstate commerce law—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PENCE: Protest of S. C. Henton, of Yokima, Wash., against the passage of House bill 6425—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, protest of the Evangelical Lutheran settlement and others, of Wray, Colo., against the God in the Constitution amendment—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution in favor of the House bill 119, known as the McRae bill—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, petition of the citizens of Park County, Colo., asking amendment to the law creating South Platte forest reservation—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. THOMAS: Petition of H. A. Rowe, L. O. Schaefer, C. H. Schaefer, and 57 others, to exempt fraternal and beneficial societies from all the provisions of the income tax—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of W. P. Traphager, J. Gunsaul, W. W. Buys, and 60 others, of Court, Van Buren County, Mich., asking for the passage of the Stone bill, entitled "An act to secure a better grade of immigrants," etc.—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 15, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by Rev. E. B. BAGBY, Chaplain of the House of Representatives.

The VICE-PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

On motion of Mr. FAULKNER, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a petition of the Baltimore (Md.) Corn and Flour Exchange, praying that the interstate-commerce law be so amended as to enable the Commission to secure stability in rates and nondiscrimination among shippers and competing points; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. PATTON presented a petition of the Michigan Life Insurance Agents' Association, of Detroit, Mich., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Reed City, Mich.; New York City, N. Y., and Washington, D. C., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BATE presented a petition of the Hamilton County League of Building Associations of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying that national building and loan associations and local building and loan associations be exempted from the proposed imcome-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Tennessee, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes, the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Nashville, Tenn., and a petition of sundry citizens of Harriman, Tenn., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORRILL presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., Cambridge and Boston, Mass., Buffalo, N. Y., and Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the abrogation of the extradition treaty with Russia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a memorial signed by members of various fraternal beneficiary orders composing the National Fraternal Congress, having a combined membership of over 2,000,000, complaining that the income tax bears heavily and unjustly upon members thereof, nine-tenths of whom can ill afford to bear the burden of this additional tax. I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I also present a memorial signed by many hundred citizens of St. Louis, Mo., in which the memorialists "respectfully but vigorously protest against the recent adoption of the Allen amendment to the Wilson tariff bill, by which barb fence wire is put on the free list.

"We are wire-workers by trade and depend wholly upon this business for our living and feel confident that this recent action of our Senators will seriously cripple if not destroy this important branch of the wire industry." I move that the memorial lie on the table, as the bill to which it refers is now under consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cook County, Ill., praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes, the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Eureka, Ill., praying that fraternal society and college journals be admitted to the mails as second-class matter; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented the petition of Thomas Campbell and sundry other citizens of Vincennes, Ind., praying "that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations operating upon the lodge system and providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, and other benefits to the members and dependents of such members shall be exempt from all the provisions of the bill requiring taxation in any form;" which, on motion of Mr. TURPIE, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a resolution adopted by the Kansas City (Mo.) Transportation Bureau, transmitted by its president, A. J. Vanlandingham, in favor of the so-called Patterson amendment to the act regulating commerce, as reported by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives May 31, 1894. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL presented sundry memorials of wholesale and retail liquor dealers of Kansas City, Mo., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which, on motion of Mr. COCKRELL, were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Gentry County, Mo., praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation: which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON presented the memorial of David Wise & Co., of Lincoln, Nebr., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the bonded period; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of employés of the Consolidated Steel and Wire Companies, of Rankin and Allentown, in the State of Pennsylvania, and of the Cincinnati Barbed Wire Fence Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Allen amendment to the Wilson tariff bill placing barbed fence wire on the free list; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Highland, Ill., praying that a duty of not less than 60 per cent ad valorem be placed upon laces and embroideries and articles wholly or partly composed thereof, whether made of metal, cotton, flax, silk, or wool; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented sundry memorials of wholesale and retail liquor dealers of various cities in Illinois, remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Winnebago County, Ill., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of D. L. Pratt, jr., and sundry other citizens of Woodbury County, Iowa, and the petition of M. L. Temple and sundry other citizens of Iowa, praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Iowa, praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FRYE. I present a petition of 35 citizens of West Scarboro, Me., and a petition of 25 citizens of Augusta, Me., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill. I ask that the petitions lie on the table, the Committee on Finance having agreed to report an amendment which responds to the request of the petitioners.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. LODGE presented the petition of John R. Story and 55 other citizens of Essex County, Mass., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Herbert A. Boynton and 22 other citizens of Newtonville; of H. A. Hallett and 13 other members of Crescent Council, No. 71, Royal Arcanum, of Chelsea; and of C. W. Boyer and 114 other citizens of Somerville, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented sundry memorials of citizens of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DANIEL presented the memorial of A. Goodman, of Pocahontas, Va., remonstrating against an increase of the internal-revenue tax on whisky, and also against an extension of the present bonded period; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of Thad. Wootten and sundry other citizens of Norfolk, Va., praying that the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

GONZAGA COLLEGE LAND.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6576) to provide for the closing of part of an alley in square 622, in the city of Washington, D. C., and for the relief of the president and directors of Gonzaga College, to report it without amendment. A similar Senate bill was reported favorably sometime ago, and it is very important that the measure should be passed. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the bill (S. 1855) to provide for the closing of part of an alley in square 622, in the city of Washington, D. C., and for the relief of the president and directors of Gonzaga College be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KYLE. I am directed by the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2110) to aid and encourage the holding of a Cotton States and International Exposition at Atlanta, Ga., in the year 1895, and making an appropriation therefor, to report it favorably without amendment, and to request that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to be considered as an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CAFFERY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1881) for the relief of Edward H. Murrell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1515) to amend chapter 6 of Title XXXII of the Revised Statutes relating to mineral lands and mining resources.

Mr. VEST. I suggest to the Senator from Nevada that we had better get through with morning business. I have a report from a committee to submit.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Morning business is not yet concluded.

Mr. VEST. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 172) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts within the city of Baltimore to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years, to report it without amendment. Both the Senators from Maryland are very anxious to have the joint resolution considered, as it is of pressing and immediate importance. It refers to the occupation of the United States court room in the city of Baltimore. The court is in session, and it is necessary for it to have the use of this room.

Mr. HOAR. Let the joint resolution be read for information.

Mr. BERRY. Let us finish the morning business first.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose there will be no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution when the routine morning business has been concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Missouri for the purpose of calling up the joint resolution at the conclusion of the routine business.

Mr. MCMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, submitted a written report to accompany the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the Metropolitan Railroad Company to change its motive power for the propulsion of the cars of the said company.

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself May 11, 1894, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, submitted a favorable report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6016) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 2120) for the relief of William T. Holman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2121) to establish a system of assessment and permit work, and to make service connections with water mains and sewers in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 2122) to increase the pension of Mrs. Eunice Ida Gallup Rhoades; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SHOUP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer an amendment intended to be proposed to the post-office appropriation bill, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to have the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio read, if it is not long, as that bill has been under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). If there be no objection the proposed amendment will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Cincinnati to Atlanta, and from Cincinnati to Cleveland, $100,000; Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in the absence of objection.

Mr. HUNTON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTRICAL EXPERIMENTAL STATION.

Mr. PEFFER. I find on examination that the bill (S. 1170) to establish an electrical experimental station for the purpose of investigating and determining whether electricity can be profitably applied as a motive power in the propulsion of farm machinery and implements needs some little amendment, and I therefore move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

REEXAMINATION OF TREASURY SETTLEMENT.

Mr. HILL submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, required to cause the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to reexamine Treasury settlement numbered 4,813 of 1884 heretofore certified to Congress for appropriation in favor of the Sun Mutual and other insurance companies of New York for insurances paid on the steamer Osceola, and to submit the reasons for said certification, together with a detailed statement of the facts upon which the claims originated, similar to that submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury May 16, 1894 (printed in Senate Executive Document No. 98, second session Fifty-third Congress), in regard to certain other Treasury settlements certified to Congress for appropriation at the same time as this settlement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What is the request of the Senator from New York in regard to the resolution?

Mr. HILL. I should like to have the resolution passed.

Mr. HOAR. Is there a report connected with it?

Mr. CULLOM. It is a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it explained.

Mr. COCKRELL. Probably the resolution had better be printed and go over. It raises an important question, whether the Senate has a right to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to review an account that has been once adjusted and reported to Congress and make a new decision.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand that the resolution went so far. I did not rise for the purpose of objecting to it at all.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator asked whether it came from a committee. Do I understand that the resolution has been reported by a committee?

Mr. HILL. It has not.

Mr. COCKRELL. It has not been reported from any committee.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it go over and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I interposed an inquiry which led to the going over of a resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] this morning. I supposed, by hearing it read imperfectly at the desk, that it was a measure to set aside some action; but I see it is a mere resolution of inquiry, and I desire to withdraw my suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so noted.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be passed, if there be no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An objection was interposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], as the Chair understands, to its present consideration.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggested that the resolution had better be printed and lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I made an inquiry as to the resolution, but I see it is merely a resolution of inquiry, and, so far as I am concerned, I do not wish to interpose any further objection to it.

Mr. HARRIS. If it be only a resolution of inquiry, I have no objection to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the resolution will be considered as before the Senate. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 3487) granting an increase of pension to Eliza K. Starr;

A bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed to the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west 40 miles of the present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians June 15, 1880;

A bill (H. R. 7278) to amend the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891; and

A bill (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 210) for the relief of Wetmore & Bro., of St. Louis, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 513) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Springs Reservation in the State of Arkansas to the Barry Hospital.

MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. STEWART. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 1515) to amend chapter 6 of Title XXXII of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Mines and Mining with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 28, before the word "dollars," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty;" so as to read:

On all lode claims located prior to the 10th day of May, 1872, $10 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year for each 100 feet in length along the vein until payment of the purchase money and a certificate of entry has been issued therefor; and for each 20 acres of placer claims, and for each subdivision thereof less than 20 acres, $50 worth of labor shall be performed or improvements made during each year until payment of the purchase money and a certificate of entry shall be issued therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 20, before the word "agriculture," to strike out "or" and insert "than;" so as to make the additional proviso read:

That in investigating the character of land with a view to ascertain whether it is more valuable for mineral than agriculture, evidence may be taken of the mineral discovered or developed adjacent to such land.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if this is a copy of the bill which has heretofore passed the Senate?

Mr. STEWART. Exactly, except changing the date.

Mr. DOLPH. From what committee does it come?

Mr. STEWART. From the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. DOLPH. Does it relieve the mine holders from the burden of doing the necessary work for the present year?

Mr. STEWART. It does, and one-half for the next year.

Mr. DOLPH. I am satisfied with it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3487) granting an increase of pension to Eliza K. Starr was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 7278) to amend the seventh section of the act entitled "An act to establish circuit courts of appeals, and to define and regulate in certain cases the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. PEFFER.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I regretted to observe last evening, when I reluctantly gave way to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], that my friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], manifested some indications of impatience and seemed to think that the business of the Senate was not proceeding as rapidly as it should, and that we should vote immediately upon the pending measure. The Senator from Tennessee has not always been so anxious to expedite the business before the Senate, and I apprehend that if this were a Federal elections bill, or a measure for strengthening the credit of the Government and to maintain the present money standard of the country, he would not now be so anxious to have the business expedited and come to a vote on the measure.

I recollect during the first session of the present Congress, the special session, when I manifested some degree of impatience at the tactics which was resorted to to prevent the measure then pending, which was the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, from coming to a vote, and inadvertently suggested that I was tired of such tactics, my friend from Tennessee remarked, in his usual tone, that if the Senator from Oregon was tired he had better sit down.

I will suggest to the Senator that he manifests too much impatience with the discussion of this bill. He should remember that this is an important measure; that it affects great industries of the country, which employ labor; that it affects the prosperity of every man, woman, and child of our probably nearly 70,000,000 of population; and that it is a measure which requires careful consideration, deliberation, and discussion, in order that, if possible, such changes as will tend to restore the prosperity of this country in the bill last reported by the committee may be made, in order, as the Democratic majority of the Senate has now abandoned its principle of tariff for revenue only, and claims that this bill is a fairly protective bill as to many industries, that the bill should be made uniform and all industries should be alike protected. I certainly shall do my best to secure such deliberation and consideration and discussion, and shall endeavor to secure amendments to the bill to make it reasonably satisfactory to the people I in part represent.

I had presented last evening, before I yielded to the motion to adjourn, a statement showing the number of pounds of the importations of wool and the value of the same for four years, and also of woolen manufactures. I now present a statement showing the percentage of shrinkages and loss in scouring wool, the London scoured value, and the free-trade scoured value in the Eastern American markets; London fleece price, and also the free-wool price in the Eastern American markets; the cost per pound of shipping from the farms to the factories, including freights, insurance, shipping commissions, etc., which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD in full. The wools are classified by sections, and it is a very interesting and condensed statement, showing the effect which the threat of placing wool upon the free list has already had and which it will have in the future.

The Secretary read as follows:

The destruction of woolgrowing in the United States.

†Before which time the McKinley law was in full force, but since which date its practical effects have been as nearly null and void as though the bill had actually been repealed.

This table shows in the two right-hand parallel columns the free-wool price of the principal grades of American wool on the farm or ranch June 1, 1894, and the minimum price received on the farm under the McKinley law previous to March 1, 1893.

The McKinley price on the farm is in the outside column.

The free-wool price on the farm is in the column next to outside column.

THE EFFECT OF FREE WOOL.

The pending Wilson-Brice tariff bill proposes to take $40,000,000 annually from the woolgrowers of the United States by the removal of 11 cents per pound duties, lowering the value heretofore received for the wool crop of 365,000,000 pounds by more than $40,000,000 below the values annually received previous to 1893.

THE EFFECT OF 5 CENTS PER POUND DUTY ON WOOL.

If only 5 cents per pound duty is put upon wools of the first and second classes, which are mainly those qualities grown in the United States, over $18,000,000 more than the free wool price will be put into the hands of the woolgrowers for the wool crop of 1894, which is now being shorn and prepared for market.

If raw materials like coal and iron ore are to be protected, although in one hour after lying dormant in the mine they can be got ready for market, why should not wool also be protected, when it requires a whole year to prepare it for market as against one hour for coal and iron ore? If the free raw material planks of the Chicago platform are to be waived with regard to coal and iron ore, why should the same policy not be applied to American wool?

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, in regard to the cost of the production of wool in Oregon and the effect of free wool upon the industry there, I desire to let some of the wool-producers and persons familiar with the subject speak for themselves. I hold in my hand a statement sent me not for the purpose of publication, by Mr. E. P. Cranston, of Keating, Oreg., showing the cost of a band of 1,500 ewes for one year, and the value of the products at the present prices of wool. Mr. Cranston assures me that—

There is no money in the sheep business, and should wool be placed on the free list I shall quit the business. The longer I remain in it the worse I shall be off.

The statement is in the form of an account. I ask that it be read at the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

Expense on a band of 1,500 ewes one year.

Cost, say, at $1.25, $1,875. Wool at 5 cents. These prices are all wool and sheep will bring to-day.

Interest on cost, $1,875, at 10 per cent	$187.50
150 tons hay, at $5	750.00
1½ tons salt, at $25	37.50
3 extra herders during lambing	105.00
Loss on 1,500 sheep, 5 per cent for year (small)	93.75
Shearing 1,425 sheep, at 7 cents	99.75
1 herder one year	420.00
33 wool sacks, for wool	16.50
One-half of one man's time in tending camp, with expenses of horses, pack saddles, etc	200.00
18 months board of herder and tender, at $10	180.00
6 days with 4-horse team hauling wool 20 miles	42.00
3 extra men during two days shearing, at $1.50	9.00
Board 10 men during two days shearing, sixty meals, at 25 cents	15.00
Expense and feed of team and wagon ninety days, winter feeding	67.50
Taxes on 1,500 sheep, $1,875, 2 per cent	37.50
	2,261.00
Incidental, 10 per cent on $2,261	226.10

CR.

Wool from 1,425 sheep, at 7 pounds—9,975 pounds, at 5 cents	498.75
1,068 lambs (75 per cent of 1,425), at 75 cents	801.00

Net loss for one year, $1,187.25.

Same band of sheep at old rates of wool and price of sheep.

Add to expense account difference of taxes and interest on difference of cost between $1.25 and $2. This difference is $1,125.

Interest one year on $1,125, at 10 per cent	$112.50
Taxes one year on $1,125, at 2 per cent	22.50
Add above expense on the 1,500	2,487.10
	2,622.10

CR.

By 9,975 pounds wool, at 15 cents (average)	1,496.25
By 1,068 lambs (75 per cent of 1,425), at $1.50	1,602.00

Profit at former prices, $476.15.

This seems small, but we have the profit on our own hay, also profit on our own teams and pack horses, and our own tender on camps.

I consider the above a fair estimate.

E. P. CRANSTON,
Keating, Oreg.

Mr. DOLPH. In connection with this statement I submit another communication from a constituent of mine—a citizen of Oregon engaged in sheep growing—which will present the Oregon woolgrower's case better than I can present it myself.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE DALLES, OREG., February 10, 1894.

Hon. J. N. DOLPH,
Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: I have been requested, as a woolgrower of east Oregon, to write you in regard to the condition of the sheep and wool industry of this country during the last administration and at the present time.

During the last administration stock sheep were worth at this season of the year from $3 to $3.75 per head, mutton from $3.50 to $4.25. At the present time stock sheep are worth from $1.25 to $1.50 per head, and mutton from $1.75 to $2.35. There are sheep-raisers in Wasco County who are offering to engage their entire flock, at $1 per head, after shearing; not only one man, but many.

I sold my wool during the last administration for from 15½ to 18 cents in The Dalles. The same class of wool is worth here at the present time from 6 to 8 cents per pound.

During the last administration the woolgrowers of this country were among the most prosperous class of people in the State; their credit was among the best; their patronage as eagerly sought after by bankers, merchants, and all other business men as the most valued customers of any class of producers in this country.

The present price of wool and sheep will not pay the expense of caring for and raising them, and the credit and patronage of the woolgrower at the present time is considered as doubtful and risky and as much to be avoided by bankers, merchants, and other business men as the poorest in the land. Having been engaged in the business during the last ten years, therefore speak from personal experience and observation, and from the opinions of representative woolgrowers with whom I am acquainted and have known for a number years.

During the time that I have been engaged in wool and sheep raising, and especially under the operation of the McKinley bill up to the time of the supremacy of the Democratic party, conditions were such that any person with ordinary intelligence, industry, and prudence had every reason and assurance that they could be successful in the sheep business.

I could mention the names of many in my own vicinity and adjoining sections whom only a few years ago started, in the most humble positions (sheep-herding) without any capital, through their own exertions, prudence, and industry, stand to-day among the well-to-do, prosperous, and honorable citizens of our State.

The conditions under protection were such as to build up hope, encourage and stimulate the poor man in his honest endeavor to secure a competency and independence for himself and those dependent upon him, a happy state to which the poor of other countries seldom reach.

Not only has the protection of our sheep and wool interest in the lonely deserts of the West made it possible for the penniless sheep-herder to become a wealthy man and influential citizen, but has enabled him to contribute largely toward the support of other people.

Farmers, merchants, laborers, and even to the great Transcontinental Railroad all have received their portion of the distributions of the Western woolgrowers. As you are no doubt aware, among the most prosperous cities of the inland empire owe their prosperity in a large measure to the beneficial conditions under which our sheep and wool industries have existed, and the same may be said of most of the cities and communities contained in the great "arid" regions of the West.

Is it any wonder the thousands of industrious, energetic men scattered over all this great Western range country, striving and toiling along the road of prosperity, urged on by hope and expectation until success is almost within their grasp, should view with fear and trembling this great obstacle (the Wilson bill) that has appeared before them; this loathsome blight, that is threatening to destroy their fields of labor when the golden harvests are almost ready to be gathered; a blight so destructive that it will leave the products of their labors worth less than the costs of the raising? Is it any wonder that the flock-masters of this Western country are willing to sacrifice their flocks at almost any price?

When it is known the wool from Australia and other foreign countries, with whom we can not (with wool on the free list) compete on account of cheaper labor and other natural advantages such as we do not possess can be shipped to Boston or New York for less than it costs the Western woolgrower (on an average) to transport his wool from the shearing corral to the nearest line of transportation. The great danger of the immediate removal of the only barrier now standing between us and the destruction of our great industry can scarcely be comprehended. But knowing, as we do, your valued past record in caring for and defending the interests of all the people of this State, do not deem it necessary to remind or urge upon you the great importance of this one.

Thinking that perhaps a few plain facts from one actively engaged in a valued industry of your State, now threatened by legislative destruction, might be of some benefit, I remain, Yours, truly, A. M. KELSEY.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, yesterday I stated that the destruction of the woolgrowing industry in Oregon would deprive several thousand farmers and laboring men and many more persons dependent upon them for support of the means of subsistence, and would render valueless large tracts of land in the eastern portion of the State which can be utilized for pasture for sheep, but can not be improved for general agricultural purposes. The letter just read at the desk reminds me that there are other interests which I did not mention yesterday that will be disastrously affected. For instance, 2,500,000 sheep in eastern Oregon, scattered throughout that great extent of territory, make a local market for hay and for grain which can not be marketed after the woolgrowing industry is destroyed and the sheep driven out of the country or to the slaughter pens. The wool product and the increase of the flocks also provide freight for the transportation lines, and so there are great numbers of men employed in the various industries who are indirectly benefited by the woolgrowing industry in the State and who will be indirectly injured by its destruction.

I have here a copy of a letter written by one of the most intelligent citizens of Oregon, who has made the question of woolgrowing and sheep-raising and the subject of agriculture and fruit-growing a study for a lifetime. It was written to Hon. William R. Ellis, one of Oregon's Representatives in the other House, and is a very intelligent statement of the condition of the woolgrowing industry in Oregon, the cost of conducting the same, and the profit. Considering the impatience of my friend from Tennessee, I shall not ask that it be read if it can go into the RECORD without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oregon? The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

THE DALLES, OREG., December 10, 1893.

DEAR SIR: As one of your constituents allow me to thank you for your action favoring the extension of time for the payment of dues upon our railway lands. The passage of that bill will be a blessing to many who are trying hard to make homes for themselves and families in this highland region.

I also offer you a representation of our woolgrowing industry, and beg leave to express with regret the feeling of gloom which seems to thoroughly prevail among a large portion of the settlers who came in upon these highland plateaus and mountain sides, and made homes upon lands not suited to diversified farming but excellent for sheep husbandry.

The withdrawal of protection from woolgrowing, by allowing the admission of foreign-grown wool free of duty, and the inability of shepherds to dispose of their last year's product, which in this eastern Oregon valley amounts to 23,500,000 pounds, not only spreads distress, but paints the future of this heretofore prosperous industry, which is far greater than all else here, with the most distressing uncertainty.

I am personally acquainted with many sheep owners who have bought lands and fitted up homes and ranches under the protective encouragement of the Government, especially that of the McKinley tariff, and were thoroughly prosperous and happy in their highland homes, two, three, four, five, six, and some seven thousand feet above the ocean, which is almost in sight to the west of some of the plateaus upon the Cascade Range, where they find the finest grasses, in a climate unsuited to varied agriculture, but splendid for sheep grazing and the production of the finest mutton.

Their business, I assure you, was very prosperous, as I will show you. Some of these men, nay, most of them, came here and entered upon this national industry without capital, and some of them have eight, ten, twelve, and sixteen thousand sheep, and have established home ranches and improvements all over an area of forty to fifty thousand square miles; bringing civilization, schools, houses, churches, villages, mills, and comfort and happiness. And now they bow to what appears inevitable—destruction and ruin of their industry and its great privileges; the American wool market offered free to the foreigner and to semi-civilization.

I assure you, these sheepmen are conscious of the effect of the complete change in the economic policy of the Government toward sustaining their industry, and are trying to sell their sheep at $1, and, in some cases, at 70 cents per head. When I came here twenty years since, there were in this immense great mountain basin but 21,000 sheep that sheared only 5½ pounds of wool each; last year (1892) we sheared 23,000,000 pounds of wool from sheep that yielded 7 to 8½ pounds each, upon the great ranges almost all in sight of this locality. The physical character of the sheep has been much improved for mutton, consequently of the fiber.

You will please bear in mind that this great industry now forced to compete with Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Buenos Ayres, etc., is in eastern Oregon distributed all over the land and is, or has been, a blessing to all of the people, bringing comfort and plenty to any industrious man's door who would enter upon it, and within the reach of any industrious man; its stock in trade was at home; it fed and clothed and found its market for the produce at home, and distributed all its blessings at home, instead of going to a foreign people with them. Trusting you will pardon the liberty I have taken in addressing you, I want to be allowed to present facts to convince you of the calamity we feel awaits us in removing the tariff now upon foreign wool.

In the year 1892 we received at this depot 5,532,000 pounds, and paid therefor ar average of 16 cents per pound, making cash received	$885,120.00
Mutton, 130,000 head, at $2.25 each	292,500.00

I am not able to hand you the wool receipts for Baker City, La Grand, and other posts in your district, but you may rely, upon the number of sheep returned, that the district you represent has produced this past year 24,000,000 pounds of wool. By the price I have given you as that paid last year (1892) at the producer's home market and that received this year, being less than half as much, and mutton being only worth one-third as much as in 1892, such action by Congress will virtually stop the progress of all the population in this immense grazing kingdom.

I hope you will not think I write at random.

Until I came here I was a wool manufaturer, and was engaged in handling the wool of all countries that was on the market, and as a fair judge I am proud of what my neighbors have done in establishing here on American soil the best kind of sheep breeding, and systematically feeding their sheep so as to produce a fine, long, strong-fibered wool. Eight and 8½ pounds of wool on a fat, well-fed sheep, is what intelligence among these high mountain shepherds has done, instead of shearing only 5½ pounds, the old average here. All of this wool has a splendid felting fiber, and although 3,000 to 7,000 feet above the ocean, has no tender spot in the fiber for the dry days of July and August—night dews.

The Oregon woolgrower was proud of his success, but it is unfortunate that political success demands that a political party shall break down such an industry and discourage such a splendid set of men and their families, and for the sake of political ascendency give these established privileges to great united masses of capital which control semicivilized sheep ranges of other countries. This act to remove protection to American woolgrowers will, directly and indirectly, seriously injure 25,000 men, women, and children in these highlands, who under Republican economy found comfort and plenty at their own "doorsill."

I am, respectfully, your friend,

THOS. S. LANG.

Hon. WILLIAM R. ELLIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. DOLPH. To emphasize what has already been so well stated on this floor by the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] and my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL] and others concerning the difference in the cost of transportation of the American wool product, as compared with the cost of transporting the product of some foreign countries whose citizens compete with the citizens of the United States in woolgrowing, I will quote briefly from a letter received from Messrs. Keyser, Fisler & Co., of Philadelphia, as follows:

A NEW ZEALAND WOOLGROWER.

D. E. Meikle, a prominent woolgrower from Chatham Islands, New Zealand, recently stated "that he had resided in that country for thirty years; that he is a sheep-grower; that ocean freights are three-eighths of a cent a pound to London; that it costs him 4 cents per head to shear his sheep; and that it costs him 7 cents per pound to produce his wool and sell it on the London market.

This is accompanied by a statement of an Idaho woolgrower, Frank J. Hegart, of the firm of J. D. Wood & Co., Challis, Idaho, who is ready to make affidavit—

That Mr. Wood has resided in Idaho twenty-seven years; that he is a sheep-grower and ranged about 30,000 sheep in Idaho last year; that railroad freights are 2½ cents a pound to Philadelphia; that it costs him 10 cents per head to shear his sheep; that it costs him over 20 cents per pound to produce his wool, and sell it on the Philadelphia market.

Mr. President, this shows that not only in the matter of pasture lands or the cost of lands, the cost of labor, and in climate, but that in transportation many of the foreign woolgrowers have a decided advantage over the American producer of wool.

If we were to leave out all considerations of the difference in the price of labor, the difference in the cost of pasturage, and the difference in the expense of shearing, the simple difference in the cost of transportation would seem to require that a duty should be levied upon the foreign product to equalize the difference of the conditions between the foreign producer and the American producer.

I desire to quote briefly from a memorial which I hold in my hand, signed by the wool merchants of Boston. They say:

That the wool-producing industry of the United States and Territories, already the third largest of the world, needs only an adequate protection to increase rapidly in importance until it may rival the product of the most prolific of the English colonies, is shown by the fact that under the favoring system now threatened with removal, the increase in 1893 over 1892 was over 31,000,000 pounds, bringing the product of last year up to the enormous sum of 364,000,000 pounds. Is this hitherto profitable and increasing business to be transferred from our own people to the hands of the foreigner?

Already in a single year, from the mere fear of such legislation, the flock of the United States has shrunk in numbers from 47,273,553 to 45,048,017. In a single year the farmers of the United States, according to the Department of Agriculture, have seen the total value of their sheep decline from $125,909,264 on January 1, 1893, to $89,186,110 on January 1, 1894, showing a shrinkage of about $37,000,000 in this brief period; and if we take into account the shrinkage in value of farm and ranch property devoted to the sheep industry during the twelve months, we may say, without any fear of contradiction, that the direct loss on the fixed property of woolgrowers during one year has been not less than $50,000,000. But this is not all. It is a very moderate estimate to state that the decline in the value of the wool taken from these sheep in 1893 reduced the purchasing power of the woolgrowers by at least $20,000,000 more.

Seventy millions of dollars of loss in the decline of the value of their property, their flocks, and their wool product to the farmers of the United States in a single year by the mere threat of placing wool on the free list. They proceed to say:

If such losses have already been inflicted by the possibility of passing this bill, who shall measure the damage to follow if the bill itself becomes a law?

It goes without saying that the interests are mutual of the woolgrower of America, the manufacturer who manipulates the staple, and all who handle wool in any of its stages or in any capacity, and that they are natural allies. Hence, what benefits the grower is for the good of all.

Therefore, frowning upon all sectional legislation, which is too apparent in the Wilson bill, with the interests of the woolgrowers of this broad land from Maine to Texas and from Georgia to Oregon in view, we, the wool merchants of Boston, without distinction of party, whose signatures are hereto affixed, representing with few exceptions, the entire catalogue of wool dealers and commission merchants of this market, earnestly protest against the adoption of the inconsistent provisions of Schedule K of section No. 1 and paragraph No. 685 of section No. 2 of the measure now before the United States Senate known as the Wilson bill. Its adoption will be, in a great degree, destructive to the business of the wool producer, and whereas it is his right to demand the perpetuity of his industry, its continuance will also add, we believe, to the general prosperity of the country.

I desire to quote some brief extracts from the memorial of the Ohio Woolgrowers' Association, which I will insert in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLAURIN in the chair). The Chair hears no objection and leave is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AMERICAN WOOLGROWERS CAN WITH ADEQUATE PROTECTION SUPPLY ALL NEEDED WOOLS.

American woolgrowers with adequate protection can and soon will supply all wools needed for consumption in this country. No man doubts their capacity to supply all needed merino wools, and all the coarse wools of the mutton breeds. And with a sufficent number of these and the native Mexican sheep with crosses, adapted to Texas and some of the new States and Territories, all needed third-class wools can be supplied. (See U. S. Senate Mis. Doc. No. 149, Fifty-first Congress, first session.) And it is abundantly proved that the woolgrowers of this country can and do supply merino and other wools unsurpassed by—indeed superior to—any in the world. (See Bulletin of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, March, 1890, p. 4; also September, 1891, p. 307; Switzler's U. S. Treasury Department Wool Report, 1887, p. 36; Consular Reports U. S. State Department No. 128, May, 1891, p. 112; The American Wool Interest, New York American Protective Tariff League, September, 1892, p. 8.)

FREE WOOL WILL SUBSTANTIALLY DESTROY THE AMERICAN WOOL INDUSTRY.

This can be readily proved. The present prices of washed merino wool in the wool-manufacturing centers, New York, Philadelphia, and Boston, are from 20 to 23 cents; for unwashed about 15 cents, for the wools of the Northern States east of Kansas.

The price for North Dakota, western Kansas, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho unwashed merino is about 10 to 13 cents. For Washington, Oregon, Texas, New Mexico, from 8 to 13 cents. Other grades sell at corresponding rates.

These are the lowest rates ever known in this country.

The price has been forced down because wool manufacturers properly believed that before they could manufacture wool into goods they would be met by the importation of woolen goods on free-wool prices, and so could not afford to pay more than free-wool prices for American wools.

The prices already mentioned may be regarded as more than free-wool prices in our Eastern cities, where the chief wool manufacturing of the country exists.

But these are prices in those cities. The farm or ranch value of wools in the localities where produced will be and are from 3 to 4 cents per pound less, to cover local wool-buyers' profits, profits to wool merchants in the Eastern States; their commission for classifying, storing, insurance, and selling to manufacturers. Wools can be shipped from Melbourne, Australia, to Boston for less than 1 cent per pound, while from the Pacific States, Texas, and our new interior States freight ranges from 2 to 3 cents per pound; and Australian unwashed merino wools shrink in scouring only 50 per cent, while our Western unwashed shrink from 66 to 70 per cent, and sometimes more. With such prices wool can not be produced in any State or Territory of the United States.

COMPARISON OF SHEEP AND WOOL MANUFACTURING.

The wool industry now under normal conditions, as in former years, would represent the following:

Capital in sheep	$120,000,000
Capital in farms and barns for sheep	400,000,000
Number of flocks and flock-masters	1,000,000
Number of men employed a portion of the year	100,000
Wool produced, pounds	329,410,542
Value	$80,000,000
Number of sheep	45,000,000
Value of sheep sold for pelt and food	$30,000,000
Amount paid in wages	25,000,000
Value of services of flock-masters	50,000,000
Cost of washing and shearing sheep	5,000,000
Total amount paid for labor	80,000,000

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE WOOL INDUSTRY A COLOSSAL POLITICAL CRIME.

III. The product of the gold mines of the United States in 1892 was 1,596,375 fine ounces, of the value of $33,000,000; the product of the silver mines was 58,000,000 fine ounces Troy, worth at the average commercial value of $0.875 per fine ounce, $50,750,000, or a total of both of $83,750,000. Great as this is it is less than the annual value of the mutton product and the wool shorn from our 45,000,000 sheep at fair prices.

What would be said if Congress should prohibit the working of our gold mines and thus destroy their value?

We have heard much and truly of the ruin of the demonetization of silver, but free wool would be more ruinous than the destruction of our mines of gold and silver.

If a foreign army should approach our shores with a purpose to destroy a single village or to pillage one single sheep ranch every true American would be "ready to welcome the invaders with bloody hands to hospitable graves."

But we are now threatened with invasion by the woolgrowers of the outside world, whose purpose it is to destroy our sheep husbandry, to impoverish our people, and enrich themselves. The foreign woolgrowing countries take substantially nothing from us but gold in return for their wools, thus robbing us of the coin we need for the success of all our industries. When we produce the wool we have it and our gold—a double source of wealth; when we send gold abroad to buy foreign wool we have the perishable wool, the foreigners have the permanent wealth of gold.

Financial panics come because of the export of gold. If we cease to buy foreign wool we can forever avoid panics from that cause.

A GROSS AND UNJUST ATTACK ON AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRIES.

IV. Free wool, with such protection for wool manufacturing as will neither "imperil nor curtail" it, as a permanent policy, would be an invidious discrimination in favor of manufacturers against woolgrowers and the great body of our people engaged in agricultural pursuits.

VI.—SHEEP HUSBANDRY HAS STRONGER CLAIMS TO PROTECTIVE DUTIES THAN ANY AMERICAN INDUSTRIES.

1. This is so because it is the only absolutely national industry which reaches into and can be usefully pursued, and with blessings and advantages to all the people, in every State and Territory and in every county in the country.

When Gen. Hancock was a candidate for the Presidency he said: "The tariff is a local question." This is true as to many industries. The mining of lead, coal, iron ore, copper; the production of sugar, rice, tobacco, oranges; the manufacture of cotton, hemp, flax, iron, and other materials, all deserving protection—are all local. But sheep husbandry—the production of wool and mutton—is broad as the Republic; every inhabitant must have wool for clothing and needs mutton because healthful, the cheapest and best of all meat foods.

It gives employment for every locality, fertilizes lands all over the country wherever the "golden hoof" is found, and gives comfort from every "golden fleece."

2. Sheep husbandry has preeminent claims to protection because it is great among the greatest of all our industries in the amount of capital invested, the wages and revenues secured for labor and services, the value of its product in utilizing large areas of land available for no other purpose, and in the additions it makes to national and individual wealth, thus sharing and relieving burdens of taxation in every county in the Republic.

3. There is not one argument in favor of protection for any industry which is not more than equally applicable to sheep husbandry.

4. Neither wool nor mutton ever have been, and neither ever can be, made the subject of combinations or trusts to secure exorbitant prices. There are some industries in which both foreign and American combinations have been made to limit production and demand extortionate prices, but sheep husbandry encounters no such objection.

5. Who asks for free wool? Outside of the minority of Eastern wool manufacturers who favor free wool, and the few whom they influence, there is no demand for free wool. No petition from any other source has gone up to Congress for free wool.

Mr. DOLPH. As I have said before, this industry gives employment to American labor, to unskilled laborers. There are said to be over a million sheep-raisers and wool-growers in the United States. To be sure, a very large proportion of the sheep of the country are owned in large flocks, but they constitute as a rule in such cases the entire property of the owner. Sheep-raising and woolgrowing is his business, and he is engaged in no other. His lands, his time, his entire capital are engaged in the business. Then there are a large number of smaller flock-owners, small farmers, who, as has been said on this floor, depend upon the product of their flocks for the ready money required to buy the necessaries of life and for the payment of taxes. These are a class of our citizens who are entitled to the sympathy and the aid of legislators. The Democratic party has always claimed to be in sympathy with them and to be desirous of legislating in their interest.

Then this industry provides employment for many other citizens of less means, men who work for daily or monthly wages, as herders who care for the sheep, the shearers of sheep, and incidentally the industry furnishes employment to many others engaged in transportation, in producing hay, grain, and other employments. If any class of the people of the United States should be preferred when we come to legislate upon the tariff or upon any other subject it is the men who labor with their hands. In this country the American citizen who works by the month or by the day, in theory, at least, has the same political power as the man who owns his millions, as the man who controls the great industries of the country, as the man engaged in great enterprises.

This class of men are in the majority in this country, and to repeat what I have probably said many times before, this is the class that has made this country what it is to-day, and will decide the destiny of this country in the future, and if republican government is to be maintained, if our free institutions are to endure, this class of citizens must be made self-supporting and independent.

Mr. President, I do not care to follow up the discussion of this branch of the subject, but I will submit as a part of my remarks two brief quotations from the New England business men's memorial and petition to Congress, one under the head of "Necessities of American citizenship," and another under the head of "Rights of the American workingman."

II—NECESSITIES OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

American citizenship is connected with all the operations of our laws and scope of governmental authority, and links the humblest with the highest type of citizenship upon a common level in the exercise of the sovereignty of our people. Whatever benefits and privileges belong to a citizen are by right the common heritage of all, and each is entitled to them in the distribution of the general welfare.

The right to earn an honest livelihood is one of the rights of an American citizen guaranteed by the Constitution, which provides for the general welfare, and that the fruits of his labor shall be that which shall provide for his self-respect and comfort and tend to the development of true manhood. Intelligent, in the enjoyment of his high privilege as a citizen of a government which encourages patriotism and exists for the happiness of its people, he may improve the condition and control the destiny of his children, and thus provide for the future typical American citizen.

The welfare of the masses, including provision for their physical comfort and happiness, while enjoying the privileges of education and moral elevation, is no Utopian conception in our political economy, accepted and advocated in the free institutions of the American people.

So long as our Government shall stand among the nations of the earth, the necessities of the American people will demand that the fruition of their labor shall exceed that of any other people. Their wages should be and must remain higher to meet the demands of American citizenship, which is the endowment of human freedom.

III—RIGHTS OF THE AMERICAN WORKINGMAN.

The American workingman, let it be remembered, is an American citizen whose comfort, enjoyment, and happiness is guaranteed by the Constitution. His education, in all that constitutes true manhood and intelligent conception of his duties and privileges as a citizen, is necessarily linked with the products of his labor, and its wise and economical expenditure should grant to him more comforts and true enjoyment than that which belongs to any subject of any potentate or government on earth. His duties and responsibilities are privileges granted to no other individual of any nation. They belong to his own free system of government, which degrades none of its citizens, but seeks to exalt all alike, and become "the light and illumination of the world; a government that most truly represents the cause of freedom and equal rights; that abnegates selfishness, and has within the reach of its influence the welfare of the entire human race. He must be deeply impressed with the greatness of his mission, knowing it to be the mission of the government in which he is an active participant."

He is not called upon to sacrifice his manhood, for the benefit of the less-favored people of foreign nations, by accepting the pittance which despotic and selfish forms of government dole out to their unfortunate subjects as the wages of a people who have not yet awakened to the joys of manly independence and opportunities which belong to an American citizen.

His right to protection from such a fate is transcendent in our republican form of government and any tariff laws which result in the reduction of the wages of our citizens, thereby depriving them of the means required to maintain their home comforts and meet the expenditures involved in good citizenship must meet the hostility of the people. Should the result lead to the actual deprivation and sufferings of the unemployed, until it be said that the family of an American citizen is deprived of bread by the legislation of Congress, such injustice is none the less a crime, though it be executed by the iron hand of law and be the enactment of legislators whose beneficence is world-wide in scope, yet insufficient to cover the necessities of our own countrymen or intelligently grasp the lofty mission of the free institutions of America.

Your memorialists can not believe that an American Congress would willingly and knowingly enact legislation which will result in enforced idleness of employés of industries or curtail the wages of workingmen, and trust that every claim advanced by industries that the adoption of the proposed bill will entail the necessity of reduced wages and discharge of employés or the closing of mills shall be carefully and impartially investigated, and if the claims be found to be sufficient to warrant the increase of the tariff in the proposed bill in such cases that it may be done.

As pertinent to the somewhat broader question than that under discussion, but a question always involved when the question as to whether any product of American industry shall be protected by a duty or shall be placed upon the free list, I desire to present, and have inserted in my remarks, an elaborate table, headed "Chronology of the economic conditions of the United States from the formation of our Government to the present year—a period of one hundred and twenty years."

This table shows by years the total ordinary expenses of the Government yearly, the total ordinary receipts yearly, yearly surplus, yearly deficiency, amount of customs duties paid yearly, what our customs duties would have been under the theory of tariff for "revenue only," our yearly imports and value, and condition of the national debt yearly. It is accompanied with some marginal explanatory remarks, and also gives the date of each prevailing tariff law. I think it is of sufficient general interest to be inserted in the RECORD in full. I shall not read it if I may have permission to insert it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the table will be inserted in the RECORD.

The table is as follows:

* These amounts represent the surplus revenue there would have been these years without any custom duties at all.

† No returns these years, but this was the average rate estimated.

‡ Estimated to June 30, 1894. (See Report Secretary Treasury, December, 1893.) Our foreign commerce the largest amount in the history of the United States—under the McKinley tariff.

§ Or an average of only $6,446,350.92 per year ($6,000,000) = A "tariff for revenue only," even considering war debt.

A similar exhibit of our gross expenses and receipts would show even a greater dependence upon protective laws; hence our customs receipts have been actually not more than a "tariff for revenue only." What, therefore, would have been the deficit of the National Treasury under a "free-trade policy!" See series of "Tariff Reviews."

Mr. DOLPH. It will be understood from what I have already said at this time, and what I have said on previous occasions, that I believe the progress of this bill should stop here, at least until some concession is made by the majority in regard to wool. I hardly know what my duty is in regard to the matter. My own opinion has been that if the minority in this Chamber were united and were determined to accomplish that result, this bill could be beaten, and it should be beaten.

Considering the fact that the passage of this bill would be destructive to every great interest of this country, and instead of relieving the present conditions, as is supposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] would be the case, would perpetuate the existing conditions in this country, would prevent the revival of business, except in connection with such a reduction of wages as would be disastrous to the workingmen of this country, and inasmuch as this bill once passed, the mistake or the evil can not be remedied until the party which favors the protection of American industries, which believes that protection to American capital and American labor is necessary to individual and national prosperity is again in power, I have believed that it was the duty of the Republican minority in this Chamber to enter into a struggle of physical endurance with the majority, and to treat this bill as the other side of the Chamber, heretofore in the minority, have treated measures to which they were opposed.

I do not sympathize much with the idea that because the Democratic party succeeded to power and claim that that was a verdict of the American people in favor of tariff for revenue only, which I deny, no obstruction should be placed in the way of the majority, but that they should be left free to impose upon this country such legislation as they favor. If next fall the Congressional elections (when we shall surely elect a Republican majority in the other House) could also reverse the verdict so far as the Presidency is concerned, and the political majority in the Senate, I should be willing to make a brief trial of the Democratic doctrine; but, sir, considering the fact that if this bill once becomes a law it must remain on the statute book for an indefinite time, at least for two or four years, I have believed it to be the duty of the minority in the Senate if possible by any parliamentary means to defeat the passage of this bill.

But, sir, when I come to consider that it is the great Northwest, the new States of this Union, which are to be injured most by this legislation, the States which are dependent upon great industries that are to be stricken down and destroyed; when I recollect that three of those States are but partially represented in the United States Senate; that two are represented in the Senate in whole or in part by Democrats; when I find that the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] differ with me for some reason as to what measure should be adopted for the defeat of the pending bill; when I find another distinguished Senator from one of those States seldom voting upon the bill, and several more absent, I become discouraged and I know that what might be accomplished by unity of action, by an agreement in regard to the measures which should be adopted, can not be accomplished under such circumstances.

So, as my friend from Tennessee says when he not very good-naturedly yields to the necessity that is upon him, not on account of opposition alone on this side of the Chamber, but the failure of his own side to stand by him, I, from force of circumstances, will perhaps be compelled to cease my further opposition to the consideration of the bill and its final disposition, and leave it to our friends on this side of the Chamber and the Senator from Tennessee to make their own agreements about schedules, about the rule which shall limit debate, and about the time when votes are to be taken.

Mr. PLATT. May I interrupt the Senator from Oregon for a moment?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. Suppose the only question pending before the Sneate were the question whether wool should be put on the free list. If that were an independent proposition, disconnected from the other items of the pending measure, does not the Senator from Oregon think that a fortnight or three weeks would be the shortest time in which a proposition of that magnitude could be properly discussed in the Senate?

Mr. DOLPH. I think so.

Mr. PLATT. Yet, here we are complained of because we are taking two or three days to discuss it.

Mr. DOLPH. We have consumed two days and a portion of the third. That is the truth. The suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut only emphasizes what I stated a few moments ago in regard to the impatience of the Senator from Tennessee. The Senator from Tennessee does not seem to be charged with the duty of determining what the provisions of the bill shall be; he does not seem to be charged with the duty of discussing the bill, but he seems to be imbued with the idea that the bill is to confer a great blessing upon the people of the United States, and should be rushed through without discussion. I have seen nothing to compare with the impatience of my friend from Tennessee, except the impatience of the press and of a few people who, when the bill for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act was under consideration, believed what I did not, that the purchase of silver was the cause of our financial trouble, and that it was necessary, in order to restore financial prosperity in the country, that that bill should be immediately disposed of. We have been discussing the question as to whether wool shall go upon the free list two days. For two days we have been discussing the question which has been discussed by the American people for a hundred years, as to whether the wool industry shall be protected.

I had statistics concerning the industry; I had quotations here from, you might say, the fathers of the Revolution, the framers of the Constitution, from Democrats and Whigs alike in early days, showing the propriety and necessity of protecting the woolgrowing industry; showing that domestic wool is as necessary to the defense of the nation as forts and guns and armies. I might have presented them to the Senate, and I should have presented them to the Senate if I had supposed it would accomplish any good purpose. I beg to assure the Senator from Tennessee that I have not at all failed to do so out of regard for his impatience or out of consideration for his desire to secure the early disposition of the bill.

Another thing which has discouraged me largely is that one or two of our friends from the West have been disposed to belittle the alleged effects of the threat of free trade upon the industries of the country, and have been disposed to belittle the supposed effects of the passage of the pending bill upon the industries of the country. My friend from Nevada (Mr. STEWART) has gone so far on this floor as to state that the gold standard and free trade should go together. I do not agree with those Senators that the present condition of our industries has been brought about by financial legislation. I deplore as much as any member of the Senate and as much as anyone can the existing financial condition of this country and the world. I believe that I am a better friend to silver to-day than any man who advocates the free coinage of silver. I believe that one who advocates the free coinage of silver is a silver monometallist. I think there arebut two courses for this Government to pursue.

One is to maintain the present standard and to endeavor to secure an international agreement between the principal commercial nations of the earth for the free coinage of silver by those countries at an agreed ratio, and the other is to adopt free coinage of silver and go to the silver standard. I have never believed and I could not be convinced, because it would be contrary to all our experience, that the free coinage of silver by the United States alone would increase the value of silver bullion until 16 ounces of silver would be worth an ounce of gold. I know that gold has appreciated in value and that that has affected prices in this country and throughout the world. I know as well that silver has depreciated in value and that that has affected prices everywhere. I do not agree with those who suppose that gold alone has appreciated. I do not agree with those who suppose that silver alone has depreciated.

The increased demand for gold for money has, no doubt, largely increased its value. The decreased use of silver for money has, no doubt, largely decreased its value. If I knew of any legislation by which the silver-mining industry of this country could be made profitable, by which the value of silver bullion could be advanced, and the value of gold depreciated relatively to silver, I should be very glad to adopt it. We have now a few prominent persons contending as to who is the inventor of some new scheme concerning silver, which proposes, by retaliation upon Great Britain and other gold-using countries, to force them into some international agreement for the use of silver, or into the use of silver as individual nations. I have no confidence in any such scheme. I do not believe that Great Britain, or any other country in the world, can be forced, by any discriminating policy of the United States, into any course which she does not believe to be to her interest. It seems to me that we are in the situation in which, as I say, we are bound to adhere to one policy or the other, and everyone is free to believe that we had better go to the free coinage of silver, that we had better adopt the silver standard than to adhere to the gold standard.

I am not going to discuss that question to-day. I simply say that, in my judgment, the free coinage of silver would place us upon the silver standard, as Mexico is to-day; it would reduce the purchasing power of the American standard silver dollar to about the value of the bullion it contains; it would strike down at one blow more than one-half of the value of all the silver money in this country in the hands of the holders, whether in the shape of silver dollars or silver certificates; it would prevent the further coinage of gold; it would drive gold out of circulation; it would contract the circulating medium; it would bring about great financial disaster, and when it was all done and we were upon the silver standard and our silver dollar was worth only the same as the Mexican silver dollar in proportion to the bullion it contained, silver, instead of going to the mints to be coined, in my judgment, would have to be sold in the open market for whatever it was worth, and the United States would have no way of increasing the amount of silver currency; there would be no cause for the coinage of silver, and the sum coined in the American mints might not be $1,000,000 or $500,000. So, with gold gone, a depreciated silver dollar, and no means of increasing the circulating medium, with a contracted currency and disturbed financial conditions, I fear that our condition would be very much worse than it is now or than it is likely to be under the present standard.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President——

Mr. DOLPH. Let me finish.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. DOLPH. I did not rise to discuss the financial question; but I wish to say now that some financial legislation is necessary; that this country can not go on year after year without any increase of the circulating medium, with the population increasing, and the demand for money increasing, and whenever business revives in this country the disastrous effect of the policy of this Administration will be seen. It is the duty of the Administration in power to present some financial measure, some measure by which there will be an increase of the circulating medium. I say that it is the duty of this Administration, and this Administration will be held responsible for not so doing. I have not felt called upon to formulate a financial policy for this Administration. I have some ideas in regard to the subject.

The Democratic party in its last national platform resolved upon the repeal of the tax on the issues of State banks, with the idea of increasing the circulating medium, but if we are correctly informed about what has transpired in some other legislative body, which I shall not name, there is no likelihood that the Democratic doctrine on that question will be carried out, and I think it is well for the country and well for the Democratic party that that has been abandoned. I do not believe that the business men in this country are willing to go back to the old days of State bank bills, to the depreciated and rotten State bank currency.

I am one who believes that the General Government should control the circulating medium and should provide for it. I am one who believes that all banking should be controlled or supervised, at least, by the General Government. Notwithstanding the unreasoning opposition to the national-banking system, I think everyone will concede that that system has given us the best circulating medium this country has ever had; has given us a currency good in every portion of the Union.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator allow me——

Mr. DOLPH. I wish the Senator would let me conclude.

Mr. PEFFER. Very well.

Mr. DOLPH. The currency furnished by the national-banking system has been good in foreign countries. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS] says, "What do you suggest?" I can only make a suggestion as to how our circulating medium may be increased. I am not the adviser of the administration, I am not a member of any committee whose duty it is to formulate any financial system; but it seems to me—and I indicated that in some remarks I made on the subject of the free coinage of silver several years ago—that the national-banking system might be so changed and enlarged as to give this country a sufficient circulating medium. I think it would be a good thing if the national-banking law were amended so that banks of deposit and exchange might be organized upon the deposit of a single thousand dollars United States bonds, the banks becoming subject to all the laws regulating the national-banking system and subject to the supervision of the national authorities. I think that what has been proposed often in this Chamber might be safely adopted; that we might authorize a larger issue of circulating notes upon the bonds deposited to secure the circulation, at least, to the par value of the bonds.

It is possible that some modification of the law in regard to the circulation of banks might be made to secure the necessary issue. I see no reason why State bonds, the bonds of counties, and the bonds of cities of the United States might not be received as security for bank issues, their value to be passed upon by some authority, board, or commission appointed under Federal authority, and the existing laws, or amended laws, concerning the national-banking system applied to them. Something has to be done. If anyone can propose a better system, I should like to hear it, and I shall be ready to help adopt it; but, I repeat, that while I differ simply as to the remedy, or substantially as to the remedy, with my friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], while I claim to be just as good a friend as he is to the mining industry of his State and to the great Northwest, and just as good a friend to silver as is the Senator, I differ with him in regard to the methods by which the mining industry and the silver interest can be advanced.

I do say that there should be some financial legislation, and it is the duty of the present administration to formulate and present to Congress some plan; it is the duty of the majority in this and the other branch of Congress; and we should not go on from month to month and year to year without any increase of the circulating medium, but with an actual decrease, on account of the raid upon our gold coin and the decrease of national-bank circulation. I say we are going on not only without an increase of the circulating medium, but a decrease of the circulating medium, and this can not continue if the prosperity of this country is to be restored.

Mr. PALMER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. PALMER. I ask the Senator if his attention has ever been called to Senate bill 1791, I think is the number, a bill prepared by my friend, Capt. Cowden, of Illinois, which probably meets the Senator's views.

Mr. DOLPH. I have not seen the bill to which the Senator refers.

Mr. PALMER. I commend it to the Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall be glad to examine it.

Mr. PALMER. That bill goes far beyond accepting the bonds of towns as security for bank issues. It authorizes such issues on wheat and pork and butter, I think, and such things, taking them as security for banking circulation. I commend that bill to the attention of the Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think my friend from Illinois really thinks that I am advocating any such circulating medium as that based on that sortof security.

Mr. PALMER. If my friend will allow me again——

Mr. DOLPH. I hardly think that the Senator can construe my remarks in that way at all.

Mr. PALMER. I wish to say to the Senator that while he very cruelly, I think, has refused to give us the benefit of his plan, I beg to remind him that for some thirty years his party has been in power, and they have not matured a plan which reaches the idea of the Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. While my party was in power it provided for an increase of the circulating medium by the very law which the Senator's party denounced and proposed to repeal in its national platform. It was an expedient that was adopted at the time for that purpose, and if the Republican party had remained in power, that increase of the circulating medium have been discontinued, some other provision would have been made for additional circulation.

Mr. President, I can not believe that the Senator from Illinois would place the bonds of the State of New York or the State of Illinois, or the city of Chicago, or the city of New York, or the city of Portland—for we have issued bonds in the city of Portland—in the same category with wheat and butter; and I do not believe the Senator would think that the bonds of the city of New York or the bonds of the city of Portland would not be substantially as good security for the issuing of circulating notes by national banks as national bonds.

I admit that to make such a modification of the national-banking act would be to go a step farther than we have gone; would be to adopt a new expedient; that, as the bonds of the National Government, which are the security for the payment of the National bank notes issued, are the debts of the National Government and are held by the Government as security for the payment of the notes, and the United States, in assuming the payment of the notes, substantially only assumes the payment of its own debt to the note holder. It pays its bonds, but pays the money to the holders of the national notes with the other.

Some new liability would have to be assumed by the Government, but the beneficial result which would come from an enlargement and an increase of our circulating medium—an enlargement of the system, if nothing better could be done—would amply compensate the Government for the risk which, after all, would be nominal, because the amount of the circulating notes to be issued, upon the State or municipal obligations, could be fixed by law, and the question as to the value of the bonds would be fixed by the Federal authority. I do not care to follow that question further.

I hold in my hand a statement of the present condition of the industries in Oregon. I shall not take up the time of the Senate to read it, but shall ask leave to insert the quotation in my remarks, if there be no objection.

The quotation referred to is as follows:

Considering that the population of Oregon is not so large as in any of the densely peopled manufacturing and industrial States of the East, our efforts to ascertain the condition of labor in that State have met with great success, and we have received 140 different reports from 35 different towns there, the result being tabulated as follows:

From these reports, sent by 140 different employers of labor in 35 different towns in Oregon, it appears that the total number of hands for whom they found employment in 1892 was 3,848, but in 1893 the same 140 employers could only find work for 3,021 persons—a decrease of 21 per cent within a year. Coming down to the present year up to the end of April, 1894, we further find that these same 140 employers have only been able to give work to 1,512 persons on an average every day from January 1 up to April 30, 1894.

The condition of Oregon is such this year that 140 employers of labor, in 35 different towns in that State, can find work only for exactly one-half the number of people to whom they gave employment throughout the whole of last year, and there is a decrease in the number of persons employed this year of 60 per cent as compared with those who were busily at work in 1892. It is thus very apparent that the longer the present administration remains in power the worse it becomes every day for the condition of labor in the State of Oregon.

This deplorable Democratic condition of labor in the State of Oregon is not confined to any one industry in particular, our reports being received from those engaged in quite a variety of occupations. For instance, we find reports made by those who are engaged in the business of storing grain; from flour mills; from clothiers and tailors; dealers in agricultural implements and vehicles; and an unfortunate druggist who has been obliged to dismiss all his help owing to the Cleveland times.

The sheep and wool industry employers have been obliged to discharge half the men they employed. The furniture and upholstery trade has been cut down 50 per cent, turning half its men idle upon the world. The lumber and box trade has suffered 30 per cent, and even the hotels have felt the wave of free trade, for at Astoria we notice one hotel where the number of employés has been reduced by 75 per cent. The iron works in that city have also suffered, and at all towns there must have been a marked decrease in the general merchandise trade, judging from the number of hands whose services have been dispensed with in that line of business.

Hardware, boots, shoes, furnishing goods, and even newspapers have not flourished since President Cleveland began to carry out his theoretical prophecies of good times. There has been less demand for agricultural implements on the part of the farmers, who must be making their old implements do further service when they are sadly in need of new ones. How the sawmills have suffered, too, under the threat of free lumber, which would give the lumber trade, now taken care of by Oregon, to the mills of British Columbia.

The iron and steel business appears to have been as dull in Oregon as it was elsewhere. We find a furnace producing pig iron that can only give work to 52 men this year where it was able to keep 420 hands busy during the good times of McKinley protection. Wire mattresses seem to be a luxury that the people have to do without; in fact, many men have not been able to get a mattress of any kind. The building trade, too, must have fallen off by 66 per cent. Half the printers appear to have been out of work, and at one of the planing mills where steady work was given to 25 men almost every day in the year 1892, the manager reports this year that his pay roll consisted of one man and one watchdog, thus establishing a new industry—the watchdog industry—for which President Cleveland and his free-trade followers must be given due credit when they are taken to task for all the destruction caused through their policy of prostration.

Men who are out of work can find no use for tools, so, of course, we find that the tool manufacturers in Portland are closed down, and in that city the effects of tariff tinkering are felt more seriously than elsewhere, our 76 reports from Portland showing that only 1,154 people are working this year where 2,589 people were busy and happy in 1892. The check to buildings, of course, reflects upon the paint trade and upon sashes and doors, while the people seem to have little use for anything that the blank-book manufacturer can make, possibly there being no entries nowadays for cashbooks, journals, or ledgers.

The livery-stable keeper who hires out his teams on Sundays and holidays and for pleasant evening drives is one of the first to feel the effects of hard times, so that this business forms an excellent index of the Cleveland conditions. At one livery carriage stable in Portland the decrease in its business has been very marked. It employed 300 persons on an average in 1892, only an average of 250 during 1893, and during the first four months of 1894 this business has so dwindled away that it now has only 52 persons on its pay roll.

We might go on enumerating such particulars by the score, but conclude with mentioning the case of one of the largest nursery gardens on the northwest coast where 100 men used to find steady work, but where now there is business for only 20 hands. These same farmers and nurserymen put over $50,000 in the bank between December 1, 1892, and May 1, 1893, but a year later, between December 1, 1893, and May 1, 1894, their deposits were below $20,000, part of which was for collections from the sales made the previous year. In a great many instances the men are kept at work more from charity and compassion than for any other reason. They have been working steadily for their employers for years, and their employers make every effort to retain their service.

One old Oregonian who has long been established out West writes us that "business is rotten out here." It is sad to see the same wail of distress from the far, far West that we hear so much of in the East, a condition that has existed only under a Democratic administration that threatens to overthrow the entire industrial and economical affairs of the United States, and that threatens to supplant American institutions and their output with the products of foreign factories made by the cheap pauper labor.

Such a condition can not last long in America, but it has already lasted too long. At every opportunity that has been afforded the people to express their opinions of Cleveland and of the Democratic party, the people have done so most thoroughly and determinedly by their votes, and it is fortunate for Oregon that she can make her voice heard within a few weeks and enter one more very emphatic protest against the establishment of a pernicious system of free trade, by turning down every Democratic candidate nominated for office in the State of Oregon.

Reports previously acquired from other States, together with those from Oregon show the following result:

State.	Reports.	Number of hands employed.
		1892.	1893.	1894.
Rhode Island	75	19,089	14,770	10,966
New York	100	22,026	17,480	12,650
Connecticut	67	13,777	11,564	8,535
Oregon	140	3,848	3,021	1,512
Totals	382	58,740	46,835	33,663

In 1894 there were 43 per cent less people at work for the 382 employers in all of these States combined, but in Oregon the decrease was 60 per cent during the two years, showing that the fear of free trade has been worse for Oregon than for these Eastern States. The West must be for protection. (American Economist, May 18, 1894.)

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, Oregon is having a hard time between Pennoyerism, the Democratic party in Congress, and the floods. Pennoyerism is wiped out, the floods are receding, the damage will be repaired, and the Democratic party will be retired after a time; but if the majority in Congress pass the pending measure, thus striking down the wool industry of the State, destroying the lumber industry of the State, and injuring the hop industry and other industries of the State, it will be many years before she will again enjoy the prosperity which her citizens have enjoyed ever since she became a portion of the Federal Union.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I was much gratified to learn that the Senator from Oregon had finally come to the conclusion that there is not money enough in circulation, that gold has appreciated, that silver has depreciated, and that prices have fallen in consequence thereof. Those admissions are fundamental.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to say to the Senator that if he will refer to the very first speech, some two or three years ago or more, that I made in this body on that subject he will find I asserted substantially the same thing.

Mr. STEWART. I inferred from the uniform votes of the Senator and from what I have heard of his speeches that he entertained entirely different views. I stand corrected if he ever had those views and had expressed them on this floor.

Mr. DOLPH. I never entertained any other views.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator says he never entertained any other views. I leave him to reconcile his votes with that statement.

Now, the Senator is in favor of international bimetallism. I should like to have him or any other Senator point to any governmental action on the part of any European country during the last eighteen years, when we have been applying to them for an international conference, indicating that they had any intention or purpose of complying with our request. On the contrary, every one of them, so far as governmental action is concerned, has uniformly and on all occasions declared that they would not comply with any of our requests for international money. We have had three international conferences, and we have always been treated in the same way.

The party in power in Great Britain to-day treats with contempt the suggestion, and when a resolution was offered and the day fixed a few weeks ago for a vote to be taken upon a proposition looking to an international conference, they were unable to get a quorum of forty in the House of Commons to consider the question.

That being the uniform decision of all other governments, and we having supplicated for eighteen years, and sent three commissions to Europe, only to be sent back with a flat denial, it seems to me that it is time to stop discussing that question. It is the plea which has been used to deceive the people of the United States and prolong the distressed condition which has prevailed; it has been the plea which has been used to delude the people from the beginning ever since it was discovered that silver had been demonetized.

For any Senator here to propose as a remedy an international conference, with the attitude which the European governments occupy and still occupy, seems trifling with the subject. A man who would postpone it and suffer the evils that we now suffer until they change their minds ought to be able to show some probability of a change. It hardly seems that those who contend for an international conference as a remedy can be acting in good faith in view of the absolute refusal of Europe to join in such a conference for the purpose of action. They will join in the conference for the purpose of discussing and refusing, as they have done. Great Britain at each of those conferences has been fair in this regard. She notified us before the conference was held that her delegates would have no power to bind her to change her policy.

The people of Great Britain have no voice in the government on the financial question. It is the money power which holds nearly $4,000,000,000 of British consols. It is the money power that has cornered the gold and holds it, not the general creditors, for they will be swindled. Your bonds of States and of nations have been unloaded on the general public, but the syndicate that controls the action of Great Britain holds its investments in gold and such bonds as seem free from all danger of repudiation.

If we wait until that money power yields, we shall wait until this generation passes. This is a contest between government by consolidated wealth in the hands of the few and government by the people. The gold advocates boldly proclaim that wealth should govern. They declare that wealth can not be consolidated in the hands of the few in order to govern except through a contraction of the money volume. That must be in the hands of the few; for if the volume of money is increased by remonetization of silver, opportunities will be offered to the people to acquire wealth, and the people will demand a voice in the government.

This is a contest between democracy and the aristocracy of money. It is governmental as well as financial, and is so proclaimed and maintained by English journals who are advocating the gold standard. They do not profess to believe in the right of the people to govern, and they desire to take from the people the means of asserting their rights.

Poverty is weakness. Make the people poor and they will submit. That is the theory which is being carried out. With the money power it is prosecuting a scheme of aggrandizement, a scheme of despotism. So much for an international conference.

But the Senator says that we will go to a silver monometallism. All there is of bimetallism is the right to coin money of either of the precious metals. If no gold shall be coined for the next twenty years, and silver alone shall be used, it would not be silver monometallism, because the right would exist to coin gold offered for coinage.

But we now have gold monometallism. The right to coin silver is denied. Give the American people the right to coin silver and every willing hand in all this broad land will find work. Give them the right that they inherited from their ancestors, that is incorporated in the Constitution, that was maintained previous to 1873 for more than three thousand years—give back that right and the American people will make this the leading nation of the earth.

But we are without money and without the means of acquiring it, because property will not buy gold; if it does, it will be at such a sacrifice that it will ruin the owner of property. Give the people money enough to restore prices and revive business, and they will be independent and govern themselves. The inducement to acquire property will be restored, and producers will prosper.

There is no inducement now to enterprise. If you get property you can not do anything with it. You can not exchange it for money. All people are seeking to make investments in money, because money alone is rising in price. This they do by buying bonds, most of which will be repudiated. Only the cunning few who manipulate will find bonds that will not be repudiated. Look at the thousands of millions of bonds and securities in this country that have been destroyed within the last year.

Look at the foundation upon which your savings banks and your trust companies rest. There are now in this country in round numbers $4,500,000,000 of securities held by private banks, trust companies, and savings banks used for the purpose of acquiring interest to pay their depositors. The investments in these securities were made when the securities were worth twice as much as they are to-day. They have fallen 50 per cent since the investments were made. How can the savings banks that invested in securities when they were 50 per cent higher liquidate to-day? The continued appreciation of gold will shake the foundation out of your savings banks, and they must fall, and this little clique of a money power will govern.

I told a Senator here on this floor years ago, when he was pleading for gold for the depositors in savings banks, that they had better look to the securities upon which those savings banks rested and see that they were not being destroyed. With 50,000 miles of railroad in the hands of receivers, with eight or ten States under arms to keep down the people, with industries paralyzed on account of the shrinkage of the volume of money, I do not wonder that the Senator from Oregon and all others should wake up to the terrible danger that awaits this financial policy. This to me seems to be the very crucial crisis of our civilization. If our civilization withstands this continual shrinking of the volume of money it will be an exception in all history. No civilization has ever been able to withstand the continual and perpetual decline of prices. Prices must decline as other money is destroyed and gold takes its place.

But the Senator from Oregon tells us that he would invent some kind of credit that will only aggravate the evil. As I have before said, credit which is only redeemable in gold is deceptive. It may relieve for the moment. But the results that must follow will be still more terrible. It is like the man who has been indulging in alcohol. He takes a drink in the morning to revive him, but only to sink into deeper gloom later in the day. That is the condition of your credit, your bubbles. I am opposed to bubbles. I want the foundation of our financial system restored. We can not restore it through an international conference. That is absolutely impossible.

How, then, shall we restore it? I know of but one means. Open the mints to silver; adopt bimetallism; use either metal offered for coinage, and that is bimetallism; and if only one comes all right. There have been many times when only one came.

From the discovery of America until 1803, there was very little gold produced. Von Humboldt says there were 44 ounces of silver produced during that period for every ounce of gold. Gold played a small part in the revolution from the Dark Ages produced by the gold and silver from the New World. The great revival of the sixteenth century resulted from silver. Silver was and is better than gold because it is distributed among the people at large. It is the people's money. Gold has always been held by the rich for reserves. Silver has done duty as money and penetrated almost every region of the earth and enabled the people to prosper and advance.

This civilization is more indebted to silver than to any other cause for its existence. It was silver that broke the clouds of the Dark Ages. It was silver that raised the price of property throughout the world, and set willing hands to work to create property and acquire independence for themselves. When the people have property they will assert themselves. You see it in the vagrant; you see it in the tramp. You see how submissive and weak he is when he is starving, with no money. Give him wealth and he will assert himself. It is the privilege to acquire wealth and independence that makes free institutions. The English gold journals tell you that an increasing volume of money will increase democracy, because it will make the people independent, and a decrease in the volume of money will increase aristocracy, because it will make the people dependent. That is the theory which has been worked out here.

The Senator says we can not restore silver alone. We know that we shall have no help. The monarchies of Europe do not symphasize with democracy. They have refused for twenty years to listen to our supplications. We know we can get no help from that quarter. Is it possible that 70,000,000 people are utterly powerless to rescue themselves from the distressed condition into which the gold aristocracy has plunged them? We have examples in other countries older than ours. We know how India prospered when her mints were opened.

She paid the interest on her foreign debt; her exports increased more than fourfold; her factories were so increased that she supplied her own home market, so far as textile fabrics were concerned, and exported over $50,000,000 worth, mostly to China and Japan, the year previous to the suspension of coinage in that country. What has been the result since? Her exports have fallen off one-half. She is now issuing bonds and borrowing money. She got an authorized loan a few months ago, and a month ago she had used up $35,000,000 in defraying her expenses, with an anticipated deficit for the coming year of nearly $100,000,000. Suspension of silver coinage prostrated industries in that country; and you see in the papers rumors of an uprising of that people against the tyranny of gold contraction inflicted upon her by the greed of this British syndicate.

We saw Japan, that we have been taught to look upon as a semibarbarous country, establish woolen mills and cotton factories. I do not know the exact number, but I am told that one mechanic reports that he went out there this year to set up twelve of those establishments, the machinery going from England. Japan has established a steamship line to Bombay and other Asiatic ports, and she has prosperity. Look at the increasing manufactures of China. This policy will transfer manufacturing from Europe and give it to the Asiatics, who will have the advantage of money. They will take the place we now occupy if we submit to the iron yoke of the money rule, more galling than any other despotism, and from which all despotism flows

Look at Italy. Twenty years ago she had a Liberal Parliament. To-day her Parliament is a thing of the past. She sold gold bonds, increased taxation, and continued to do it until she has reached the end of her power to raise more money. During the last year her army has been in the field to suppress the hungry people who were clamoring for bread. Her deficit last year was over $31,000,000. Next year there is a deficit staring her in the face said to be over $50,000,000. Taxation can not be increased to raise more funds. I am told that they have increased the income tax in that country to 24 per cent. They have about exhausted taxation, and they are at last discussing the necessity of selling their art treasures to bridge over the current year. That is the effect of incurring gold obligations without gold to pay.

We are adopting the same policy. We borrowed $50,000,000 on the 1st of last February. It will all be expended before the end of the present month. Our industries are prostrated and we are resorting to further taxation. We are following in the lead of Italy and all other countries who suppress industries by gold contraction. We propose to impose an income tax, and I want to say to my friends who have incomes acquired by the appreciation of gold, they must contribute to this scheme that they invented, and this trifling income tax is but the entering wedge for a 24 or 50 a per cent tax on incomes if the gold standard is maintained.

Break the corner on gold, liberate the people from the distress which they now suffer, and the burdens of this Government will be but a feather's weight. But now who is to pay the taxes? Who is making any money to pay taxes with? This bill, when it passes, may lull some people into the idea that it will relieve the situation, and they may breathe easier for a few days, but they will find that the bill, the same as the act of the extra session, will leave them on the downward road.

We were told here at the extra session, contrary to reason, contrary to philosophy, contrary to the first principles of mathematics, if we would destroy our silver, if we would stop issuing Treasury notes on silver, all would be well, that a boom would follow; and ambitious people invested in stocks anticipating a boom. Has the boom come? Can it come with the gold in the world cornered? Where is the $100,000,000 of gold that is free to-day? It is in the vaults of banks or in Government vaults for military purposes. It is held from the people as an instrument of oppression.

We are told that we have no redress. I do not advance any new scheme. I say this war on silver, this destruction of half of the basis of circulation, has done the evil, and to reverse the policy will restore the country. It has done more than to destroy it. The output of gold is consumed in the arts, and the wealthy who hold the gold obligations are gathering in and hoarding up for power and plunder what gold there is. Under the gold standard there is nothing left but harder and harder times, more and more misery, more and more tramps, more and more soldiers to keep the peace. That is the spectacle which is presented to us.

Is it possible that this is a scheme to make the people so distressed that they will rise in insurrection, to be put down by the military, and thus establish a military government in this country? It looks very much like it. How often do we hear people say what we want is a stronger government. I say what we want is a happier people. A happier people will take care of the Government without soldiers and without trouble of any kind. They have done it in this country, and if they will now rise in their might and demand the restoration of the money of the Constitution and repudiate the gold trust, we shall have freedom and prosperity in this country. It can come through no other source.

Mr. President, I did not intend to make a silver speech, but the remarks of the Senator from Oregon showing that he had some conception of the evils that afflict the country induced me to say what I have said.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, the Democratic party "moves in mysterious ways its wonders to perform." Why this blow should be made against the sheep-growing industry of the United Statesat this time is beyond the comprehension of any man who understands the industry as it exists in the country. In the West proper, that is west of the east line of Texas extended to the northeast corner of North Dakota, there are thirteen States and four Territories. With the exception of three States included therein, this great country scarcely had a political existence previous to the civil war. The country described has a population of 10,000,000 of people. One of their chief industries is the sheep business and the growing of wool. The Rocky Mountain States can not afford to lose this industry at this time. They can not afford to have it broken down. It is in some of these States and Territories the chief agricultural industry.

There are fully one-third of the sheep of the United States in the States and Territories alluded to.

If there was anything to be gained by the destruction of this industry, if we did not need the revenue that is annually derived from the industry, if we had more wool in this country than we consumed, there might possibly be some excuse for this proposed legislation. But no excuse can be found. No reason can be given, and no one has attempted to give a reason in this body, why the duties should be taken off. We feel a deep concern for this industry. It concerns my people.

The Republicans representing the States alluded to appear to have done all in their power to save this industry. If the Democratic Senators from the State of Illinois [Mr. PALMER] and from the State of Ohio [Mr. BRICE], or the two Populist Senators who sit on the other side of this body, or the two Democratic Senators who represent the greatest sheepgrowing State (Texas), had used one-tenth or one-eighth of the energy that was used by the Senators from the State of Louisiana to protect the sugar industry, the West would not have been left in the unfortunate position in which the pending bill places them. They would have secured a duty on wool.

Mr. PLATT. Does the Senator from Wyoming understand that there are any Populist Senators who sit on the other side of the Chamber now?

Mr. CAREY. When they last announced their politics they were members of the Populist party.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CAREY. I do.

Mr. KYLE. I want to ask the Senator from Wyoming if he thinks the Populist Senators who sit on this side of the Chamber are members of the Democratic caucus and are able to control things as they are done on this side of the Chamber?

Mr. CAREY. It is not worth while for me to answer that question; but I say I am satisfied, and I know the Senator from South Dakota is satisfied, that if he and his associate of the Populist party on that side of the Chamber had stood up and made a manly fight for wool, I do not care whether it is inside the Democratic caucus or outside the Democratic caucus, they would have saved this industry in the West.

Mr. KYLE. It remains yet to be proved whether we are not making a fight for wool.

Mr. CAREY. I hope it will so turn out; and I shall make a very humble apology for alluding to it if you do.

Mr. KYLE. Suppose the Populist Senators shall vote for a duty on wool, would the Senator not be very much mistaken in his judgment upon this question?

Mr. CAREY. The Populist Senators will have to do then as the Democratic Senators do, refuse to vote for other provisions of the bill unless they give the West protection for wool. In this wise you can save the wool industry.

Mr. KYLE. Does the Senator from Wyoming imagine that we hold the balance of power on this side of the Chamber?

Mr. CAREY. You do if you will vote against the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. KYLE. I think the Senator will find when the vote is taken that the Populists do not hold the balance of power and that they are in no way responsible for the passage of any particular amendment or any provision in the bill.

Mr. CAREY. The people of the United States are against this measure. It is not necessary to go out and obtain the judgment of the people of the United States. It has been announced by one of the most distinguished Senators on the other side that there is no man sitting on the other side of this body who believes in all the provisions of the bill or who would frame such a bill, if any one of them had the framing of this measure. It is neither a protection bill nor a free-trade bill. It is not in accord with the Democratic platform. I can not see why any member on the other side can refuse, since they have fixed up the bill in the manner they have, to give us some protection on wool. If you can not give us the protection that is in the McKinley act give us half of the protection in the McKinley act.

I believe the Democratic party is against this measure. I only have to call attention to Democratic newspapers to establish the fact. The Democratic papers of the United States have but few words of commendation in favor of the bill, while such newspapers as the New York Sun, the Evening Post, the Brooklyn Eagle, the Philadelphia Record, the Philadelphia Times, the Baltimore Sun, the Louisville Courier-Journal, the Chicago Times, the Cleveland Plain Dealer, condemn all or many of its provisions. Even the American Industries, the Democratic official organ of tariff reform, founded, I understand, by Josiah Quincy, the late dispenser of Democratic pudding, indorsed, as the paper is by many of the leading Democrats in this country, has devoted its columns for weeks to showing the bill to be in many respects false to Democratic theories. The Washington Post, which we all must confess is one of the ablest and most influential papers in the United States, not managed in the interest of any political party, recently summed up the situation in the following editorial.

The Post says:

"WRERE ARE WE AT."

The triumphant columa that entered Washington a year ago with Grover Cleveland at its head and took complete possession of the executive and legislative branches of the Government with such loud-sounding promises of reform and prosperity is already on the eve of a panic that may end in a rout without a parallel in the political history of the country, and the promised land into which they have entered be turned over to their old enemies.

Divided counsels and an army of stragglers are working the dissolution.

The Minnesota Democratic committee issued a proclamation reading out of the party eight Senators, headed by GORMAN, HILL, and BRICE.

Gov. Tillman of South Carolina serves notice on the Washington Democracy that he is done with them, and that a new Democratic party will be organized without New England and the Eastern Middle States.

Ex-Gov. Russell of Massachusetts, at the head of the Democratic army in New England, makes a raid on Senator HILL and his friends that means a war of extermination.

Senator VOORHEES's organ at Indianapolis declares that HILL is a hypocrite and a pretender, a Democrat no longer, and the most unprincipled apology for a statesman since the days of Aaron Burr.

Brother Dana, in the Sun that shines for all, says that Mr. Cleveland is destroying the Democratic party by making war on its regular organizations, and is trying to build up a Cleveland party.

That staid and reliable Sun that shines in Baltimore says that there is a reaction going on in the country "against Democratic methods and in condemnation of Democratic cowardice, imbecility, and incompetency, especially as exhibited in the conduct of the Democratic majority in Congress."

From away out in Montana, where it was supposed the Democracy had an intrenched camp, comes word that the Democrats are going to fight under the Populist banner hereafter.

For the last six months there has been an almost unbroken series of Democratic disasters at the polls, and the strange spectacle is seen of the old and reliable strongholds reversing their positions, and to the utter amazement of the leaders on both sides roll up steadily increasing majorities for the Republican tickets, delivering old strongholds that were considered impregnable to the enemy without a struggle.

Brooklyn, Albany, Jersey City, Newark, Chicago, Milwaukee, Kansas City, Indianapolis, Columbus, St. Louis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Buffalo, and hundreds of smaller cities, with the great State of New York and the smaller kingdom of New Jersey, are all treading new political roads that lead away from the Democracy.

The feeling of alarm and unrest that is spread over the country is doing its work.

Big Tom Reed tauntingly says that the Democratic mortality will be so great next fall that their dead will be buried in trenches and marked "unknown."

It is over six months till the fall elections, and there is still time for another revolution.

Abraham Lincoln walked into the War Department one day, and was handed a telegram by the great War Secretary stating that Gen. Burnside had been chased near a hundred miles in East Tennessee, and was still running, with heavy losses of men and baggage. Lincoln exclaimed, "That is really good news," and on being asked for an explanation said he had been afraid that there was not enough of them left to run, so even the last returns from Rhode Island are capable of a humorous side for Mr. Cleveland.

Time alone will tell "where we are at."

When the foregoing was written elections had not been held in Illinois and in Oregon. These expressions all tell of the public sentiment in the United States in reference to the pending tariff bill. Take for instance the election in the State of Oregon, a State which for years has been evenly balanced between the political parties. It is stated that in the election last week the combined opposition to the Republican party only elected 8 members to the Legislature, 7 of whom were Populists. Only 1 Democrat was elected in an election affecting 75 members, distributed all over the State.

Mr. President, I say there is no reason for the destruction of the wool industry of the United States. We consume 500,000,000 pounds of wool. We produce but about half of that quantity. During the last thirty years there has been a great increase per capita in the consumption of wool in the United States. Our people are using more wool. The increased facilities for turning wool into manufactured products make it more available for all classes of people. Why the industry should be stricken down, why the extreme Western States—these new States which need this industry—should be punished in the way it is proposed to punish them in the bill I can not understand.

I have been told repeatedly during the last three or four days that if the chains were taken off the members of this body who sit on the opposite side of the aisle and they were permitted to vote their sentiments in reference to wool, that we would receive the votes of probably half the members who occupy seats on the Democratic side of the Chamber in favor of a duty on wool.

Woolgrowing is an agricultural employment. It gives employment to a great many men. It utilizes large quantities of waste land. It is an industry that is always engaged in during the transition period, between the time when a country is sparsely settled and the time when it is becoming thickly settled. We need the industry in the West.

We can not afford to abandon it at this time. We have made every appeal possible to save this industry, but it seems to be the decision of the Democratic side that if nothing else is saved of the Wilson bill they will save the one provision, and that wool shall be put on the free list. It has been stated that we have to have the foreign wool. It is true we will have to have a very considerable quantity of the foreign product until we have greatly increased the industry in the United States, but we are to-day producing every conceivable kind of wool in the United States, the coarse wools and the fine wools. During the last ten years we have been making great progress in this industry, improving the breeds of sheep, increasing the quantity of the fleece, and improving its quality.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] has repeatedly stated that he believes that if wool were put on the free list the price of wool to the woolgrower in the United States would be increased. I do not propose to go into this question, as it has been very fully discussed by other Senators on this side of the Chamber. I have tables of London and American prices before me which show during given periods much greater reductions in the prices of wool relatively in London than in the United States. By comparison we will find on the wools which are made the standard in the determination of prices, that while for eleven months, commencing, I think, in May, 1891, wool decreased 26 per cent in the London markets, it decreased only 6¾ per cent in the American markets.

I believe in fair play. In considering the industries of the United States each industry is entitled to consideration at the hands of the National Legislature. If you protect one industry other industries are entitled to protection. If you strip our system of what is known as protection, if we raise our revenues in the same manner in which revenues are raised by the British Government, then no industry will have the right to complain. I believe in protection, but I believe in fair play. It was said a few days ago by the Senator from Texas that he would raise all the revenue on a few articles, naming them. We need the duty. It is not good policy to sell bonds to pay current expenses of the Government. Wool and woolen goods are good revenue producers. The following table speaks for itself:

*The figures for 1894 are all estimates based on the reported imports for first nine months of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894.

†This $24,800,000 duties collected on wool are, by the pending bill, to be given away at a time when the Government needs revenue.

‡This $127,000,000 duties collected on woolen manufactured goods, which are almost exclusively luxuries used by the wealthy classes, are by the pending bill to be reduced two-thirds, thus making a present to the wealthy classes of over $80,000,000. This loss of revenue of over $100,000,000 heretofore collected under the McKinley law on wool and woolens is to be replaced by a tax on sugar, a necessary of life, the per capita consumption of which is as great by the poor as the wealthy.

On three or four articles—sugar, tea, coffee, and spices—articles which can not be produced in this country, or of which we can not produce sufficient quantity to supply our own people, we could raise revenue equal to that raised under the McKinley act—$200,000,000. But that has not been the theory upon which this Government, from its foundation, has raised its revenue. The Democratic party sometimes preaches free trade, but the Democratic party has not at any time, so far as its action has been concerned, gone entirely to free trade. The pending bill has protection in it. Now, if you protect other industries, the wool industry is entitled to protection. If you protect raw material, and you say that wool is a raw material, something I do not admit, then wool is entitled to protection. This discrimination is unjust, it is unfair; and I do not see how the Democratic party can consistently go before the people of this country, especially the farmers of this country, with wool on the free list, while iron ore and coal are on the dutiable list.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I did not intend to take part in the discussion of the wool question or in the discussion of any question connected with the tariff bill now under consideration, but a few words are demanded, inasmuch as Populists we have been charged by Senators on the other side of the Chamber with taking a position which is in direct opposition to the views of the people of our respective States; in other words, that we are coöperating with the Democratic party at the expense of the interests which we represent.

No question has been bandied back and forth like a football more than the tariff, and it is still the bone of contention in Congress and the subject for stump speakers in the field. No campaign is carried on without it. No Congress has done its duty till it has tinkered with it. And yet the enigma is as far from solution as it was fifty years ago. It will remain unsettled and unsolved as long as selfish interests conflict and the greed of man is unsatisfied. That the tariff is a local question is demonstrated more clearly at this time than ever before, when tariff reformers forsake cherished theories to scramble for a share of the coveted spoils.

Selfish interests creep into the formation of any bill in spite of cherished tariff doctrines, and few of us will be satisfied with any measure that can be passed.

I think that the teachings of a hundred years should have a trial, and every restraint as to intercourse between this and foreign nations be removed so far as is consistent with revenue. The elections for the past few years show conclusively that the people have not been satisfied with the legislation of the past thirty years. The great West, now the center of power in this Government if she chooses to exercise it, has voted with the East on this question merely for the sake of harmony—not because they have ever gotten anything in return. They have voted gold into the pockets of Eastern manufacturers, but have themselves fed on the husks of promises.

What has the country west of the Mississippi River to do with the system of protection? What has the United States to do with it, except a small Northeast section? And yet Western voters have never failed to dance when the Eastern capitalist piped.

Thirty years of this régime, Mr. President, has brought us to the verge of national poverty, if not bankruptcy. I do not claim that the tariff system is the greatest evil the country contends with, but it is second in importance to the money question. By indirect taxation the pockets of 60,000,000 of people are drained in order to make millionaires of a favored few.

In other words, the most threatening national evil to day—centralization of wealth—is encouraged and built up by the tariff system.

Mr. President, we are now dealing with one of the most important schedules of the present tariff bill—the citadel of the protected interests. To clothe our people is a great problem, and a tax on clothing may be made a national burden. In dealing with this question we wish to be fair to woolgrowers, and yet preserve the interests of all the people.

I recognize just as well as does the Senator from Wyoming the importance of the wool industry.

We have in the United States millions of acres of the best grass lands, a genial clime, and an energetic population. We have to-day more than 45,000,000 of sheep, valued at nearly $90,000,000. We produced in 1893 more than 300,000,000 pounds of wool. Here are the complete tables from the statistical abstract of 1893 showing the number and value of sheep from 1869 down to 1894, together with the quantity of wool produced, imported, and exported:

a Year ending September 30. b From estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

I recognize that we have in our own State upwards of 325,000 sheep. I recognize that the industry is increasing from year to year. I recognize that from the Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains the raising of sheep is one of the important industries, and that to strike it down means a very great wrong and injustice to the people of that region. I understand that the farmers of the West are already overburdened with taxation, and are scarcely able to make a living upon their farms. Wheat-raising pays no longer. It does not pay to raise corn or flax or oats. We are now, I fear, sounding the death knell of the sugar industry of the West, which is beginning to make itself one of importance, and now it is said that to destroy the wool industry will be the last and the greatest blow.

But, Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that we are striking down the wool industry by placing wool upon the free list. For my own part, and I speak for but one member of the Populist party, I am not afraid of placing wool upon the free list. The advantage accruing to the American people because of the reduction in the cost of clothing will more than compensate for the destruction of the duty upon wool.

Let me read a few letters which I happen to have in my desk, to show the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] something of the sentiment of the woolgrowers of the West. I believe many of them to-day realize they can raise wool upon the prairies of Dakota and Nebraska and Wyoming as cheaply as it can be raised upon the continent of Australia or in South America, the statements of the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber to the contrary notwithstanding. Here is an article from the Sheep Breeders' Gazette, which is quoted approvingly by one of the largest sheep-growers in South Dakota. The writer says:

Contrary to the general impression the Australian flock-owner does not have his pasturage free. He must either own the land or pay the government for its use. For this reason, and the varying carrying capacity of lands, the consul finds some difficulty in estimating the actual cost per sheep, and states:

"Estimates, however, have been made by experts, which doubtless proximate the actual cost, and which may form something like a guide for those interested in comparing the cost of wool production. The cost of rent for pastoral land varies from a nominal sum to about $1.84 per acre per annum. The cost of rent in an averge district, say for a well-improved freehold country, with a good rainfall and capable of carrying one sheep to the acre, would be about 73 cents per acre, and if capable of carrying two sheep to the acre, it would be from $1.45 to $1.95 per acre; the average cost in the dry districts would be about 18 cents per acre. He then sums up the cost of production as follows:

Rent	$0.73
Carriages (improvements, etc.)	.05
Rams, annual cost	.02
Assessments, rabbits, etc	.02
Expense of management	.16
Shearing, pressing, and packing	.09
Total expense per sheep	$1.07

"Against this is placed the credit of $1.17 for wool, and "returns of sales fo fat sheep or stores (allowing 75 for increase and $1.68 for net sales)," making 49 cents more, or gross increase per sheep of $1.66, and leaving net profit of 59 cents per head."

The above extract from an article in The Breeders' Gazette, on the comparative costs of growing wool, shows figures that ought to encourage woolgrowers in this part of the country.

That is, the Black Hills—

Reliable men who are in the business here in the Hills, claim that sheep can be kept in bands of 1,000 or more, at a cost not to exceed 75 cents per head which is 32 cents less than it costs in Australia, where our severest competition comes from.

This is sent to me by a man who, I presume, is one of the largest sheep-growers in the Black Hills region, and perhaps one of the largest in the State of South Dakota. I have some other correspondence which, although it is very interesting, is very voluminous, and I shall not burden the Senate by reading very much of it. But I wish the Senate to know something of the sentiment of our sheep-growers. I am not quoting the words of fancy farmers, full of theory but wanting experience, but those rather of actual sheep-growers who understand something of this question. Here is the opinion of one, D. A. Williams, of Grant County, S. Dak.:

D. A. Williams, one of the most intelligent farmers of this county who called at the Review office a few days ago, one who is quite extensively engaged in sheep-raising, stated that notwithstanding the low price of wool he was making money at the business, and that he did not fear having the tariff entirely removed from wool, but he wanted the tariff also taken off manufactured goods. He said that he seriously doubted whether the tariff on wool increased the price to the American farmer, but even if it did that the difference was more than made up in the higher prices he was compelled to pay for the manufactured goods he had to buy. Here is a farmer—who does not claim to be a statesman, but who has intelligently studied from cause to effect, and clearly understands the deception that has been practiced upon the agriculturist by the high tariff taxers.

I have here one more, and it comes from the State represented by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who preceded me in this discussion. The Minneapolis Times says:

Wool and Mutton, a paper printed in this city, "devoted to the wool and mutton interests of the United States," quotes approvingly the statement made by ex-Senator Warren of Wyoming, before the national convention of the National Woolgrowers' Association in Washington last month, that—

"There were 4,000,000 people directly interested in the growing of sheep and wool, with a direct investment in that industry of $200,000,000 and an additional $300,000,000 indirectly interested. To all these the Wilson bill meant practical annihilation. * * * Putting wool on the free list, in brief, meant the damage of an investment of $500,000,000—the annihilation of 47,000,000 sheep now being raised for their wool, and the removal of employment of 1,500,000 people."

The editor goes on to remark:

Of course, as one of the prophets of high protection, Wool and Mutton echoes this lamentation over the blue ruin which is going to overtake the poor woolgrowers as soon as the new tariff goes into effect. This recalls the attempt last December to collect ammunition in the shape of letters from sheep farmers for the artillery of debate to be fired off at the Wilson bill. A series of questions were propounded in a circular letter to sheep farmers, with the request that the answer be sent to Hon. JULIUS C. BURROWS, the Michigan apostle of McKinleyism.

One of the sheep farmers thus appealed to for facts furnished a mass of useful information, which, though not at all what Mr. BURROWS and his associates sought for, or had any use for, is of timely interest to the general public, who only want to get at the truth about these tariff problems and are not concerned as to whose theories are damaged thereby. This particular woolgrower dates his instructive letter from Carbon, Wyo.

The Senator's own State.

Replying to the inquiry, just why wool can not be grown as cheaply in this country as in Australia or other foreign countries, he says: "There is no reason why we can not grow wool as cheap, if not cheaper, here than any other place in the world."

In response to the vital question, what did wool net you on the farm or ranch during the past season in comparison with previous ones? Mr. BURROWS got some very discouraging disclosures. This Wyoming woolgrower states that he netted 9½ cents per pound for what he has sold of his 1893 clip; that the clip of 1892 netted him 14 cents per pound, and that the clip of 1891, sold before the McKinley law went into effect, netted him the best price of all, 17 cents per poond. This fact, altogether unavailable as it is for high-protectionist orators and organs, was clinched by the further testimony of this candid Wyoming woolgrower. "My experience," he wrote, "during the past season is that it is the dullest I have had, in spite of the fact that there is a duty on the foreign wool that amounts to more than the value of mine." He insisted that the American has the advantage of the foreigner in the wool-growing, "and wool sells for less under the McKinley law than ever before."

The closing sentences of this plain-spoken woolgrower's reply is particularly notable, which it is not at all likely that Wool and Mutton will care to quote. "In summing up this whole business," says he, "I have come to the conclusion that we have nothing to hope for from protection, as the duty on foreign wool is more than the price of American wool. We have nothing to fear from the foreign woolgrower. The cause of the depression in the wool business is that the manufacturers and commission men have taken advantage of the tariff agitation and general business depression to put down prices, so that they can get wool for their own prices."

There is quite another standpoint to which the attention of Wool and Mutton is respectfully invited. This is the standpoint from which free wool can and will be justified—the standpoint of the woolen clothing and carpet manufacturers, whose business will be built up by it, and the yet broader standpoint of the general mass of the consumers, whose clothing and carpets will be reduced in cost. At the same time it is reassuring to the friends of true tariff reform who do not desire to injure any American industry in the process of reducing and equalizing tariff burdens, to learn from the testimony of the men who know best—the woolgrowers themselves—that the McKinley duties have not really helped them at all, and that the transfer of wool to the free list will not hurt them; moreover, that it will liberate them from the clutch of the protectionists, who are now able to combine under the shelter of the high tariff on foreign wool, to dictate low prices for the American clip.

Mr. POWER. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. POWER. What is the name of the correspondent whose statement the Senator is reading?

Mr. KYLE. The article is from the Minneapolis Times.

Mr. POWER. I thought the Senator read a letter from a correspondent.

Mr. KYLE. The name of the correspondent is not given, but he lives at Carbon, Wyo.

Mr. POWER. I should like to know his name. I am afraid he is holding an office under the present Administration.

Mr. KYLE. I rather think he is not, although I do not know.

Mr. POWER. I should like to have his name.

Mr. KYLE. I presume the Senator from Wyoming knows——

Mr. POWER. If the Senator will give me the name of the correspondent we should like to look it up.

Mr. KYLE. If the Senator from Montana will wait, before I get through I will give him some names. The letter is not one from my own State, and the correspondent's name is not given in the article referred to.

Mr. CAREY. As the Senator from South Dakota says he read the article for my benefit, I wish to call his attention to a letter which is published on page 357 of a memorial presented to the Senate by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] January 17, 1894. The letter is an anonymous one, and the Senator will find it very fully answered in this document by my late colleague, Hon. F. E. Warren. It is an anonymous letter, and we have not been able to have any person living inside the State acknowledge that he wrote the letter.

Mr. KYLE. I am glad the Senator from Wyoming has brought the matter to the attention of the Senate. I do not know the gentleman at all, but no memorialist would probably print such a letter from an anonymous correspondent.

Mr. CAREY. I do not know him.

Mr. KYLE. But I have no doubt he represents the views of many woolgrowers there. I will read now an article written by W. F. McCulloch, of Jessie, N. Dak.:

I am a woolgrower, and have as good sheep perhaps as can be found in the country I live in. Yet, I am not a woolgrower who wishes the Democratic party in hades on account of their free-trade principles. I never voted a Democratic ticket in my life—

I presume, therefore, he is not a Democrat—

but I can not understand why farmers with sheep want protection on wool when they must know that they can not be benefited by a tariff on wool, unless they form a combination and set their own price. This they have never done and never will.

Farmers of ordinary intelligence must know that this high-tariff policy in the past twenty-eight years has nearly doubled the price of what they bought. They must know that the purchasers of their wool fixed both the price of their wool and their coats. The manufacturers were in a position to take the benefits of the protection, charging the farmers two prices for woolen clothes, while they never paid him the amount of the tariff extra for the wool. The American farmers, very many of them, may not know that $15 worth of woolen cloths on the Canadian side, a few years ago, would sell on the American side for some $30 to $35, and other supplies in proportion, while the American farmers got less for their wheat, corn, cattle, hogs, etc., at Chicago than the prices paid at Toronto in Canada. Now, these are more than mere assertions, for the writer lived beside the line, between the two countries, where smuggling goods was carried on day and night by men, women, and boys. Some women made more at one trip with smuggled goods than they could working out for a year.

Of all classes on the face of the earth the American farmer has been humbugged and fooled the worst, and largely by a lying press, whose interests lay in another direction than that of the toiling masses and the good of this Republic. Do our farmers, having a few sheep, expect to get less for their wool under a low tariff than they have been getting the past few years under the highest tariff the world has ever known?

When will the American farmer awake and take a look around him, rather than be stuffed by interested corporations? When will the American farmer wake to the fact that after more than twenty-five years of the highest tariff on wool and woolens that the world has ever known we find the masses without sheep, the farmer having sheep being the exception, and not the rule?

And what is the result when the farmer takes his wool to market? He returns home with the sweepings of the mill or the rags of the Old World ground up and battered into some cotton for his share in the sheep. What part or parcel can the American farmer have with his sheep, himself being clothed with rags, shoddy, and cotton? Wool is taxed so high that his purse can not reach it. Remove the tariff from wool and woolens, and allow the American farmers to clothe themselves with the wool that grows on their sheep, and their hearts will warm up. They will draw nearer together and prosper.

We are daily reminded that "without a protective tariff we would have no sheep." How do those high-tariff preachers account for the fact that our Canadian neighbors, a people in all their early history, and up till of late, with wool and woolens on the free list, instead of having no sheep, have the hills and dales of their country alive with the best sheep the world ever saw? Nearly every man who tills the soil has sheep, and not something resembling a cross between a coyote and a wolf, as the bulk of our American sheep do.

Mr. POWER. Will the Senator from South Dakota yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. POWER. The latter part of the article which the Senator has read refers to sheep in Canada.

Mr. KYLE. It refers to the grade of sheep in Canada.

Mr. POWER. With the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, I wish to give him a little history as to the matter.

Mr. KYLE. The gentleman who wrote the article lives on the line.

Mr. POWER. I also live near the line, and I wish to give the Senator the facts.

Mr. KYLE. The Senator from Montana can state the facts when I get through.

I know personally many of the people in Upper Canada, along Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, and part of Lake Huron. Numbers of them came from the States of Ohio and New York in early years. They are the best farmers of North America. They have the very best sheep that are known in the country to-day. I wish to read a short letter, written by a gentleman in my own State with his own hand, which explains the sentiments of one who, I think, is a just man as well as a man who knows about sheep. He says:

As members of Congress seem so anxious to protect the farmers and especially on wool, I will give you a few facts in regard to my own county and State. I learn from the auditor of this county (Davison) that we have a population of about 7,000 and about 1,400 voters, and there are not ten farmers in the county who own sheep. In my own township we have a population of about 3,00 and about 60 voters, and I am the only man in the township who has any interest in sheep.

I now ask, would it be just and fair that 7,000 people should be taxed in order that we ten farmers might obtain a few cents more for our wool? I think not. Every man, woman, and child must have woolen clothing. We all must use coal or hay for fuel. We must have lumber. Some of us love to wear white shirts with collars and cuffs, and all of us desire to be protected from a protective tariff. We desire the income tax, and all of the farmers will gladly welcome the day when we have it to pay.

This is a man who, I believe, represents the sentiment of a great many people throughout the Western country, that though they may have a few sheep, and even though a protective duty upon raw wool would benefit them a little, yet they feel that little is more than overcome by the duty which they are compelled to pay upon the clothing they buy.

These views are also expressed by Mr. R. W. Kennedy, of Oakville, N. Dak., in a plain, matter-of-fact way.

A TARIFF QUERY.

R. W. Kennedy, of Oakville, N. Dak., in renewing his subscription to the Farmer for the coming year, adds to his letter the following:

"Seeing some of your contributors are not backward to show their political inclinations through your columns, and as you permit them to do so, I would like to ask Mr. M. F. G., and other sheep and wool men who hold similar views, why, if their business is such a favored one, and so well adapted to this country, as they tell us, and so much superior to that of the wheat-grower—why can not they stand on their own legs without props or crutches? Now, there are probably twenty in the Dakotas who buy wool in the shape of clothing for every one who raises that commodity for sale. Now, why, by a protective tariff, must these twenty poor, struggling wheat-growers and their families be taxed in order to help this great sheep and wool man to stand on his feet?

"Why should the laborers in busy factories all over this broad country, and the poorly paid miners, come up from their dreary toil, and be requested to contribute their pennies to support these great leading sheep and wool men? Truly, selfishness renders men as blind as it makes them mean.

"Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursel's as others see us!"

Mr. President, I have not stated, perhaps, what action I may take upon this floor. It may not be just for the farmers of this country to sacrifice everything upon raw wool while the manufacturers are still holding the lion's share. Although I have read these letters in your presence to-day, representing the sentiment of some farmers, there are other farmers, and many of them, who say that if the manufacturers are to have everything in sight they do not wish to be left out and have no duty upon raw wool.

I now ask your attention to a little document, entitled Imported Merchandise, 1893, prepared by the Finance Committee, and for the benefit of the people who read the RECORD I will compare the duties paid under the McKinley act with the duties proposed under the pending bill. The first is yarns:

	Average ad valorem under—
	Present law.	House bill.	Senate bill.
Yarns, woolen and worsted:
Valued at not more than 30 cents per pound	278.66	30	30
Valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound	118.79	30	30
Valued at more than 40 cents per pound	105.42	35	30
Cloths, woolen or worsted:
Valued at not more than 30 cents per pound	163.09	40	40
Valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound	114.86	40	40
Valued above 40 cents per pound	99.50	40	40

Now, here is the blanket list. Blankets are a great necessity among the people, and it is the complaint of the American farmer that he can take almost his entire wool product to market and scarcely be able to bring blankets enough home to supply his family:

	Average ad valorem under—
	Present law.	House bill.	Senate bill.
Blankets:
Valued at not more than 30 cents per pound	88.22	25	25
Valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound	100	30	30
Valued at more than 40 and not more than 50 cents per pound	103.90	35	35
Valued at more than 50 cents per pound	80.33	35	35

The next is a very important article of consumption amongst the farmers of the United States—flannels for underwear:

	Average ad valorem under—
	Present law.	House bill.	Senate bill.
Flannels for underwear:
Valued at not more than 30 cents per pound	84.90	25	25
Valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound	103.51	30	30
Valued at more than 40 and not more than 50 cents per pound	103.22	35	35
Weighing over 4 ounces per square yard	96.54	40	40

Mr. President, these are but samples of the exorbitant charges, or what we have regarded in the West as next to highway robbery, placed upon us by the McKinley act on the clothing we wear on our backs. Yet there are Senators upon the other side of the Chamber who are inveighing against Democratic Senators for voting for a duty upon sugar, and against the Populists for coöperating with them, because, forsooth, this article is a necessity of the American people. I would like to know if clothing is not also a necessity. Every man, woman, and child in our country must be clothed. In our Northwest country we can get along without sugar if it comes to the pinch, but we can not get along without clothing.

The question occurs to us many times whether we need even such exorbitant duties as those which are proposed to be imposed under the present Senate bill.

I have made some computations in regard to the reductions. The average under the McKinley act, reducod to an ad valorem basis—many of the duties in that act are specific and many are ad valorem—is 98.62 per cent upon wool and woolens. The average ad valorem duty upon raw wool is 44.30 per cent.

The average upon woolens alone is 88.96 per cent. The bill as it now stands has cut the duty upon woolens 53.7 per cent; in other words, it is cut from 93.62 per cent, as given in the schedule, to an average of 41.13 per cent. That is a remarkable fall, and the people of the country will rise in gratitude to the framers of this bill because they have been able to cut down the duties upon this great necessity.

But I ask in all honesty, have the rates been cut low enough yet? Are not the marks of the woolen manufacturers still in this bill? Have these men not been lingering near the Finance Committee; have they not been button-holding the members upon this side of the Chamber, as well as those upon the other side, to protect their interests, and are they not protected? I have heard it hinted upon both sides of the Chamber that the manufacturers are satisfied with the present woolen schedule, and will be glad and thankful when it goes through.

The first question that will be put to me when I go to the West, will be whether I could not have done something to scale down the duties from an average of 41.13 per cent to perhaps 30 or 35 per cent as a compensation for the reduction of the duty upon raw wool.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KYLE. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it a matter of entire indifference to the Senator whether clothing be made in this country or abroad?

Mr. KYLE. It is not a matter of so much difference to me, but I tell you it is to the people in my section of the country. I can point you to American citizens living on the prairies of my State. They are honorable men and women, some of whom came from the Senator's own State of Connecticut, who were educated in your schools, men with as noble aspirations and purposes in their hearts as ever were formed, and women who are as tender in their affection for their children and as noble in every respect as can be found anywhere on the face of the earth. They are to be found on our broad prairies, living sometimes in tarred shacks, sometimes in sod shanties, with no ceilings above their heads, and sometimes upon dirt floors; and to-day, when they are selling wheat for 35 cents a bushel and can not dispose of the cattle they raise for above 2 or 2½ cents a pound on the hoof, it is a matter of very little consequence to them whether they buy their clothing from an Eastern manufacturer or whether it comes from China, or England, or Australia. The question with them is where they are going to get clothing the cheapest.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should be glad to make another observation just there.

Mr. KYLE. Very well.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are people in the State of Connecticut just as badly off for work as there are in South Dakota. They have not any wheat to sell at any price per bushel, and they are waiting until this bill shall be concluded, so that they may know whether their factories are going to be opened again or not; and those people subsist upon the provisions brought to them from the West. If they can not get work in the factories they will go to the farms, and the competition in farming will be still greater and wheat will be still lower.

Mr. KYLE. I have understood from the Senator and others on that side of the Chamber that the workingmen in New England have in the aggregate millions of dollars in the savings banks; which shows that many are in good circumstances; but I know there are poor people living there as well as in the West. But, Mr. President, the question comes to me again, as it comes to a great many others, would not the New England manufacturers, were they to deal justly by their employés, be able to pay them better wages than they are now paying them.

I have some facts which I shall present in regard to the percentage of the cost of production paid to the American wage worker. I have been over New England; I have been in the manufactories; and I want to say right here that I do not have so much sympathy for the New England manufacturer as I used to have.

We enacted a law in this country, the alien contract-labor law, for the purpose of keeping out of the United States the pauper labor of Europe, against which the people represented by the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber have been praying to be protected for the last thirty years; and yet when we protected them against the pauper labor of Europe, and when they have been given also the additional protection afforded by the McKinley tariff law, they have dealt unjustly by the best sons and daughters of America, thrusting them out of the manufactories, and have imported into New England between 400,000 and 500,000 French Canadians to take their places; and those people are living to-day on wages upon which the ordinary American New England man or woman would starve.

I have understood from a statistician of Springfield, Mass., that there are 100,000 French Canadians in that old Bay State. I have gone through the cities of New England, where the old Puritans used to walk in their pride and where I expected to see the sons of those old ancestors occupying the homesteads. You may to-day walk five or ten blocks and not hear your native tongue spoken. Go into the old hotels, in whose halls resounded the voices of some of the famous statesmen of former days, and there at the tables you may hear nothing but a jargon of French during the whole meal. When you go into the factories and other places you hear nothing but French. That is the way high protection has affected the young men and the young women of New England.

Go into the old State of Pennsylvania, where some of my ancestors lived. I go there now, and I find the children of the old Pennsylvanians removed from the manufacturing establishments and their places are filled by Poles, Hungarians, Slavs, Bohemians, and all of those classes which are now supplanting our American citizens—men who work for starvation wages and who can live in a manner that would be considered degrading by American citizens.

A reporter of Pittsburg went into the mines of Pennsylvania a year or two ago and reported this fact: There was a class of Huns or Slavs or Poles working in a certain district who lived in common board houses, the cracks of which you could see through. There were from ten to twenty-five or thirty and in one case even thirty-five men, women, and children, old and young, all living in one room and sleeping upon the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Dakota yield?

Mr. KYLE. I do.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the Senator if it is a fact, as alleged by Republican Senators, that American artisans have retired from certain industries as a matter of choice, and not as a matter of necessity? Especially, I understand, is this alleged to be the case in the New England factories; that they were not compelled to give up their places or to resign the special pursuits in which they were engaged as a matter of necessity, but as a matter of choice, because they found more remunerative employment. That is what I understand the argument to be on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. KYLE. I will say, Mr. President, that I have talked with New England men and women, who say they have left such employments simply because they are no longer renumerative; and further, the American people, with their pluck, will never retire from any sort of employment so long as it furnishes them decent living.

I was referring, when interrupted, to the Huns and Slavs. The reporter to whom I have alluded, stated that instead of their sitting at a table, as does the ordinary American, with perhaps an oilcloth spread before him, if he can not furnish anything else, and plates and knives and forks, these people were eating their black bread without any of the accessories of civilized life, but in the manner they were accustomed to in the countries from which they came, and for butter they were spreading upon the bread-brown colored axle grease, which they had bought at the neighboring grocery store. They were working for wages which were entirely consistent with this manner of living. Must we ask the American employé to do this and to come down to these starvation wages? Or can the American manufacturer state without blushing that he has fulfilled his moral contract with the American people, by which he promised to protect and defend his employés from the beggared condition of the European laborer?

Mr. President, I believe that the American manufacturer, with free wool, will be able to compete with any foreign country, I do not care where it is, in the manufacture of cloth. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] the other day stated that we were buying as good clothing in the United States now, and as cheaply, as it can be bought anywhere in Europe. I have seen the same statement made in the other branch of Congress. With the improved machinery now in the United States, with the energy of the American people, and with free wool I do not hesitate to say that we can compete with any nation to-day in the production of clothing, and without any duty whatever upon manufactured goods.

I have some facts here in regard to the wages paid by American manufacturers—only a very few of them—but they are of great interest. The contention of the Republican party has been for years that there should be a tariff upon all imported goods to equalize the difference paid in wages in this and other countries. That is the stand which has been taken heretofore, and it is that which is taken by Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber to-day, that there should be a duty of such an amount as will equalize the difference in wages between this country and Europe. Let me state certain facts. I quote from the seventh annual report of the United States Commissioner of Labor, to be found on pages 52 to 63 of the majority report of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, giving the percentage of the cost of production paid in wages to employés in the United States and in Europe.

In the manufacture of cashmere and cassimeres in forty-five establishments in the United States the manufacturers paid their employés as wages 25.01 per cent, and in 14 establishments on the Continent of Europe the percentage was 19.82, a difference in favor of the United States of only about 6 per cent. We have the spectacle before us of Senators contending over and over again for more than the 41.13 per cent of protection accorded in the pending bill.

In the manufacture of ladies' dress goods, seven establishments in the United States paid 20.62 per cent of the cost of production in wages; three establishments in Great Britain paid 21.43 per cent; and on the Continent of Europe one establishment paid 22.33 per cent; in other words, a difference of about 1 per cent in favor of Great Britain, and 2 per cent in favor of the Continent of Europe.

Take worsted goods, of which the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] spoke so vehemently only a day or two since. There are three establishments, recorded in this paper, in Great Britain from which returns have been received, and they pay 23.56 per cent of the cost of production as wages, while thirty-five establishments in the United States pay 21.94 per cent, and the Continent of Europe three establishments pay 20.73 per cent, 2 per cent greater in Great Britain than in the United States, and only 1 per cent less upon the Continent of Europe.

In the manufacture of tweed goods, one establishment in Great Britain paid 35.47 of the cost of production to labor, and in the United States one establishment paid 29.12 per cent; in other words, 6 per cent less goes to wages in the United States than in Great Britain.

Mr. CAREY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. KYLE. I hope the Senator will wait until I get through.

Mr. CAREY. Very well.

Mr. KYLE. In the manufacture of serge goods in the United States, one establishment paid 26.08 per cent of the cost of production for labor, and upon the continent of Europe nine establ- paid 15.20 per cent, 11 per cent greater in the United States than upon the continent of Europe.

Mr. President, the figures I have given are, as I stated, from the seventh annual report of the Commissioner of Labor, and I presume they are authentic upon this point as far as the returns have been received.

I have here a statement of the comparative average wages taken from Census Bulletin No. 169, pages 6 to 10, issued March 9, 1892, and only recently published. The statement is as follows:

	Per cent.
Woolen goods, wages	21.4
Worsted goods, wages	20.1
Felt goods, wages	22.4
Wool hats, wages	25.6
Carpets, wages	24.3
Hosiery and knit goods, wages	27.1
Average	23.4

Where is the ground of your contention for 41.13 per cent as an average ad valorem duty on woolens? I ask, Mr. President, in the name of the American people, are the manufacturers to have every advantage in this bill? There seems from this Census Bulletin to be some ground for the statement that the American manufacturer has been satisfied in the consideration of the bill now before us.

I am not willing, as a Senator representing in part the agricultural State of South Dakota, to strike down all the duty upon wool if the Eastern manufacturers are still to contend for that which I believe to be utterly unjust. They do not need the exorbitant duty. If they would do the fair thing by their employés, I believe that they would be able to run their factories upon full time and pay their employés their old schedule of wages.

Mr. President, as I have stated, I should feel perfectly safe in voting for the removal of all duties upon raw wool; yet I feel, under the circumstances, since the manufacturers are to be protected as they are in this bill, that I can not consent to strike down all the duty upon raw wool. There has been a scaling down of the duties upon manufactured woolens of 53.7 per cent. Are Senators willing to scale the duty upon raw wool to the same extent? The same sliding scale of 53.7 per cent running through raw wool would bring the present duty down to about 5 cents, as against 11 cents of the McKinley law and about 5½ cents as against the 12-cent duty. I do not know that there is anybody in the Senate who will present an amendment on that line, but if such an amendment should be offered, I shall be compelled, for the sake of justice and for the protection of my people, to vote for it.

Mr. President, the Populists upon this side of the Chamber have been criticised a great deal for the votes we have cast on various amendments. We were criticised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], by my colleague [Mr. PETTIGREW], and by other Senators across the aisle, because of the votes we cast in favor of amendments when the sugar schedule was under consideration. I want to say right here, that whether the law heretofore passed was good or bad, it would be to the honor of the American Congress that it should fulfill every jot and tittle of its pledges under the statutes, which pledges were a moral, if not a legal, contract with the sugar people.

On general principles I am opposed to the bounty system. I do not think we should pay a bounty to the sugar manufacturer any more than we should pay a bounty to the wheat-grower of South Dakota or those who raise cattle; but since we have passed the McKinley law, and have made specific mention in paragraph 231 of a bounty on sugar, which should continue from 1891 to 1905, I believe that we, as the people's representatives, should fulfill that obligation to the letter. Let me read you the obligation:

231. That on and after July 1, 1891, and until July 1, 1905, there shall be paid from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, under the provisions of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, to the producer of sugar testing not less than 90° by the polariscope, from beets, sorghum, or sugar-cane grown within the United States, or from maple sap produced within the United States, a bounty of 2 cents per pound; and upon such sugar testing less than 90° by the polariscope, and not less than 80°, a bounty of 1½ cents per pound, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

Mr. President, I know something about law, though I have never practiced at the bar; but there are Senators here in my presence who have not only practiced, but who for years sat upon the bench, and who are distinguished jurists, and I put it to you whether, what is clearly to the people of the United States a moral obligation resting upon the Government is not in the minds of fair-minded judges a legal contract. I recognize the argument made by some Senators, that it is a unilateral contract, and can therefore be broken.

I recognize that; but it is nevertheless a contract or agreement upon the part of the United States Government that from 1891 to 1905 any person who should erect a sugar refinery and produce a pound of sugar and present it to the Government for inspection should receive a bounty. That was the contract offered on the part of the Government, and those who entered into this enterprise struck hands with the Government and the contract was completed. I believe that to-day, if the question were brought before the United States Supreme Court, we should be holden to the contract, and would be compelled to pay the bounty which it was provided by law should be given to the sugar producer.

Mr. President, when this question came before the Senate, I recognized from the sentiment on this side of the Chamber and the sentiment in the other House that it was impossible to preserve the bounty upon sugar, and in explanation of the vote of myself and my colleague from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], in casting our votes for a diminishing bounty, I desire to say we cast those votes because we thought it was the best we could do under the circumstances toward keeping our contract with those we are now about to wrong.

Now, a word also in regard to the vote cast by my colleague from Nebraska and myself in favor of a duty on sugar. I desire to say to the Senate that I am not only in favor of free sugar for the American breakfast table, but I am in favor of free everything. I do not care what it is.

I am in favor of the duty being taken off iron and steel, and coal and lumber, and manufactured goods, too, for that matter. I shall vote, every time I get the opportunity, to remove all duties from the manufactured necessaries of life if by so doing we can still pay the current expenses of our Government. We are bound to provide revenue in some way. Let me tell you what these expenses are at the present time. It is estimated that for the year 1895 we must provide $454,427,748. That revenue must be provided for, however much we may wish to preserve pet industries for our own States, however much we may wish not to tax certain necessities of the poor people.

I have taken the ground—and I think my colleague from Nebraska has taken the same position—that while we are going over the bill in Committee of the Whole we are giving and taking here and there, as all must know. We are taking the duty off some things and increasing it on others, and we can not tell, until we have gone over the bill in Committee of the Whole, just what the total amount of revenue is going to be.

The estimated receipts under the bill as it came from the House were $440,093,416.91, about fourteen or fifteen million dollars short of the necessary expenditures during the year

1895. Under the bill as it now stands in the Senate, the estimated receipts will be $491,073,818.28; in other words, in the neighborhood of from thirty-six to forty million dollars more than the estimated expenditures for 1895.

If in the final making of these schedules I find we can meet our running expenses and yet strike the duty off sugar, I shall vote to do it and I shall be the one to offer an amendment to that effect. If any Senator offers an amendment to continue the diminishing bounty on sugar until at least the year 1899, until the sugar men can get upon their feet and take care of themselves, I shall cast a vote for that. They were innocent of any future action by Congress——

Mr. MANDERSON. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. KYLE. I will.

Mr. MANDERSON. As the Senator is predicting his action when we shall come into the Senate with this bill, and, as I was particularly struck with his very able argument that under the McKinley law the bounty provision was a contract, involving not only a moral but probably a legal obligation upon the Government, am I to understand, when the bill comes into the Senate, that the Senator will not only vote for a diminishing bounty but for the bounty of the contract?

Mr. KYLE. I shall vote for the bounty of the contract if we can have it.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is right.

Mr. KYLE. The bounty of the contract, the one which the Government is bound to fulfill, I shall vote for if there is any show of getting it; but I tell the Senator frankly, with the disposition that now exists in the other House and with the disposition on this side of the Chamber, we can not get a bounty of 2 cents a pound; and I think the Senator will agree with me that we must do the very best we possibly can to take care of that great industry and fulfill the letter of our contract.

The men engaged in the production of sugar, as I was remarking, went into the business innocently, oblivious of any future action on the part of the United States; they supposed we were going to keep our contract; they invested several millions of dollars in their plants. During the first and second years it was impossible for them to pay expenses, but now, the third year, they are just beginning to realize some profit. Just as they have gotten to this point it is proposed to destroy the bounty, break our contract, and put the business of these men in jeopardy. It is not right. I stand here to-day as the represetative, I am glad to say, of poor people in the United States; but I not only want to be just to poor people, but it is right to be just to the rich, it is right to be just to corporations, it is right to be just to all classes, and my vote shall always be cast in the line of justice so far as I am able to discern it. At the same time I do not believe in casting any vote here that will in any measure enable the sugar trust to continue to hold the people of our country by the throat.

A great many Senators criticised my colleague [Mr. ALLEN] and myself because we voted for the tariff duty upon sugar, which included one-eighth of a cent a pound duty upon sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard. Mr. President, I think that comes with very ill grace from Senators upon the other side of the Chamber who voted for the old McKinley law, which contained in it a duty of one-half cent a pound upon all sugars above No. 16 Dutch standard, and also 10 per cent additional duty upon the sugar exported from those countries which paid a bounty upon sugar. This exorbitant duty, according to Mr. Havemeyer before the special investigating committee a few days ago, netted the sugar trust from $25,000,000 to $35,000,000 during the past three years.

The sugar refiners testified here, I believe, that they could not exist and carry on their business with less than one-fourth of a cent a pound upon sugar above No. 16 Dutch standard. That estimate has been cut in half by the Senate bill, which shows that the finger of the sugar trust is not manipulating this legislation in the Senate. Again, at the time my colleague from South Dakota moved to strike out the one-eighth of a cent a pound on sugar above No. 16, I stood with him, because I wished to remove every vestige of that which the sugar trust might have in the bill, if there was any suspicion in regard to that matter, and I shall vote for such an amendment again if it is presented.

In conclusion, let me say that while I am not satisfied with the tariff bill in its present form, while there are imperfections through and through, I like the bill infinitely better than I do the McKinley act. I can see that the Finance Committee from the start have been actuated by lofty purposes. They have been actuated by a disposition to provide for the running expenses of our Government, which are now very large, much larger than they were when the McKinley act was passed, and therefore a great many things have to be taxed that we would like to leave upon the free list.

But as I look at it all the way through, there have been reductions made in the interest of the people of our country, the people who need to be relieved from the burden of taxation; and if, when the bill is finally adjusted in Committee of the Whole and reported to the Senate and the final amendments are made, it is still in the interests of the people instead of the protected few, and is better than the McKinley act, I shall cast my vote for it and I shall not be ashamed to do so.

Mr. President, I wish to append as a portion of my remarks some tables relating to the sheep industry taken from the Statistical Abstract of 1893, showing the number of sheep by States and Territories from 1860 to 1894. Also a table showing the number of sheep and the amount of wool produced by States and Territories during the year 1893.

The following letter is from Col. M. W. Sheafe, one of the most prominent Democrats in the State of South Dakota, a wool-grower, a public-spirited man, and posted as well upon tariff questions as any person in our State. His letter is a complete argument upon the wool question, and is worthy of a place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I will append it in full as a portion of my remarks:

DEAR SIR: Inasmuch as the Wilson bill is soon to be a matter of discussion before the honorable body of which you are a member, and as the wool schedule seems to form one of the principal topics for discussion in that document, I desire, as one of your constituents, and more especially as a wool-grower to an extent fully equal to that of any other woolgrower in the State, to urge upon you the importance of placing wool upon the free list.

One is not apt, even for partisan purposes, to advocate a measure which he deems derogatory to his interests, but on the contrary will sometimes depart from party lines to advocate a measure where he thinks it will replenish his purse.

So it is in the wool industry; from selfish and business motives I am extremely anxious that wool should be placed upon the free list.

* * * * * * *

One has but to examine the statistics for the past seventy-five years as regards the prices of wool to discover the fact that whenever wool has been upon the free list it has commanded a higher price than when a duty has been imposed thereon; and again when the duty was light, prices have been higher than when the duties have been exorbitantly high as under the McKinley bill. This is a fact, and it is stated that "one fact is worth a thousand theories."

We find by reference thereto that while wool under the so-called free-trade laws of 1846 to 1861 averaged nearly 60 cents per pound in New York, that on the other hand, from 1861 to the present time, wool has steadily declined under a protective tariff.

Now, sir, there is reason in all this, and the result of such researches as I have made, together with the opinions obtained from prominent wool manufacturers of the East, cause me to think that owing to the fact that imported wools are absolutely necessary in the manufacture of nearly all grades of woolen goods, that it matters not how high the duty on imported wool is placed, these imported wools must be had by the woolen manufacturer for mixing purposes, and this extra price placed upon imported wools by the tariff is made up by a reduction in the prices paid for American wools when averaging up the cost of raw material.

It was my good fortune two years since to meet one of the largest woolen manufacturers in New England, and in speaking on this question I asked him why the manufacturer should not use American wool and pay the prices which would be expected to be paid for the same by reason of the tariff upon foreign wool? He informed me that imported wool was an absolute necessity with him in the manufacture of woolen goods, that wool varied in quality in different latitudes, and in fact in different altitudes, and that a difference of 200 miles in latitude and a difference in the character of the soil made a distinguishing difference in the grade of wool produced, even in the same breed of sheep.

He informed me that he imported wool from every country where sheep were raised, and that he should continue to do so from necessity, whether the tariff were 1 cent or $1 per pound, as it was absolutely necessary to have imported wool for mixing with American wools. He further stated, in reply to a question as to whether or not a protective tariff did not aid in the price of American wools, that in his opinion it did not enhance the value thereof 1 cent a pound, and in fact made no difference whatever.

Now, it can be readily seen that in order to anywhere near meet the prices of foreign goods in competition in foreign markets, there must be a medium reached for the price of wool, and if, in addition to the price of foreign wools, say in Liverpool, a tariff of 11 cents or 12 cents must be added when imported to this country, it is plain to see that a medium must be reached by depressing the price of American wools.

In proof of this theory, I beg leave to quote from a circular issued by the Boston Home Market Club, an organization of a radical protective policy. In that circular we find the following, to wit: "It is a mistaken idea with many manufacturers that foreign prices of wool are necessarily lower than home prices under protection; they average higher, they would be much higher but for a large and certain domestic supply." Then followed a table showing the average price of wool at port of entry, wherein it appears that the prices range from 1 to 9 cents per pound over and above the American wools at the farm; thus showing distinctly, to my mind, that a tariff on wool is the result of a conspiracy of the woolen manufacturer to purchase the American wool at a lower price, rather than to increase the price thereof.

I beg leave to call your attention to the report of the consuls of the United States printed by the Government, No. 128, May, 1891, and refer you to page 111 of that report, wherein you will find that in the year 1890 the prices of wool at New South Wales averaged from 14 cents to 18 cents per pound, while the prices of American wool at that time did not average over 14 cents or 15 cents.

I also beg leave to call your attention to the same report, page 114, of the imports to America from Australia, wherein you will observe that there has been a steady increase notwithstanding the high tariff placed on imported wools. That the number of bales which were received into the United States from Australia for the year ending June 30 would be 100,000, while in the years 1871 and 1872 the number of bales imported into the United States were but 18,650. This, it would seem, corroborated the opinion expressed by my friend referred to from Massachusetts, who stated that imported wools were absolutely necessary in the manufacture of all kinds of woolen goods.

Taking this view, I am constrained to think that if wool were placed upon the free list the manufacturer would be enabled to purchase raw material at a much less price than at present, thus enabling him to enter into competition successfully with foreign manufacturers and thus making a steady demand for American wool and consequently higher prices therefor.

Again, with free wool and a reduction of the tariff on manufactured goods the consumption of woolen goods would increase materially. We have every right to suppose that were the masses of the people enabled to purchase woolen goods instead of "shoddy" at a reasonable price, that the effect would be similar to that in the case of sugar when placed upon the free list, and an increase in the demand would naturally follow, thus giving another reason why our manufacturers would find use for an increased amount of American wool.

On March 24, 1890, Senator ALLISON, of Iowa, stated that he regarded a duty on wool and woolens as not an intentional fraud, but it had operated as though it were a fraud upon the masses. He made quite an elaborate argument in favor of free wool, and you can refer to that and find a great many arguments which are as true to-day as when uttered by him twenty years ago. One other statement made by him was to the effect that under the increased tariff on wool the number of sheep in Iowa decreased materially. This we know holds good to-day that under the existing tariff laws the number of sheep east of the Mississippi River has decreased amazingly, showing that it is absolutely necessary for grazing lands to be free in order to successfully raise wool in the United States, notwithstanding the intended protection given this industry.

Space is too short and your time too valuable for me to argue this matter at any length; but one fact stands towering above all others, namely, that in 1842 England had a protective tariff on wool, which was repealed a short time after that date. Prior to its repeal a howl went up from the protectionists of England, to which the present howl made by our manufacturers is but an echo, that such a course would destroy the woolen industry of that nation, but history tells us that the contrary was the result, and t seems by the lamp of history we might be guided at present.

We find, in lieu of destruction, the number of sheep increased in England and that the profit in sheep-raising was greatly enhanced by putting wool on the free list, and that the woolen manufacturers of England commenced an era of prosperity which has lasted from that time to this. Above all and beyond all, there is a question of morality involved in thism atter, and when one stops and thinks that the laws of trade are violated; that the people are imposed upon; that the conditions of life are made harder for the poorer classes by this grasping and avaricious prote :tive tariff on woolen goods, it is plain to be seen that a halt should be called and that the masses should be given their innings.

Mr. McKinley patriotically and wisely says that the tariff on wool is placed there because there is a tariff on manufactured woolen goods, and in the same breath gives as a reason for a high tariff on manufactured goods that there is a tariff on wool. This is about the sum and substance of the average protective argument.

As an individual, I became interested in the sheep industry in 1888, believing that there was a reasonable chance of wool being placed upon the free list. I was disappointed, and in lieu thereof the McKinley bill was enacted and an increased tariff placed upon wool. From that time wool has steadily decreased in value. In 1888 I disposed of my clip for 19 cents a pound at my ranch; in 1889 it fell 2 cents. In the year 1890 I was glad to get 16 cents a pound; in 1891 13 cents was the price offered me for my wool. In 1892 I gladly accepted 12 cents, notwithstanding the tariff of my friend McKinley was equal to that amount.

In 1893, with the same tariff laws in effect, no price whatever could be offered and wool was a drug upon the market. Hence it is as a woolgrower and representing the sentiments of a large number of the woolgrowers of this State, we say that certainly matters can be no more worse with free wool than under the high tariff, and if we are to get no more for our wool we certainly will be able to buy our clothing for less.

The statistics show us that the average labor cost in the manufacture of woolen goods is but one-fifth of their total cost, and yet we are told by McKinley and his satellites that the patriotic manufacturer must be protected to the extent of five times the labor cost, and all for the benefit of the laborer. We are told that this 90 per cent more or less of the protective tariff placed upon woolen goods is placed there in order that the woolgrower may be protected and thus both parties to the contract, the producer and the consumer, aided.

It is the same old story of the Indian and the white man dividing up the result of the day's hunt: The Indian got the buzzard and the white man got the turkey, just as the woolgrower gets nothing and the manufacturer gets rich.

So long as people will believe in accepting in blind faith the theories of self-constituted guardians, so long as men will blindly follow the teachings of demagogues and neglect to study this question of such vital importance to themselves, just so long will they be imposed upon and just so long will demagogues flourish.

It is your duty to present to the honorable body of which you are so honored a member the fact that the Dakota woolgrower does not believe that protection aids the price of wool any more than does a 25-cent tariff upon foreign wheat raise the price of American wheat one-tenth of a mill on a bushel.

We wish you success in your endeavors, and believe with the passage of the Wilson bill that every man depending upon his own resources, as he should do, and with the means of taxing the masses taken away from the few who receive this tribute, that our country will enter upon an era of prosperity where fortunes will not be made in a day perhaps, but where profits will be more uniformly distributed and where the poorer classes will have a a chance to live.

Very truly yours,

MARK W. SHEAFE.

Proprietor of Crystal Springs Ranch, Deuel County, S. Dak.

Hon. JAMES H. KYLE,
Member United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Republicans in general hold that it is the duty of a government to secure to its people, so far as possible, the production within their own limits of the great staples and necessaries of life. But the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] adopts in full, it is fair to infer from what he has said, the doctrine that it is our duty to buy where we can buy cheapest. Economic independence is of just as much importance as political independence. A desire for an economical independence was the original source of the efforts of the colonies for independence.

We ought to produce our own cotton, but suppose we can find Egyptian and Indian cotton cheaper, according to the doctrine of the gentleman we must buy it there. We ought to produce, and ultimately we shall produce, all the sugar we need on this continent, but as we can buy it cheaper the gentleman says buy it abroad. We ought to produce all our own iron ore and all the subsequent advanced products of iron and steel, but according to the free-trade doctrine, inasmuch as there are people who can produce iron and steel cheaper than we can, it becomes our Christian duty to buy there, and take no pains to protect the growth of any such industry here.

We ought to be able with all our resources to produce all our own food here, but if anybody in Canada or anywhere else can sell us wheat, or oats, or oatmeal, or corn, or corn meal any cheaper than we can produce it, we ought to buy there. We ought to be able to raise our own wool in this country, substantially all that we need. We raise wool of various grades, and some of the finest and best in the world, but the gentleman is within a hair's breadth of saying we ought not to try to raise wool here while we can buy it cheaper abroad.

We ought to be able to do our own weaving here. We do it very cheaply now, on the whole. We ought to be able to make all our own clothing; and the gentleman has been arguing with great zeal and heat here that we ought to buy our clothing abroad, where possibly we can get it a little cheaper. He can go upon various streets in this city and get a very good suit of clothes for $15 now; but if he could buy a suit for $14 or $12 in Europe, where men and women work for about half price, he would hold it to be a moral duty to buy there.

There is scarcely a thing that we need—food, clothing, household implements, implements of trade, or anything else—that can not be produced cheaper by somebody else where labor gets 60, or 40, or 30 cents a day. The doctrine of the free trader deprives us of work and makes us buy everything abroad; and what are we to buy with? Where is our work? Where is our purchasing power to come from? Daniel Webster said substantially this, that the very first duty of a government is to assist its people in securing employment. Give them employment and they will take care of themselves. The scale may be higher or lower, the higher the better; but if they are sure of steady, constant work they will inevitably adjust themselves to it and will be prosperous.

The gentleman referred with almost an air, I will not say of displeasure, but of reproach, to the fact that the people of New England have large sums of money in the savings banks, and he thinks they can get along. So they could. With the providence characteristic of the New Englander they have been trying to lay up a little something for a rainy day, and you can not starve them to-day, or the next, or next year in all probability. But the secret of $133,000,000 in the savings banks of Connecticut is permanent employment.

I do not omit moral character, and habits of industry and economy, but the economic secret is continuous employment. I am proud to say that there are 335,000 depositors in the savings banks of Connecticut out of a population now of perhaps 760,000. Saving is the habit of our people. It is taught to the children. It is a common thing for the 5, 6, 7, or 8 year old child to have its bank book. It is a common thing to put in bank something when the child is born to be given to it with its accretions when the child is 21 years of age.

I do not know half a dozen millionaires in New England who made their money by manufacturing alone. I know men who laid the foundation of their fortunes by manufacturing, and by fortunate investments elsewhere became millionaires. I have known men who are engaged in manufacturing and by the fortunate help of some valuable invention have accumulated a million. There was Mr. Howe, a citizen of Connecticut, who by the beautiful little device of putting the eye of the needle in the point of the needle made the sewing machine possible, and he revolutionized a field of the industrial world. Did he not deserve from mankind the million he is said to have received?

No matter how high the testimonial paid, because the share contributed by the sewing women was infinitesimal, and the whole world was blessed with cheaper clothing from that day. The Senator observed that he found many foreigners in our New England factories; some Canadians among them. We know little of Bohemians, Slavs, and Poles, but have many of Irish, German, British, French, and Scandinavian origin.

The French Canadians, to whom he specially referred, come to this protection-ridden country precisely because it is the happiest country in the world to live in and the one that best cares for the poor people of all descriptions. For some years they came for a season or a year and returned to Canada. They came into our factories and soon learned to claim as high wages as any, and for many years they have been settling among us, becoming industrious, peace-loving, law-abiding citizens of the United States.

But he says our American girls have gone out of factory work. I can remember very well the time when you found a great many of our girls, bright, intelligent young American girls, in those manufacturing establishments. I know they have to a large extent gone out, but I beg you to observe that it was because they could do better. They have the shrewdness of their race. They went where they could do better, and another class of people largely, not entirely, have taken their places at the loom, and the various positions in all the great manufactories.

I must read a little bit here. I think it will not be tedious, and I commend it especially to the Senator from South Dakota, and to anyone who will do me the honor to listen.

A very unusual, unexpected delegation came here a few weeks ago, a delegation of women selected fairly from New England manufactories. They had no formal hearing before a committee, but some members of the Committee on Finance received and listened to them. Mr. MORRILL, Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. ALDRICH were there, and several other Senators. These women testified freely of themselves. They were intelligent and sensible people. Let me read a little from their testimony.

Mrs. Harriet Branch, of East Greenwich, R. I., a woolen sewer, said that she had worked in the Phœnix Woolen Mill for ten years, and had received from nine to ten dollars a week; at present she was not employed in the mills, having lost her situation some three weeks ago, but expected to go back as soon as the work increased. Let me read from the report:

Q. What wages did you receive at the mill?
A. My pay was $9 and $10 a week. I now earn $3, and sometimes $1.90, per week in plain sewing; some weeks not anything.
Q. Do you know the cause of the reduction at the mill?
A. I do not; the only thing I know is that the reduction is so I have not got work. If I have no work I can not earn the money. The girls in our mill feel terribly about the reduction. There are twenty-five or thirty in my room alone that are supporting the mother, father, or children. Of course, when they get only $4 a week you can tell yourself how far $4 a week will go with a family of two or three.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Have you any family dependent on you for support?
A. I support myself and my daughter, 14 years old. She does not work in the mill; she goes to school. All I have is what I make for myself and her.
Q. Were you born in this country?
A. I was born in Scotland.
Q. (Senator ALLISON.) How do you get on in this country as compared with the old country?
A. In the old country we were kept down by not having the money to spend. Of course in this country we have much better advantage of getting along and being one with the people. In the old country we had not that. As long as we appear as ladies in this country we can be ladies; but in the old country it is different. Here women have a dignity and they do not like to go elsewhere. In the old country the servant girls are considered above the mill hands. There the working classes are kept distinct.

Miss Florence Briggs, of Anthony, R. I., a cotton-weaver, stated that she had worked twelve years in the place where she is now employed and was receiving $6.50 or $7 a week where before she had been getting $8 and over.

Q. When were your wages cut down?
A. A short time ago; I think it was in January. The works have not been stopped; they have been running full time, but they talk now of stopping if this Wilson bill is passed.
Q. Are any of your family dependent on you for support?
A. I help take care of my mother and myself. Our small farm is the only other means of support.

Mrs. Mary Brooks, of Fitchburg, Mass., a cotton-weaver, came from Glasgow, working there as a cotton-weaver:

Q. How long have you been in this country?
A. I have only been in this country three years. I came from Glasgow. There I worked at weaving cotton, just the same work as I do here.
Q. What were your wages there and here?
A. I have a dollar here for a shilling at home for the same kind of work.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) How did you live in Glasgow as compared with Fitchburg?
A. We do not live over there the same as we do here. Smaller rooms, smaller houses, not the same comforts. For two years I make $10 a week here, and since the cut down, $7.50 a week. The cut down came last fall. I do not know why. The mills stopped for two months, shut down and then put down prices besides.
Q. (Senator ALLISON.) Do you support any one besides yourself?
A. I have two little boys to care for beside myself; the youngest one 3, the oldest one 5. I pay for their keep out of the wages I make. I could not do this there. That is the reason I am here; my mother came along with me.
Q. (Senator ALLISON.) What did you state about the wages in Scotland?
A. The wages there were about a shilling, as compared with a dollar here. That was the ordinary pay there. I could save nothing at home; that was by the piece; we only ran two looms at home.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Do you work harder here than at home?
A. No; I would rather run six looms here than three at home; they are heavy looms; they are different kinds of looms altogether. I could do four looms here better than two at home.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Do you know about the cost of living in Glasgow?
A. Yes; I kept house in Glasgow and ran my own household; there were two in the family. I had one room and kitchen. We paid 12½s. a month—for rent; $10 a month for rent here. We have six rooms here for the $10.

Q. (Senator ALLISON.) How about the furniture?
A. The furniture was respectable, but I could not get any luxuries there; had to confine ourselves to food and necessaries of clothing.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Could you have any musical instruments?
A. No; we could not have any musical instruments or spehd anything out of the bare necessaries of life. I lived there in the same way as the others; there was as much labor over there in working as here.
Q. Is it any better here?
A. Yes, indeed; the first nine months I was here I saved $150, besides keeping myself and children. Over there I could not save enough to bring me to this country without the help of my mother. If I had not had my mother to help me I do not believe I would ever have gotten here.

Miss Hattie Freeman, of Woonsocket, R. I., a worsted sewer, is employed in the Harris Woolen Company, of Woonsocket, R. I.

Q. What pay do you get?
A. I make $7.50 a week. It is day work. We have short time, but no reduction in price. The mill had a reduction, but not the sewers. Beside short time, they have been stopped and then they started again, but they expect another reduction of 20 per cent; that is what they had before. The sewers get the most day pay; the weavers make the most by the piecework.
Q. Do you support anyone beside yourself?
A. I take care of my mother, and we can live comfortably on what I make. I pay $9 per month rent for six rooms, for just me and mother.

Mrs. Amy Lees, of New Bedford, Mass., a cotton weaver, came from Lancashire, England, and has worked seven years in this country.

Q. What was your pay there and what is it here?
A. Over there I made about 15 and 16 shillings a week off three looms.

About $4 on an average.

Here $8.50 off seven looms
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Is the work harder here?
A. The work here is a little harder, but not much. I worked in Blackburn, England. I live with my husband.
Q. (Senator ALLISON.) What about the cost of living there and here?
A. It costs more to live here than there, because we have better and more things to eat here than there.
Q. Why?
A. We could not afford them in England.
Q. Would you like to go back to England to live?
A. No; I would sooner be in this country.

Alice Jukes, of Cambridge, Mass., a net and twine maker, has been engaged for fifteen years with the American Knitting and Twine Company, Cambridge, Mass.

Q. How much do you make a week?
A. Before the reduction I made $8 a week. I make $6.50 to $7 now. I am on full time but reduced wages, and expect more reduction if the Wilson bill goes through.
Q. In what branch of the business are you engaged?
A. I make gillingnets. They are made out of linen. There are a number made of cotton, but the greatest number, probably, is made of the linen flax.
Q. Have you ever worked in the old country?
A. I have worked in the old country, but not on the same work. In Birmingham I worked in Gillott's pen manufactory.
Q. (Senator ALLISON.) Do you know the wages paid in England for work similar to that which you do here?
A. Yes; the pay over there is 6 shillings a week for the same work on the flax machine. Here we get $7 in place of 6 shillings.
Q. Were you able to live as well on what you received there?
A. No, indeed. You can exist on 6s. a week, but you can not live on it, because it is not living. We survive, that is all. It is the custom of the country. But of course you do not get any chance of becoming any better.

That is very significant, and very well said by a plain working woman in the mill.

Q. Do you support anyone beside yourself?
A. I have my mother to take care of. I help to take care of her. My sister works in the same mill, and with her help we keep home.
Q. Have you been able to save anything?
A. Yes; I have been able to save since I have been in this business, and we have built a house with the money we have got. But with another reduction, of course, we could not save. We saved up $1,000 between us and we paid that much on the house we built.
Q. Do you live in the house you built?
A. Yes; we live in our own house.

Mrs. Agnes Pohlman, of Fitchburg, Mass., testified next:

Q. Mrs. Pohlman, what do you do and where are you from?
A. I am a cotton-weaver from Fitchburg, Mass., but I do not work there just now, because the mills are shut down; they have had a very hard time there since last summer—lots of suffering, with no work. If the mill is shut down, all the business is shut down, everything is down. So we had very hard times since last summer, and we had lots of poor to help. It is just as bad there now. I could not get work, and that is the reason I am not working now.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Is anyone dependent upon you?
A. Yes; my boy. He goes to school. I am able to take care of him when I get work.
Q. Are you from Germany?
A. Yes; I was born in Germany. I did not work very much there, because I was very young when I came from there.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) What about the manner of living there and here?
A. I know we could not live there as we live here, and if I had to go there and work I would not do it, because we can live higher here. I wish we could soon have our old good times again, so that people could get work and live like they used to do. There are a lot of women out of work in our place.

Miss Hannah E. Ryan, of New Bedford, Mass., a cotton-spinner, testified as follows:

Q. Miss Ryan, tell the Senators about your work.
A. I am a spinner in the New Bedford Cotton Manufacturers' Company. I have worked there thirteen years.
Q. Were you born in this country?
A. Was born in New Bedford.
Q. What are your wages?
A. My wages now are $5.50 a week. Two years ago I got over $6, but we were cut down in October, and they now speak of another cut down if the Wilson bill passes. If we do not kill the Wilson bill, it will kill us. The girls in the mill know if the bill passes we will be reduced again. We can not live on less than $5 a week.
Q. Have you anyone to support?
A. Yes; I have my mother and brother and sister to support. My brother works part of the time, but work is slack. In July it started with work for four days in the week.

Miss Minnie Spearin, of Manville, R. I., worked by the week as an inspector of fine muslins.

Q. What wages do you make?
A. I make the average wages. I had formerly $6.42 per week; now I make $5.92.
Q. Has there been a cut down in the mill where you work?
A. The wages were cut down last fall 10 per cent. The works have not kept on full time since. Last April there was a strike among the spinners, and they have never done so well since. We were raised 10 per cent two years ago this April and cut down last fall. I do not know the cause of the cut down.
Q. Are you supporting anyone besides yourself?
A. I support myself. I am not helping anyone.

Miss Emily S. Young, of Providence, R. I., was examined:

Q. What is your work, Miss Young?
A. I am shipping clerk for the manufacturing jewelers, Potter & Buffington, Providence. I have worked there sixteen years, not in that department, but for that firm. My work is by the day or week.
Q. What do you receive per week?
A. I receive $10 a week.
Q. Is your business good at the present time?
A. In all the years that I have worked there I have not known them to work so short hours as they are working now; never. Of course, now and then a day or job work, but the shop seems to be almost closed.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Could you estimate the reduction?
A. At least 50 per cent from now and two years ago.

Q. Miss Young, are you dependent on yourself for support?
A. Yes, I am dependent on myself for support; my sister and I together support ourselves.

Miss Mary J. Ryan, of Woonsocket, R. I., stated that she had worked as a weaver twenty-three years for the Social Manufacturing Company:

Q. What has been your average wages?
A. I averaged $10 a week until September, 1893. In October, $9 a week—$1.50 a day.
Q. Why did your wages fall from $10 to $9?
A. The depression in business, owing to the tariff question, caused the works to be stopped for two weeks, and for four months following the work was slack. They stopped last October. Then they ran on full time, but had a scarcity of work.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Explain what you mean by that.
A. I mean that you can run four, or five, or six looms, but if you have only two or three looms, you will be there and your time will be taken up, but you will not earn so much.
Q. Do you know why the work was slack during the time you have mentioned?
A. I was never told why the work was slack, but I learned through the press.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Have you been able to save anything from your wages?
A. Yes; I have been able to save something in these years, but I have not saved anything for nine months. If this Wilson bill goes into effect, we suppose our wages are to be reduced.
Q. Do you support anyone beside yourself?
A. There is no one dependent on me alone. Two sisters and myself work together in the mill; we all work together, and have everything that is required, with comfort. We work together in the mill, and all come together in the home.

Miss Edith Wolstencroft, of Taunton, Mass., works for the Whittenton Company as a weaver of ginghams.

Q. What wages can you make?
A. I can make $8 on the average a week.
Q. Have you ever worked in any other country?
A. I was born in England. I worked in England. I worked on velvets at home at Oldham. I made from 16 to 18 shillings a week. I had two looms. I work two hours more now a week than I did at home. Fifty-eight hours now, fifty-six over there.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) What is the difference in the cost of living here and in England?
A. I think some things are cheaper at home and some more expensive. The clothing is a good deal heavier at home than it is here. The climate is so much different. It is damp, heavy, foggy weather there; of course it is clearer here.
Q. (Senator ALLISON.) How about the rent?
A. We have a tenement, four rooms for two, and pay $7 a month. We had the same number of rooms in the old country, but it was not as comfortable: we paid 5 shillings a week at home, that is $1.25 a week. We had not the same conveniences at home as we have here.
Q. (Senator ALLISON.) Who do you support beside yourself?
A. I have my mother to keep. We are able to get on pretty well and keep house. I get on better in this country. I could not keep my mother at home. It is better living here; I would not go back again and work there.

Mrs. Martha Haworth, of New Bedford, Mass., a weaver, has been employed for five years in a cotton mill.

Q. What wages can you make?
A. I now average about $8.50; I made $10 and $11 in good times. It is not short time; it is short pay.
Q. Have you anyone to care for but yourself?
A. I have one little girl dependent on me for support. She is 9 years old; she is in school. I keep house with the little girl.

Mrs. Elizabeth Tyler, of Boston, Mass, a carpet-weaver, born in England, has worked twenty-one years for the Roxbury Carpet Mills.

Q. What wages do you get?
A. I average my wages for 1892 and 1893 up to the last of August at $8 and some odd cents. Since that time the average pay, up to the present time, has been about $3.50; I formerly made something over $8 a week. I work by the piece.
Q. What was the cause of this difference?
A. The mill has been closed down twice; the first time six weeks, the last time four. There was a 10 per cent reduction on the 9th of October.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) Have you always worked in this country?
A. I was born in England. I worked there for the John Bright's concern.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) How do wages paid there compare with wages paid here?
A. They paid a penny a yard, which would be equal to 2 cents; whereas our former price here was 3½ cents for weaving a yard. It is now 10 per cent less.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH.) What do you know about the conditions of living in the two countries?
A. We could not live in this country on the wages paid in England. I have conversed with several that have come from England, and have worked there, and they are unanimous in saying that they do not want to go back to the old country to work. It costs a girl $5 a week for board and lodging, and then there are the incidental expenses. When we have work here we can save a little; we can try and have a little laid by for the future. If they want to ruin this country let them pass a free-trade bill. If the protection and the tariff are taken off the carpet industry, I say carpet industry, because I know more about that industry than any other, the manufacturer here will not be able to compete with the foreign manufacturer, and wages, of course, will have to come down; it will be impossible for the people in Boston to live on the wages that will be paid; they can not do it; their living is too high. We want to do all we can to defeat the Wilson bill.

Miss Margaret Wright, of Boston, Mass., a carpet setter, has worked twenty years for the Roxbury Carpet Works.

Q. Please explain your work?
A. I make the patterns such as are in the carpet on this floor. Every day I learn some new pattern as a general thing. It is very difficult, and brain work. I have got to have them very perfect. If I do not, I have got to pull it back and do it over. I get no pay for that. If there is one thread out of place, I am called to the finishing room and sometimes fined 50 cents, which does not occur often. In all the twenty years I have been fined only twice. It is very nice work, and I can earn very good pay. Up to within a year or two ago, i. e., 1892, I could earn $2 a day and more. I call the average $2 a day. I worked very hard. I worked harder than the average run of girls. There are a few who can earn that pay regularly. Two girls work together on what are called frames; twenty-three lines underneath and twenty-three above. It is Brussels tapestry I work at. I form these flowers that are on the pattern. It is something that can hardly be made plain to you unless you see it. I work with both hands all the time, setting the patterns. My eyes have got to be on them. If I take them off and let my hands stay still, I do not earn any money; so I have to work very hard.
Q. Have you had steady work?
A. We shut down from last August to the last of October, going back to 10 per cent reduction. If this Wilson bill goes into effect it means further reduction for us and it means not steady work, which we have not had since last April.
Q. Where do you live, Miss Wright?
A. I live about 4 miles out from the works. I have got to take the steam cars and then the electric cars. It costs 22 cents in the winter and 16 cents in the summer. I live at home. I am one of the fortunate ones that has no one dependent upon me.
Q. (Senator ALDRICH). Are you a native of this country?
A. I am not a native of this country. I was born in Scotland. I never worked in Scotland. I was nothing but a very little girl when I came to Boston. I was left to amuse myself in the daytime, and I remember wondering where all the girls came from at night. In Scotland there is a feeling against factory girls and mill hands. If I had lived there I think I never should have worked in a mill. It is different here; and I told my father that I did not know but what I would like to get work.

He said: "Perhaps you would like to get a job at dressmaking," He took me visiting and I met a young lady who worked in the setting room and I asked her to get me work. The remark I made to my father was: "I do not care if I do work in a factory, because nobody knows me here;" but I have never regretted that I went to work in a factory. A lady is a lady anywhere here, whether her pocketbook is full or not; it is not the same on the other side; you have got to have money, and your people have to have a high standing in society before you can get into it.

I do not only speak for myself, but for all the girls who work in the department with me. I happen to be the fortunate one who was chosen by the girls in my department to come here. No one of the company had anything to do with it. I think if this bill goes into effect it will lower our wages and bring us to the standard of old-country people. It is degrading the working people. In the department with me there are 84 girls; a great many with invalid mothers, brothers, and sisters, all dependent upon them. I can say that in Roxbury in September, and especially during November and December, the suffering was something terrible. There are some seven or eight hundred people dependent on that Roxbury mill; not only the people who work there, but also the people who keep stores. We hope the bill will not pass.

I am sorry to have detained you; but I desired to print this interesting evidence, that I may give it to some of those who, like the Senator from South Dakota, know nothing about New England industries.

Mr. President, only a few words more. We are plunging into a great industrial revolution, and Heaven only knows where we shall come out. I am perfectly well aware that what is gained by free traders in this bill is not all that they intend to have.

Notice has been served upon us repeatedly that this country is to move on in the direction of buying where you can buy cheapest. We are engaged this very moment, probably, in destroying an industry of the very greatest importance, deemed essential to national comfort and success by every sensible economist who ever wrote. I refer to the great wool-producing interest. We are in danger of greatly crippling and in some branches destroying another enormous interest, the woolen manufacture. We are in danger of checking the growth of sugar producing—an industry that promises an immeasurable benefit. We are threatening great injuries to iron, steel, silk, and agricultural interests. In my judgment, the general course we are probably to take is against the dictates of sound common sense and sure to involve us in years of industrial depression and reorganization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. DOLPH. Let it be read.

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to make one or two slight changes in in the phraseology of the amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I suggest, if we are to have a vote on this important amendment, that we ought to have a quorum here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut suggests the want of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Faulkner,	Lindsay,	Quay,
Allen,	Frye,	McLaurin,	Ransom
Allison,	Gallinger,	McMillan,	Roach,
Bate,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Berry,	Gray,	Martin,	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Hansbrough,	Mills,	Smith,
Brice,	Harris,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Carey,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chandler,	Higgins,	Pasco,	Turple,
Cockrell,	Hill,	Patton,	Vest,
Coke,	Hoar,	Peffer,	Vilas,
Daniel,	Hunton,	Perkins,	Voorhees,
Davis,	Jarvis,	Platt,	Walsh,
Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Power,	White.
Dubois,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. PEFFER. I desire to make a slight modification in my amendment. First, on page 3, line 61, there is a proviso:

Provided, That skirted wools as now imported are hereby excepted.

I wish to strike out that proviso.

Then, on page 4, line 80, after the word "be," I wish to strike out "six" and insert "five;" and in line 81, after the word "class," to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" so as to make the clause read:

The duty upon all wools and hair of the first class shall be 5 cents per pound, and upon all wools or hair of the second class 6 cents per pound.

In line 84, I wish to strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so that the clause will read:

On wools of the third class and on camel's hair of the third class, the value whereof shall be 10 cents or less per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 15 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The suggested modifications of the amendment will be made.

Mr. PEFFER. The amendment is pretty long and has once been read. I think a very brief explanation of it will be sufficient without the formal reading of the amendment again.

It is simply a reprint of the present law, so far as wool unmanufactured is concerned, with the exception that where in the present law a duty of 11 cents a pound is levied upon wool of the first class my amendment proposes to levy a duty of 5 cents, and where the present law levies a duty of 12 cents a pound upon wool of the second class my amendment proposes 6 cents, reducing the duties of the present law 50 per cent.

Then, as to the third-class wool, the present law makes a dividing line at 13 cents a pound. On wool of the value of 13 cents a pound and less the duty is 32 per cent ad valorem. My amendment proposes 15 per cent on wool of the third class above 13 cents in value; the present law imposes a duty of 50 per cent and I put it at 25 per cent. But I have changed the 13-cents standard to 10 cents, so as to reduce the value. I have stated the entire change from the present law, with the exception that the present law provides that skirted wool shall be excepted and that is stricken out, so that there will be no exception.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, not having occupied unduly the attention of the Senate, I think I may be indulged for a few minutes, representing in part as I do a State that in proportion to its population will be more seriously injured by free wool than any other State in the Union where sheep husbandry is conducted.

In our early years in the State of Vermont and in many other States there was nothing grown but native sheep, and almost every man who had a farm had a small flock of sheep, from thirty to fifty, and sometimes a hundred, enough at least to produce the wool that could be consumed in manufacture in their own families. There was also a spinning wheel and loom in every house, and a carding machine and fulling mill in almost every town. Adam delved and Eve spun, and thus all domestic wants of woolens were supplied.

Under the Administration of Thomas Jefferson, William Jarvis, a distinguished Democrat of Vermont, was sent as consul to Spain. Upon his return home at the end of his service there he brought back a large flock of merino sheep. Those sheep were kept by him on a magnificent farm on the Connecticut River and were bred from year to year and distributed, not only through Vermont, but through nearly all of the Northern and Northwestern States, and from that stock there grew up what were called the improved Vermont merino sheep. The native sheep only yielded from 2½ to 3 pounds per fleece, while this improved stock yielded more than double that amount, and where formerly a sheep when clipped produced only 3 pounds or less, one that would produce 6 or 7 or 8 pounds was obtained.

In that way it became profitable to continue sheep husbandry in Vermont in larger flocks, and in many other Northern States the farmers increased their flocks largely, so that instead of manufacturing all their wool at home they raised it for sale, sold it for cash in the spring of the year, and bought their manufactures. The encouragement that was given them by the tariff of 1816 and 1828 was entirely in harmony with the Democratic practice, with Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe, and with such Vermont Democrats as Consul Jarvis.

In 1818, I believe, the journey of Monroe took place through the country and through our State of Vermont. We then, in the town where I lived, had a manufactory of copperas. President Monroe came about 25 miles out of his way to see that manufactory, where there were not over fifty men, perhaps, then employed. Yet he paid so much attention to an establishment of that sort that he went out of his way and visited the town, and a very large crowd of people, I remember as a boy of about 8 years of age, assembled to greet him on that occasion; and they were told, as everybody was told at that time, that there was not a thread of clothing on the back of the President that was not of American manufacture. So wedded was he to the system of tariff protection that he not only recommended it in his messages, but in practice personally adopted it.

Now, Mr. President, let me say a word here in passing, to our friends upon the other side. They think that if they could be rid of a few men among their associates to whom they have been compelled to listen, and for whom to make changes in their bill, they could obtain Democratic successors hereafter who would make a bill for revenue only. Let me say, however, that the interests in Louisiana, Alabama, Tennessee, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia, New York, and Ohio will continue forever, will grow in magnitude and they will be represented here, whether by Democrats or Republicans, by persons who will look out for their proper protection. Iron, coal, sugar, and marble will not vanish, nor will even cuffs and collars.

I wish to refer Senators to the act of 1846, known as the Robert J. Walker tariff act, an act that Democrats always present as their model tariff act. Let them now contrast it with the proposed act and they will hardly find a line that does not swear against the present bill, brought here with no one acknowledging its paternity; but I believe we have a special committee investigating to find out who was its father.

If you look into the first paragraph of the tariff act of 1846 you will find that it was passed on July 30, and it was not to take effect until the 1st of the next December. If you will look at the present bill it will be seen that it is to take effect on the 30th of June, or perhaps before it passes the Senate. Probably that will be changed so as to make it operative the day after its passage. That is one important distinction. When we come to the article of wool you will find that they put in the Democratic tariff of 1846, 30 per cent duty on wool. That was among the highest duties they proposed except upon a few luxuries that were placed at 100 per cent, and some at 40 per cent.

You will find in the first schedule of the act that they imposed a duty upon brandy and other spirits of grain of 100 per cent, and yet it is only a few days ago that this committee, after proposing a larger internal-revenue duty upon our spirits from grain, proposed to reduce the tariff duty on foreign brandy from $2.50 a gallon to $1.80 a gallon, and the same reduction on spirituous liquors, absynthe, maraschino, ratafia, and so on.

The South and Robert J. Walker and all were quite content with 30 per cent on sugar. Now, in a bill nominally to reduce taxation, it is proposed to pay some 40 or 50 or 60 per cent upon sugar which is now free, or 40 per cent ad valorem, and then one-eighth of a cent more in behalf of the refined sugar and more still if imported from where it bears a bounty.

On iron, such as cotton ties and all manufactures of iron, a duty of 30 per cent was proposed by the act of 1846, and yet this bill proposes that cotton ties shall be free. On rice and paddy a duty of 30 per cent only was asked for then by Walker, and yet under this bill it is proposed that they shall have 83 per cent, although I believe that is to be reduced. There was a duty also imposed in the Walker bill upon wheat and wheat flour, corn and cornmeal, oats and oatmeal, barley, and potatoes; and it was not proposed that if any other country should take their duties off, these products should also be permitted to come in free from any such country. The Walker tariff also imposed a duty upon boards, shingles, timber hewn and sawed, pine and spruce clapboards, and yet this bill proposes to make them all free. I may add that even copperas, the manufacture which President Monroe went so many miles out of his way to see, they propose to make free.

It will be seen also that in the Walker bill it was provided in relation to some articles which were to be admitted free of duty—

That this exemption shall not be construed to include machinery or other articles imported for use in any manufacturing establishments or for sale

While that has been copied from the Walker tariff, or other tariffs, yet the present bill proposes that "plows, tooth and disk harrows, harvesters, reapers, agricultural drills, and planters, mowers, horserakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, and cotton gins" may be imported free from any other country where they do not impose a duty against us upon the same article. Of course the only two countries that would manufacture them and would desire free trade with us would be Canada and Great Britain. Such machines have parts that wear out, or by accident may be broken. To send abroad for repairs might prove costly and inconvenient.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], day before yesterday, who we all know is a strong man in argument, attempted instead of argument to be as funny as he could. I did not, however, see the buttons burst off of anybody else but himself when he shook his sides. He proposed a conundrum to the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] as to whether he would accept a tariff which put a duty on wool without putting any duty upon woolens.

Of course the ingenious Senator from Mississippi unders'ood very well what he was talking about. He is a free trader, and was digging a pit for the Senator from Montana. He saw at once that if he could impose a duty upon wool and leave manufactures without a sufficient or a compensatory duty, that no wool raised here could then find a market in this country, but it would all come in the shape of manufactures, and the Senator from Mississippi was killing two birds with one stone. By putting a duty on wool he could place it out of the reach of manufacturers and have our markets open to foreign manufactures. In the tariff of 1883, although wools were protected, yet the Supreme Court decided that worsted goods were not made of wool, and, therefore, a large amount of wool was imported in worsted goods. This error was subsequently corrected, and wool is not less wool, though combed.

Mr. President, I did not intend to occupy much time on this subject. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], in his opening speech, I think, said that if he believed that taking the tariff off of wool would reduce its price he would not be in favor of it. When that Senator a year or two hence, at his own home in Indiana, finds that over 500,000 of the sheep that formerly were herded in his State have vanished, it will hardly do for the chairman of the Finance Committee to say that he did not know his bill was loaded.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I shall take the time of the Senate for but a few minutes. I suppose it is entirely useless for anyone to speak any longer upon this question, as I think there is a disposition on the part of both sides of the Chamber to vote. But I can scarcely believe that the majority in this Chamber really intend to put wool upon the free list. I still hope that when the time for voting comes, and it is now about here, if they, the Senators on the other side, have not already determined to put a duty upon wool, will reconsider the matter and come to the conclusion that it is only fair that that great production of the farmers of this country should have some little protection.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has said that his State is very much interested in this production, more perhaps than the people of any other State in proportion to population. I will say that the State which I have the honor in part to represent is considerably interested in sheep and wool growing. Illinois has 1,198,175 sheep, producing 7,189,050 pounds of wool. I do not rise, however, to speak merely because my State is interested in this matter, but because I think it is only fair to the sheep and wool interest, if we are going to make a bill with any protection in it at all, that they should have their share.

As has been often said, here is a bill which provides for a duty on iron. It provides for a duty on coal, and as has been shown here that it provides for reasonable duties on cotton manufactures. There is some degree of protection in the bill in the duty upon woolen goods.

Mr. FRYE. There is mighty little protection in it.

Mr. CULLOM. There is not very much. As the Senator from Maine says, there is mighty little protection, but there is some, and it seems to me that as the bill stands the majority of the Senate have singled out wool and put it upon the free list for the purpose of having the country believe that they are making a free-trade bill all the way through. If they are not trying to do that they certainly can not believe that the country will feel that they are treating the wool interest as fairly as they do other articles and other interests.

When I come to look over the history of the tariff in relation to wool, I find that substantially all the time since 1816 there has been a tariff upon wool. Sometimes it has not been very large, but the record shows that nearly all the time there has been a duty on wool. Before 1816 it would seem from history that wool was free. The reason why it was free is that in the early period in our history we were exporting what little wool was produced here instead of importing wool.

In other words, we had more wool than our people required for their own use, or it was exported to be manufactured in Great Britain. But in 1816, immediately after the war of 1812, the policy was changed, and the tariff on wool was fixed at 15 per cent. In 1824 it was 15 per cent; in 1828 it was 4 cents a pound and 40 per cent ad valorem; in 1830 it was 4 cents a pound and 45 per cent ad valorem; in 1832 cheaper wool, not exceeding 8 cents a pound in value, was free, and on wool exceeding 8 cents a pound the duty was 4 cents per pound.

So the record shows that the policy of the Government from 1816 down to the present time has been to maintain a tariff upon wool, and sometimes a very substantial protective tariff. In view of this history I am unwilling to believe, until this subject is disposed of, that it is the determination of the Senators in charge of the bill and the majority in the Senate to allow raw wool to be placed upon the free list.

I appeal to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], who is, I think, the only Senator in charge of the bill now present. I appeal to him in the interest of the farmers of Missouri and of the country to consent to a small duty upon raw wool, if he is not willing to give a fair one.

Mr. VEST. If it does not interrupt my friend from Illinois, I should like to ask him if he thinks that the increase of the duty on raw wool would increase the price?

Mr. CULLOM. It certainly would not reduce the price, and I hope that it would increase it. It is true the price of wool is going down now, as everything else has been going down in the last year. I will not undertake to give the reason why.

Mr. VEST. In 1883, as the debates show, the leaders of the Republican party contended that the increase of the duty on raw wool would necessarily decrease the price; that that was the logical and inevitable result of protection; that as you increase the duty upon wool, as a matter of course you decrease the price of it, and that therefore it gave to the manufacturers their raw material cheaper.

I remember distinctly that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] made that argument, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who is present here now, stated that the effect of the high duty of 1867 had been to reduce the price of wool. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] made the same argument. The records can be produced, if there is any question about it. So I wish to know whether the Republican party has changed its ground on that question. When my friend from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] appeals to me personally in the interest of the woolgrowers of Missouri to put a duty on raw wool, then the other side must take away the argument which they made in 1883, that the effect of the increase of the duty on raw wool is to decrease the price. That has been the effect, for the price has fallen ever since 1883, when the duties on raw wool were increased.

Mr. CULLOM. I can scarcely understand the argument that the Senator from Missouri attempts to make when he undertakes to say that protection to American wool and American sheep husbandry is likely to reduce the price of the product protected. Suppose we had a protective tariff that was prohibitory of the introduction of wool into this country, would the Senator from Missouri argue that it would reduce the price of wool in America?

Mr. VEST. I am merely giving the protection argument that the other side made in 1883.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator whether, if we had a prohibitory tariff on wool it would reduce the price of wool and the price of sheep in the United States. The Senator knows very well that it would not. I do not ask for a prohibitory duty, but I wish to have a duty which will give some protection to this industry as well as to the other industries of the country. I am very certain that such a policy would not result in the reduction of the price of wool or the price of sheep.

The statistics show that when we have had a good protective tariff on sheep and wool the flocks of sheep increased all over the country, and when the duty on sheep and wool was reduced the flocks have disappeared from the country.

I have here a letter upon this question, of which I should like to read a portion. It is from a gentleman in Chicago, dealing in wool:

> The grower unable to hold his wool can not do it, and the great bulk of wool in Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Idaho, Arizona, and Texas is being consigned to this and Eastern markets on an advance of 3 to 5 cents a pound, which is all the commission houses feel safe in advancing, and few of the growers have reason to believe they will receive anything further than their advances, and the inclosed telegram shows the conditions on which some will consign their wool.
> Many of the large growers in the States above named last winter mortgaged their present clip of wool to obtain the means to carry their flocks through, and now receiving even less for their clip than for the clip of 1893, and no protection given to wool, next fall will see such a slaughter of sheep as was never before seen in this country, and this great woolgrowing industry receive a blow from which it will not recover for many a year if ever, but if a small duty can be put on wool, say 5 cents, it would prevent a further decline, set the current the other way, help to ascertain and establish values, and, more than all, give a little aid and comfort to the now disheartened and discouraged grower by assuring him that his rights and his interests will not be unprotected, even if he be without organized, influential, and special representation in the halls of legislation; and the man or men who shall be instrumental in securing protection for that class will not be forgotten in the days that are surely coming.

This letter comes from a gentleman who is buying wool and knows what the sentiment of the farmers is on the subject. I think he has a very definite idea of what will be the result upon the wool industry of the country if wool goes upon the free list.

Now, my friend from Missouri said the other day, with a good deal of confidence and with a flourish of his hand: "I am for the farmer." So am I. I think one way to be "for the farmer" in this instance is to protect one of the industries of the agriculturists of the country and give them the same opportunity to conduct their business as is given to others, the products of whose industry are upon the protected list by the consent of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I do not believe it is protection to put a duty upon raw wool.

Mr. CULLOM. Nor does the Senator from Missouri believe that a duty on wheat is a protection to wheat grown in this country.

Mr. VEST. No; I do not.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator does not believe that a duty on corn will be any protection to corn.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator from Illinois will convince me, or even make a plausible argument showing that a protective duty on wheat helps the American wheat-grower, when we export a hundred million bushels and import so small a quantity, I shall be glad to vote for such a duty.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Missouri make the same promise as to wool?

Mr. VEST. As to wool, I will state that the cases are so entirely dissimilar that I should hate to make a promise until I have heard the argument and the conclusions of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will submit my views later on.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Missouri says that if I will convince him that a protective duty on wheat would do the wheat-grower any good, he would vote for such a duty. I have no idea that I can convince him or that any other man on earth could accomplish so great a feat.

The Senator in one argument says he is for the farmer, and the next thing he does is to put wheat and corn and other articles which the farmer raises on the free list. When we appeal to him to protect the farmer he says, "Oh, protection to the farmer is a mere myth; it amounts to nothing." If it amounts to nothing, why does the Senator from Missouri insist upon taking such duties out of the bill? Let us see whether it will amount to anything in the condition of the country as it exists to-day.

Mr. President, I do not care to take up the time of the Senate any longer on this subject. I rose principally to appeal to the Senator from Missouri to know whether he will not consent, because apparently we can not do anything unless the Senator does consent, to a duty, a small duty of 5 cents a pound, or some duty, upon wool along with the other articles that he has kindly consented to protect.

The time has gone by when the Senator can insist upon any particular line of policy upon this question, because everybody knows, he as well as the rest, that there is no particular line of public policy which has been carried out so far by the managers of the bill on the question of protection. We have had free trade; we have had a little protection; we have had revenue reform; we have had good protection; and all these ideas and policies are to be incorporated in the provisions of the bill. Now, let us have some kind of protection upon wool, and then we will go on with the bill as rapidly as is consistent with fair discussion.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. PEFFER. Does the Senator from Colorado say he offers a substitute?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; I propose to substitute the McKinley rates.

Mr. PEFFER. Perhaps it would be better to put it in the form of an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. A substitute is the same thing.

Mr. TELLER. It is the same thing. I understand the Senator from Kansas has adopted in his amendment the classification of wool which is in the McKinley act, but the rates are entirely different.

Mr. PEFFER. There is a proposed reduction of about 50 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. I think it will save a little time to offer my amendment, which contains the McKinley rates with the McKinley classification. If it is voted down, then we can take the vote on the Senator's amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] will be stated.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose by unanimous consent the reading of the amendment might be dispensed with, as everyone understands it. Let the question be put on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TELLER. Let the question be put on the amendment. I repeat that it is simply the McKinley classification and the McKinley rates.

Mr. HOAR. I do not desire to take up time, but I think if the amendment is acted upon without reading it will establish a precedent which might be troublesome at some time. It will not take more than three or four minutes to read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. It will not take long. Let it be read.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the amendment of Mr. PEFFER and insert in lieu thereof:

All wools, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be divided, for the purpose of fixing the duties to be charged thereon, into the three following classes:

Class 1, that is to say, Merino, mestiza, metz, or metis wools, or other wools of Merino blood, immediate or remote, Down clothing wools, and wools of like character with any of the preceding, including such as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Buenos Ayres, New Zealand, Australia, Cape of Good Hope, Russia, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, and also including all wools not hereinafter described or designated in classes 2 and 3.

Class 2, that is to say, Leicester, Cotswold, Linconshire, Down combing wools, Canada long wools, or other like combing wools of English blood, and usually known by the terms herein used, and also hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals.

Class 3, that is to say, Donskoi, native South American, Cordova, Valparaiso, native Smyrna, Russian camels' hair, and including all such wools of like character as have been heretofore usually imported into the United States from Turkey, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and elsewhere, excepting improved wools hereinafter provided for.

The standard samples of all wools which are now or may be hereafter deposited in the principal custom-houses of the United States, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be the standards for the classification of wools under this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the authority to renew these standards and to make such additions to them from time to time as may be required, and he shall cause to be deposited like standards in other custom-houses of the United States when they may be needed.

Whenever wools of class three shall have been improved by the admixture of Merino or English blood from their present character, as represented by the standard samples now or hereafter to be deposited in the principal custom-houses of the United States, such improved wools shall be classified for duty either as class 1 or as class 2, as the case may be.

The duty on wools of the first class which shall be imported washed shall be twice the amount of the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed; and the duty on wools of the first and second classes which shall be imported scoured shall be three times the duty to which they would be subjected if imported unwashed.

Unwashed wool shall be considered such as shall have been shorn from the sheep without any cleansing; that is, in their natural condition. Washed wools shall be considered such as have been washed with water on the sheep's back. Wool washed in any other manner than on the sheep's back shall be considered as scoured wool.

The duty upon wool of the sheep or hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals which shall be imported in any other than ordinary condition, or which shall be changed in its character or condition for the purpose of evading the duty, or which shall be reduced in value by the admixture of dirt, or any other foreign substance, or which has been sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, shall be twice the duty to which it would be otherwise subject. Wools on which a duty is assessed amounting to three times or more than that which would be assessed if said wool was imported unwashed, such duty shall not be doubled on account of its being sorted. If wools, the quantity and value to be ascertained under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

On noils, shoddy, top waste, slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, yarn waste, garnetted waste, and all other wastes composed wholly or in part of wool, the duty shall be 30 cents per pound.

On woolen rags, mungo, and flocks, the duty shall be 10 cents per pound.

Wools and hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, in the form of roping, roving, or tops, and all wool and hair which have been advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, not specially provided for in this act, shall be subject to the same duties as are imposed upon manufactures of wool not specially provided for in this act.

Mr. HARRIS. Question!

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. TELLER and Mr. MILLS called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). By arrangement with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will stand paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. I vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. RANSOM. Has the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], and I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] that we transfer pairs, so that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will stand paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and we may vote.

Mr. RANSOM. That is agreeable to me. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY. I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], who is detained at home by sickness. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO. I was requested to state that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] is necessarily absent, and that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON].

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the negative). I voted, supposing the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN] was present. I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota and withdraw my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present, and he would vote "yea."

Mr. BRICE. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Colorada [Mr. WOLCOTT]. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I have already announced my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I rise to state that my colleague [Mr. CAMERON], who is necessarily absent, is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. BLANCHARD. My colleague [Mr. CAFFERY] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER]. If my colleague were here he would vote "nay."

Mr. BRICE. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], so that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and I may vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CAREY. I vote "yea."

Mr. DANIEL. I wish to state that I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. POWER (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. POWER. Then I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

Mr. DANIEL. I suggest to the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] that we transfer pairs so that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] will stand paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE].

Mr. POWER. I should be pleased to make the transfer.

Mr. DANIEL. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. POWER. My vote will stand.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 37; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. PEFFER. I wish to say to those Senators who were not present when my amendment was read that it simply proposes to reduce the duties on unmanufactured wool from the rates prescribed in the present law, the McKinley act, 50 per cent.

Mr. POWER. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas. I propose to lower the duties of the McKinley act. It is the McKinley act, with 7 cents in place of 11, and 8 cents in place of 12.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 80 of the amendment it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "seven:" in line 81, to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" in line 83, to strike out "ten" and insert "nine;" in line 84, to strike out "20 per cent ad valorem" and insert "4 cents;" in line 87, to strike out "ten" and insert "nine," and in line 88, to strike out "25 per cent ad valorem" and insert "5 cents;" so as to read:

The duty upon all wools and hair of the first class shall be 7 cents per pound, and upon all wools or hair of the second class 8 cents per pound.

On wools of the third class and on camel's hair of the third class the value whereof shall be 9 cents or less per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 4 cents.

On wools of the third class and on camel's hair of the third class the value whereof shall exceed 9 cents per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 5 cents.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. TELLER and Mr. DOLPH called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). I again transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], so that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] and I may vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY (when Mr. CAMERON'S name was called). I rise to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE (when Mr. GORMAN'S name was called). The senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is detained from the Chamber by illness, has a general pair with me, but for the day the pair has been transferred to the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], giving the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] and myself the right to vote.

Mr. HIGGINS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. The Senator from Maine is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM], and under this arrangement the Senator from North Carolina and I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]. He would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay" on this question.

The roll call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 29, nays 37; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Proctor,
Allison,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Sherman,

Dixon,	McPherson,	Squire,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the modifications I have made in my amendment my be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 61 strike out the following:

Provided, That skirted wools as now imported are hereby excepted.

In line 80 strike out "six" and insert "five;" in line 81 strike out "seven" and insert "six;" and in line 84 strike out "twenty" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

The duty upon all wools and hair of the first class shall be 5 cents per pound, and upon all wools or hair of the second class 6 cents per pound.

On wools of the third class and on camel's hair of the third class the value whereof shall be 10 cents or less per pound, including charges, the duty shall be 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PEFFER. In the top line, on page 5, 25 per cent is to remain. It is a change from the existing law, which is 50 per cent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER].

Mr. PEFFER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRICE (when his name was called). If agreeable to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], I will make the same transfer of pairs, so that the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] will stand paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. I vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I again announce the transfer of my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], so that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] and myself can vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea." While I am on the floor I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If my colleague were present he would vote "yea." I make this announcement for the last time during to-day's session.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I have a general pair, as I have heretofore stated, with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], who is absent, and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCLAURIN. If it is agreeable to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY], I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], so that we can both vote.

Mr. QUAY. The arrangement is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I vote "nay."

Mr. QUAY. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—33.

Aldrich,	Frye,	McMillan,	Proctor,
Allen,	Gallinger,	Manderson,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer an amendment to come in at the head of the schedule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert:

All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, rags and flocks, including all waste, or rags composed wholly or in part of wool, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the pending amendment I ask the indulgence of the Senate for not more than five or ten minutes.

The first recorded attempt to break down the interests of sheep husbandry was when Cain slew his brother Abel, who "was a keeper of sheep." [Laughter.] The motives and purposes which actuated Cain were plainly the same as those which actuate his followers to-day. It was jealousy of a preferred and protected industry. Cain was a "tiller of the ground, and brought of the fruit of the ground an offering unto the Lord." This offering may have been of rice, or cotton, or of sugar—the record does not state. But Abel "brought of the firstlings of his flock, and of the fat thereof, and the Lord had respect unto Abel and to his offering, but unto Cain and his offering he had not respect."

The punishment meted out to Cain fairly foreshadows that which shall be meted out by the people to the promoters of this measure: A mark shall be set upon them, and when the time of retribution comes they will say with Cain, "My punishment is greater than I can bear."

The Holy Writ gives abundant evidence that sheep husbandry was considered from the earliest times a favored industry, and recognized as one of the first importance. Abraham tendered ewe lambs as witnesses of an oath in one of the earliest real-estate transactions on record.

And Abraham set seven ewe lambs of the flock by themselves.

And Abimelech said unto Abraham, what mean these seven ewe lambs which thou hast set by themselves?

And he said, for these seven ewe lambs shalt thou take of my hand, that they may be a witness unto me, that I have digged this well.

Wherefore he called that place Beer-sheba; because there they sware, both of them.

The first successful effort at improvement of the breed of sheep was made by Jacob, and grew out of a bargain with his father-in-law, Laban, and is described in the thirtieth chapter of Genesis. The original color of the fleece is generally believed, with exceptionally a streak of white, to have been a dingy black. Laban stipulated with Jacob that he might have the speckled and ring-streaked of the flock—that is, the few which were in part white—in payment for his services as shepherd.

Laban thought he had made a sharp bargain, but his thrifty son-in-law, Jacob, by his shrewd application of what are now well-understood principles of breeding, largely increased the number of the flock having more or less white wool. His example was doubtless followed by others in selecting for breeding those which had the largest proportion of white, for David likens wool to snow, and Solomon likens the whiteness of the teeth of his mistress to a flock of sheep just come up from the washing.

The shepherd and his calling and his flock are often alluded to in the Holy Writ, and furnish some of its grandest imagery and most beautiful illustrations. Many of those specially favored of the Lord were shepherds, and everywhere that calling is referred to as one of the highest character, plainly recognizing its importance to the welfare and prosperity of the people. Jacob "rolled the stone from the well's mouth and watered the flock of Laban" as the first evidence of his love for Rachel. Saul, when in trouble with the Philistines, said unto Jesse, "Send me David thy son, which is with the sheep."

The fate of those who attack this industry and the flocks of their country is plainly foreshadowed and prophesied in many places:

David said unto Saul, Thy servant kept his father's sheep, and there came a lion, and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock,

And I went out after him, and smote him, and delivered it out of his mouth; and when he arose against me, I caught him by his beard, and smote him and slew him.

Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear; and this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them, seeing he hath defied the armies of the living God.

The same fate, Mr. President, will surely be meted out to the political Philistines of the present day in November, 1894 and 1896. [Laughter.]

The rewards awaiting those who are faithful in sustaining the industries of their country are also foretold:

So will I seek out my sheep, and will deliver them out of all places where they have been scattered in the cloudy and dark day.

And I will bring them out from the people, and gather them from the countries, and will bring them to their own land, and feed them upon the mountains of Israel by the rivers, and in all the inhabited places of the country.

I will feed them in a good pasture, and upon the high mountains of Israel shall their fold be; there shall they lie in a good fold, and in a fat pasture shall they feed upon the mountains of Israel.

I will seek that which was lost, and bring again that which was driven away, and will bind up that which was broken, and will strengthen that which was sick, but I will destroy the fat and the strong; I will feed them with judgment.

As a further evidence of the Divine preference it is written that, "He shall set the sheep on His right hand, but the goats on the left." [Laughter.] The proper application of this sentence to the present situation is so obvious that it need not be stated. [Laughter.]

To establish the connection between the sheep industry of our own country and the flocks of Bible times, I quote from the encyclopædia. Of the Spanish Merino it says: "In modern times it has been brought to the greatest perfection in Spain, though its originals probably formed the flocks of the patriarchs thousands of years ago and have been the stock of all fine-wooled sheep."

The breed was probably brought from the East to Spain by the Moors, as it was known and written of there in the time of Cæsar Augustus.

It is easy to establish our inheritance of the best of the historic flocks of Spain, which had been for centuries jealously fostered and protected by the Government and grandees of that country, and their exportation forbidden by law under penalty of the most severe punishment. The opportunity came as a result of the Napoleonic wars of the Peninsula. It was fortunate for us that we were represented at that time at Madrid by Col. David Humphreys, of Connecticut, a scholar, poet, patriot, soldier, and diplomat, the military aid and friend of Washington, and member of his family several years after the Revolution. And it was equally fortunate that we were represented at Lisbon by William Jarvis, of Vermont, of whom Jefferson spoke as "pre-eminently among the faithful of the public servants."

These far-seeing and patriotic men embraced the opportunity, which except for the convulsions of war might never have occurred, and made large purchases, which they shipped to this country, and with painstaking intelligence distributed to prominent farmers from Maine to Virginia, in many cases by gift.

I will let Consul Jarvis, as he was known in my State during the many years of his useful life, tell the story of these importations by reading brief extracts of a letter dated Weathersfield, Vt., December 22, 1841, and addressed to Henry S. Randall, corresponding secretary of the New York State Agricultural Society, and published in the transactions of that society for that year. In speaking of the Merino breed of sheep, he says:

It was known in Spain in the time of Columella, a writer on agriculture in the reign of Augustus Cæsar. But whether indigenous in that kingdom, or imported into it at an earlier period, is not certainly known; but the latter is the most probable, from their name "Marino," which is the Spanish spelling, and which means beyond sea. The Merino sheep of Spain are of two classes, the trashumantes or traveling sheep, and estantes or stationary sheep.

* * * * * *

The question may be asked, Why are they called traveling sheep? The answer is that they are driven to the flat, level country in October, to be pastured until April, and in April they are driven into the hilly and mountainous districts, to be pastured until October.

* * * * * * *

So highly did the Spaniards value this breed of sheep, that they were prohibited by law from exportation, under penalty of transportation to the mines, or confinement to the galleys for life.

* * * * * * * *

The first that were sent to this country was in 1802, by Chancellor Livingston, of New York, then minister to France, who obtained a buck and two ewes from the Rambouillet flock; and the same year the Hon. David Humphreys, who had been minister to Spain, got out 200 through Portugal, which were sent to Connecticut, and placed on his farm near New Haven. The value of this useful animal was not then appreciated in the United States; and those two importations remained unnoticed and almost unknown, until the embargo in 1807, and the nonintercourse of the two subsequent years cut off our accustomed supply of woolen goods from England, and began to call the attention of reflecting men to the necessity of rendering ourselves independent of foreign nations for the supply of those all-essential articles of human comfort, by the establishment of woolen manufactures among ourselves.

This independence it is now proposed to surrender to England.

When the second irruption of the French armies into Spain in the winter of 1809 drove the Spanish Junto from Madrid to Badajos, the Junto was without money and without resources.

* * * * * * *

No alternative was therefore left them other than to sell the four flocks of Merinos which had been confiscated with the other property of four grandees who had joined France, with license to transport them out of Spain.

* * * * * * * *

Sir Charles Stewart, the British minister, purchased the Negretti flock, of which I selected a small part, and the remainder he sent to England. I also purchased about 1,300 Aqueirres, and selected about 200 from the Montarcos. I likewise purchased in Spain 200 of the Escurial flock from the mayoral, which were the only Escurials ever sent to this country. I shipped in 1809 and in 1810 about 3,850 to this country of the aforementioned flocks, being all which I purchased in Spain, and which were distributed as follows: About 1,500 to New York; 1,000 to Boston and Newburyport, including 350 which I sent to be reserved for me; the remainder were sent to Philadelphia, Baltimore, Alexandria, Norfolk, and Richmond, and a small number to Wiscasset, Portland, and Portsmouth, as I was disposed to distribute those valuable animals to every State which would be likely to profit by the acquisition. Those I reserved for myself were composed of about half Paulars, a quarter Aqueirres, and the other fourth of Escurials, Negrettis, and Montarcos, which I subsequently mixed together.

* * * * * * * * *

All those sheep were Leonesa, trashumantes, and were of the prime flocks of Spain.

* * * * * * * * *

Twenty-five years' experience satisfies me that the wool of the Spanish Merino has rather improved. About six years ago I compared my Merino wool with fifteen or twenty samples of the Paular flock that had been sent me from Spain when I purchased; and eight or ten judges who examined the two gave a decided preference to that taken from the backs of my sheep. Mr. James Shepherd, when he carried on the factory at Northampton, and who purchased my Merino wool for several years, told me that the superfine broadcloths made from my wool handled softer than did those from the best imported Spanish wool he could purchase. When the Merino has been bred with attention and care the wool has not deteriorated in any other country than England, and the deterioration there has unquestionably been owing to the uncommon humidity of that climate.

From this beginning have come the wonderful results which have added hundreds of millions of wealth to this country, besides giving us the great national advantages which result from our independence of other countries for the supply of this great staple.

While wool-raising has ceased in my State to be as profitable as formerly, the breeding of a very high class of Merino sheep is still a very important branch of agricultural production.

The breeders of Vermont, and doubtless those of other States, annually visit and exhibit their sheep at the fairs in the wool-raising regions of Australia and South America and take the leading premiums in those countries. As a result of the superiority of their sheep they have made large sales abroad. Buyers from those countries come here every season to make their purchases. How much our success in breeding has done to increase the average weight of fine wool fleeces may be understood from the fact that within fifty years the average in the United States has increased threefold, and in Australia it has nearly doubled in thirty-five years.

That this result, this great addition to the wealth of the world, is due to American breeders is clear from the fact that they were the first to start upon a scientific and systematic course of improvement of the breed of Spanish Merino sheep, and they still hold a long lead in this direction.

This controlling position has been gained only by more than eighty years of earnest, persistent, and able effort on the part of our leading sheep-breeders, a class of men who have counted among their number many of the most intelligent men of the country.

The American Merino leads the world, and always will, unless we willfully and wickedly surrender the advantages which nature and opportunity and the enterprise of our farmers have given us. I claim that the development and improvement of the Merino sheep by intelligent and scientific breeding is the greatest single achievement of the American farmers. It may be true—I believe it is—that the climate and other conditions necessary for producing the very best Merino sheep are extremely favorable in our Northern States. But despite our natural advantages, we can not hope to continue to be the leading sheep-breeding country of the world if we cease to be also a wool-raising country.

To strike down this industry is not only to bring immediate ruin to the wool-raisers, but also to surrender a great national interest, and, by making the breeding of the best sheep in the world unprofitable, to put it out of our power for generations to come to recuperate and recover our present position in sheep husbandry and woolgrowing, which are of such great national importance.

[Mr. ALDRICH addressed the Senate. See Appendix.]

Mr. POWER. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island whether the trouble does not come very largely from the fact that cotton is largely mixed with wool in the production of blankets and other goods? I had occasion to make some inquiry into the matter in order to ascertain why the reduction in the price of wool at the present time was so great, and I was answered that it was on account of the use of cotton goods. I have a letter here from Mr. Roland P. Marks, in charge of the woolen department of Marshall Field & Co., which explains the situation fully, which I ask permission to read. The letter is as follows:

CHICAGO, December 12, 1893.

DEAR SIR: As suggested in my letter of last week, I give you below certain information asked for, which is to be taken more as facts than as reflecting my own personal views:

The cotton-blanket industry, if I am not mistaken, was started about 1875 or 1876, the goods being first introduced by the Eagle and Phœnix Mills, of Columbus, Ga., being made only in white, 3 to 4 pounds in weight, and costing something like $1.25 or $1.50 per pair.

The sale was exceedingly limited for the first five years, and indeed it was ten years before they began to be used to any perceptible extent, or about 1886.

Since then the growth has been steady, and during the year 1893 we have used 10 per cent more white and colored all-cotton blankets alone than we used in 1886 in all kinds of all-cotton, all-wool and part-cotton white and colored blankets. That is, 10 per cent more pairs blankets; but of course the cost is very much less per pair.

While a cotton blanket can be made as low as 2 pounds to the pair, an all-wool blanket can not be well made under 3½ pounds to the pair in the same size, as wool can not be worked to the same advantage as cotton can.

I consider that the cotton-blanket industry is in the nature of a "fad," though the hard times may have had something to do with it, and it may die out when it is found they really will not take the place of all-wool goods on account of lack of warmth.

In that respect, they are almost valueless, but it can not be denied that they have taken the place and reduced the production of all-wool goods.

It will probably result eventually in there being less all-wool and all-cotton blankets used, and more cotton and wool mixed.

Regarding napped flannels made of all cotton, I find that we have used this year 1,900 cases in various forms, of which there was not a yard made previous to 1890; when they were introduced in a small way during that year, we used probably less than twenty cases, and the growth has been a steady one, and they have taken the place of all-wool flannels, cotton and wool mixed flannels, and all-cotton hard finished shirtings, the sale of which latter has almost disappeared.

There has been a complete revolution in the use of wool.

Years ago there was a very large sale in all-wool plain and twilled flannels, while now the business is scarcely 25 per cent of what it was ten years ago.

The first cause of that decline was found in the use of knit underwear, which could be manufactured cheaper and produce a better garment than when woven and manufactured, but there has been a change also in that kind of underwear, as in all kinds of flannels other than cloths and cassimeres.

While it was once thought all flannels should be all wool, it is now found when mixed with cotton they are much more desirable, wear longer, shrink less, and are quite as warm.

Good cotton mixed with wool is much better than a low grade of all wool, both for service and general appearances.

I believe this is one of the principal reasons why wool has declined.

I shall be glad if any of the above information is of use to you.

Very respectfully,

ROLAND P. MARKS.

Senator T. C. POWER, Washington, D. C.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not rise to prolong this debate, except to call attention briefly to one point which has been several times suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER], who have constantly put the question which has been answered in other ways, and I do not suppose it needs any further answer, whether the effect of a duty is to reduce the price of the article protected or to enhance it. They say, "If the effect of your duty is to reduce the price, how do you benefit the person who is protected?"

It seems to me, Mr. President, that, in considering that proposition, we ought to take the two things together, the question of the comparative prices and the question of the increased production in the country. They can not be separated.

Now, suppose you take the entire woolgrowing industry of this country, secure to it the American market, and thereby double or treble or quadruple the product, it is an advantage to the woolgrowing community even if the price is being constantly lowered.

Take the illustration of a single farmer. We will suppose that he has, as an adjunct to his farm, a small flock of sheep, and he raises wool at a cost of $90, which he sells at $100, thereby making $10. We secure him the market from a neighboring manufactory, and the next year he raises $200 worth instead of $100 worth, having his foreign competitor shut out, and supplying that neighboring mill himself; but on that $200 he makes $15, selling his wool at a smaller price than before, and only makes 7½ per cent above what it cost him, instead of 10 per cent; but by the doubling of his sales he has made $15 at the end of the year, when the year before he had only made $10.

Mr. President, that is the law governing not only woolen manufacturing, but every one of these protected industries, about which this question, which our Democratic friends are so fond of putting, is put, "How do you benefit an American producer by a duty under which his price is constantly being lowered?" You benefit him, at least, by doubling his product, and, whether you take the individual man or the whole aggregate of that kind of production, you benefit the consumer by reducing the price the consumer has to pay for the materials, and you benefit the manufacturer in the end by reducing the price which the manufacturer has to pay.

But you benefit the producer by giving him a market which enables him to double his profit. So the large sale at the small profit is not only more profitable to the man to whom he sells, but it is more profitable to the seller at the small sale than the large one. That seems to me a conclusive answer to the conundrum which our friends are fond of putting to us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN].

Mr. HALE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN] and vote "nay."

Mr. TURPIE (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator has not voted.

Mr. TURPIE. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to offer one further amendment and then I shall be done, so far as I am concerned, with this subject-matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert as paragraph 277½, the following:

All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste, rags, and flocks, including all waste, or rags composed wholly or in part of wool, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have before me what is called the Walker tariff act, which has been the boast of the Democratic party since 1846. It is the last expression of the Democratic will on all subjects of tariff legislation since that time. It has been made the subject of eulogy in this debate. The honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] spoke of it as being the best tariff which had been framed in this country, and the model of other tariff acts. Now, when I look at the tariff act of 1846 I find a duty levied on unmanufactured wool of 30 per cent ad valorem, and on "manufactures of wool, or of which wool shall be the component material of chief value, not otherwise provided for," 30 per cent ad valorem.

So the idea then of the Democratic party was that the farmer should be dealt with precisely as the manufacturer was dealt with—that to the extent of his labor he should be protected in his industry. This was the rule and law of the Democratic party. From 1816, after the war of 1812, up to this hour there has always been a duty on wool proportionate to some extent to the duty on woolens; but as manufacturing increased the rates of duty on woolens were I think properly increased.

What reason can be given why we should now refuse to the farmer the duty of, say, 20 or 30 per cent or 40 per cent on the product of his industry? The circumstances are not auspicious for such a movement as is proposed. It is hard upon the farmer at best to live. He is brought into competition with all the world in his production.

This little duty of a few cents a pound on wool has always given a price which has made the product a sure resort for the payment of taxes. It has always been a sure reliance for almost every farmer in the State of Ohio and to some extent in all the other States. Such is the case even in Texas. I have here a telegram requesting me to call upon the honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] and have him present the unanimous declaration of a large mass-meeting somewhere in Texas against this free-wool clause. I suppose that is the substance of it. I called upon the Senator for it at the request of this person and he said that he had left it at his house, but no doubt he will bring it here in the morning. It purports to be the proceedings of a large mass-meeting in Texas.

This feeling is universal among the farmers of the country. I do not speak for partisan purposes; I think I have got beyond that; but I should like to make an appeal to the Senators of the United States on behalf of the farmers, laboring as they are under severe conditions, under hard lines and hard times, competing with their Wester brethren on cheap farms and cheap land. The farmers of our Eastern States and the Middle States are, to use a common expression, very hard up, although the great mass of them are the best people of our country.

I say it is unjustifiable, it is wrong, it is cruel, and it is unjust in every sense of the word that you should make this discrimination when all those who went before you now for nearly eighty years have given the farmers an equal chance in the race of life in their production. The tariff act of 1846, which you boast as the model and pride of your party, shows that those who levied these duties put an equal protection on the farmer and the manufacturer. No party has dared since 1816 to leave wool off the tariff list, and prior to 1816 all the wool produced in this country was consumed here; there were neither exports nor imports of wool. I had the book here the other day before me, but forgot to refer to it.

Until 1816 our wool was always consumed in the cheap and homely way carried on in every house with the old-fashioned wheel, which was as necessary a part of the household furniture as the stove in the kitchen. Since that time manufacturing has become an art, and we are making as good cloths as any in the world. I do not object to the protection which has been given by the pending bill, nor would I object to giving additional protection to the manufacturers of wool; but that which you gave to the farmer forty or fifty years ago ought to be given now, and if you do not do it they will have sense enough to see that your ground is not tenable. If the old Democratic party was right forty or fifty years ago it is wrong now. Every dictate of interest, every impulse of honesty, every sign of patriotism, demands that you should extend to them the same benefits that you extend to the other branches of industry.

This is all I desire to say on the subject. I feel earnestly about it, and I hope that our Democratic friends for their benefit as well as for the benefit of the people of the United States will not carry out what I call a bad conspiracy against the industries of the farmers of our country.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio has alluded to a telegram which was sent to me from a meeting of woolgrowers at San Angelo, Tex. I did not understand that the telegram was intended to be presented to the Senate. It was simply addressed to me with a request that I should show the telegram to the Senator from Ohio and to the Representative of that district in Texas, Hon. Mr. PASCHAL. I paid no further attention to it.

The people of Texas know very well that I am not in favor of a duty on wool. They know that I have never been in favor of a duty on wool. These are constituents of mine, respectable gentlemen. They had a right of course to send the telegram to me, and I have a right to decline to comply with the request which they have made, and to continue to represent the great body of the Democratic people of Texas, who are in favor of free wool and free everything else they can get free from taxation.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I feel bound in courtesy to the Senator to say that I showed him the telegram and he told me to present it to the Senate in the nature of a petition or memorial. At any rate I showed it to the Senator and did——

Mr. MILLS. The Senator showed me his telegram, but mine was simply addressed to me and contained no request to present it to the Senate. However, there was a request that I should show it to the Senator from Ohio. It was on my table. I do not know where it is now, but it was a request for a vote to put a duty on wool, that we should not have free wool, but a duty on wool.

I wish to make simply one remark in reference to the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio about the Walker tariff. If the Senator from Ohio will read a little book called Does Protection Protect, written by Mr. Grosvenor, who, I believe, is, or was for some time, the tariff editor of the New York Tribune, he alludes to the very fact to which the Senator callsattention in the Walker tariff of 1866, that the duty on wool and woolen goods was the same—30 per cent—and that the result was almost the destruction of the woolen manufactures of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

Mr. MILLS. Hold on a moment, my friend. We imported very largely until 1857, when the tariff of 1857 was adopted. I think my friend from Ohio had something to do with that act, and, if I remember aright, the duty on wool under 20 cents a pound was removed and it was made free.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have also the tariff act of 1857 here. I was a member of the Congress which passed that act.

Mr. MILLS. That is what I thought.

Mr. SHERMAN. If I remember aright, the schedules named in the tariff act of 1846 were simply reduced about 20 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. But all wool under 20 cents a pound was put on the free list. My friend from Rhode Island knows that.

Mr. ALLISON. Twenty-four.

Mr. ALDRICH. All wool under twenty-four.

Mr. MILLS. Twenty, I think.

Mr. ALDRICH. Twenty-four.

Mr. MILLS. That is much better, but I thought it was twenty. Does the Senator from Rhode Island wish to say something?

Mr. ALDRICH. I wish to say a word in justice to Mr. Grosvenor. I think it ought to be stated that since the publication to which the Senator referred he has repudiated the publication and its doctrine.

Mr. MILLS. He repudiated a most masterly work on the subject of free trade. But neither my friend from Rhode Island nor my friend from Ohio will agree that a tariff on such a raw material as wool of 30 per cent and a tariff on manufactured goods of 30 per cent is the right thing to do.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, on which the Chair understands the yeas and nays to be demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL]. With the consent of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], and vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I announce for the day that I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON]. If he were present I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE. Has the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. FRYE. Then I think it would be proper he should stand paired with his general pair, the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], and I will resume my pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. PALMER (after having voted in the negative). Has the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nevada has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. PALMER. I made a temporary pair with that Senator and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—29.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PEFFER. I propose an amendment. I move to insert:

All articles of manufacture, composed wholly or in part of wool or hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. President, we have arrived at a point in this discussion when it is made perfectly evident that raw wool, unmanufactured wool of all classes and varieties raised by American farmers is to be placed in open competition in the world's market with wools raised in Australia, in South America, in Russia, in India, in China, in the colonies in the southern part of Africa, and in all portions of the world.

It has been shown during this discussion that there are somewhere in the neighborhood of a million farmers—not simply men, women, and children—but a million men and women, taking them individually, owning sheep in the United States, and that those sheep are being raised and the wool from them is being cared for as a part of the livelihood of those farmers. It has been shown, too, that there are about $500,000,000 worth of invested capital in the business of raising sheep and producing wool.

Now that it is determined that these farmers and their product shall be placed in competition with the cheap labor of other countries, I ask the Democratic majority of this body to apply the same rule to the manufacturers of wool. I hold that the farmer's interests are as sacred as those of the manufacturer, and that if revenue is needed it can be raised with quite as much propriety upon unmanufactured wool as upon manufactured wool. Further, I hold that if it is a matter of protection, the interests of the farmer are as much in need of protection as the interests of the manufacturer.

I have taken occasion two or three times during this discussion to call attention to the fact that as to a great many articles which the farmer produces he does not need any protection; he does not want any protection. It would be of no sort of use to him. For example, in the matter of wheat and in the matter of corn and oats, because our production is so much larger than our consumption that any amount of protection, even though it should amount to prohibition, would not do us any good; but that, whenever a case occurs where either by prohibiting the importation of an article our people would have the benefit of supplying the amount so prohibited, or, as in the case of wool, when we are not able to supply the entire demand of our own market, we would get the benefit of a duty levied upon foreign competing articles. In all such cases I have insisted uniformly that if there is any virtue in protection to anybody there is equal virtue in it to the farmer.

Before going any further I wish to call attention to a matter in the most kindly spirit, but I want to do it with sufficient plainness so that every Senator will understand exactly what I mean. I charge, to begin with, that the Democratic majority is treating the farmers of the country unfairly. I charge upon the Democratic party in the Senate that they are treating themselves unfairly, that they are abandoning their record, that they are betraying the people, that they are doing those things they promised the people they would not do, and that they are leaving undone things they told the people they would do. These be plain words. I want them to be so, and, without intending to be offensive, I want them to go straight home to the hearts and consciences and brains of the Senators who are listening to me.

In 1884, when the Democratic banner was flung high, and the party met in national convention, they gave to the world these words:

> The Democracy pledges itself to purify the Administration from corruption, to restore economy, to revive respect for law, and to reduce taxation to the lowest limit consistent with due regard to the preservation of the faith of the nation to its creditors and pensioners. Knowing full well, however, that legislation affecting the operations of the people should be cautious and conservative in method, not in advance of public opinion, but responsive to its demands, the Democratic party is pledged to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all interests.

I ask Senators who listen to me whether the woolgrowing interest is not one of the interests of the American people; whether it is not the seventh in magnitude of all our great industries, and whether the tariff ought not to be revised in a spirit of fairness to that industry? Senators must remember that wool has been protected every year since 1816. This is one of the industries that has grown up among the American people under the fostering care of the Government precisely the same as the manufacturing of wool, and the manufacturing of cotton, and the manufacturing of iron have grown up. There is no difference between them whatever.

In 1850 our wool clip amounted to about 2 pounds or 2½ pounds to the sheep, while now we have increased it to an average of very nearly 7 pounds, and in very many places fully 7 pounds. Some individual fleeces have already reached 23 and 24 pounds. It is a great industry, and I submit to the Democratic majority here that, when you are removing at one stroke of the legislative pen every vestige of protection from an industry which has as much right to claim the protection of the National Legislature as any other industry in the country, and let the industry drop, while you are keeping 40 per cent, 45 per cent, and 50 per cent ad valorem upon the manufactures of wool, you are not treating us fairly, and we feel it down in our manhood where men feel these things. I ask you in candor, in honor, as men and as legislators, how dare you strike down the farmer's industry and hold up the manufacturer's?

You will arouse a spirit of indignation among the farmers that you can not explain away. There is no child's play about this thing. You strike us with an open hand while we are looking at you, just as a highwayman comes up in front of his victim and says, "Deliver to me;" but you do not do that to the manufacturer. I would not be at all surprised if before this discussion ends we should find that the duties upon manufactured goods are raised by the gentlemen in charge of the pending bill. Having called the attention of Democratic Senators to their platform in 1884, I come to the platform of 1888:

> The Democratic party of the United States, in national convention assembled, renews the pledge of its fidelity to Democratic faith, and reaffirms the platform adopted by its representatives at the convention of 1884—

It is reaffirmed that you will revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all industries. But they do more than that Mr. President—> and indorses the views expressed by President Cleveland in his last earnest message to Congress as the correct interpretation of that platform upon the question of tariff reduction.

Now, we will see what are those views. President Cleveland says:

> It is not proposed entirely to relieve the country of this taxation—

Speaking of protection—

> It must be extensively continued as the source of the Government's income, and in a readjustment of our tariff the interests of American labor engaged in manufactures should be carefully considered as well as the preservation of our manufactures. It may be called protection, or by any other name, but relief from the hardships and dangers of our present tariff laws should be devised with special precaution against imperiling the existence of our manufacturing interests.
>
> * * * * * * *
> The standard of our laborer's life should not be measured by that of any other country less favored, and they are entitled to their full share of all our advantages.
>
> The simple and plain duty which we owe the people is to reduce taxation to the necessary expense of an economical operation of the Government and to restore to the business of the country the money which we hold in the Treasury through the perversion of governmental powers. These things can and should be done with safety to all our industries which without danger to the opportunity for remunerative labor which our workingmen need, and with benefit to them and all our people by cheapening their means of subsistence and increasing the measure of their comforts.

Mr. President, the Democratic party taught us that doctrine from the platform; they taught it to us from the press, until the American people largely, and especially the farmers, came to believe that they really were in earnest about it, and that if they were intrusted with power they would undertake to revise the tariff in a spirit of fairness to all industries for the purpose of cheapening the necessaries of life, so that men could live cheaper and yet live just as well. But now when we come to this point where they stand before us they say to us, "We will strike down your industry; we will take away the protective hand of the Government from it, and let it fall, while we will protect the industries of half a dozen men," who have forced this infamous measure upon this body.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of those Senators to the condition of the sheep industry. I have had these figures by me all the time, but thought I would wait until this supreme moment and see whether we are to be slaughtered in the face of our pretended friends. I have here a statement made by woolen manufacturers, who are very much interested, of course, having large investments in the business, in which they show what is now the free-trade price of wool upon the farm and what it costs to get the wool to the market. They have sent out their agents into the Northwest and Southwest to purchase wool, and have instructed every one of them to pay only this much or less, and this much is the free-trade price, expecting that this bill will eventually pass, and that the crop of wool which they will then have on hand will be purchased at a safe price.

I find here that one grade of Montana wool is 5 cents upon the farm, and 9¾ cents is the London price of graded Montana fine delaine fleeces. It costs 5 cents to take that wool to market, which would leave 4¾ cents a pound for wool on the farm in Montana. Coming down to Kansas, I find that Kansas wool, the London price of which is 11½ cents, it costs 4 cents to get to market. That leaves us 7½ cents for our splendid clip of wool in the State of Kansas. So it runs all along through the different grades of wool. California—the price of same grade of wool in London is 8¾ cents, and it costs 5 cents to get that wool to the factory, which would leave 3¾ cents to the woolgrower.

Mr. President, without going into the details further, I say to you that at one of the meetings of the Kansas Woolgrowers' Association a few years ago a committee reported that it cost from 22 to 25 cents a pound to raise first-class wool in the State of Kansas. There are gentlemen here who are interested personally in the business of woolgrowing who understand the truth of what I say. It costs on an average to produce a first-class clip of American wool from 25 to 30 cents a pound, taking the country over, on high-priced lands of Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio, and through that section of country and going on west through the lower grades of land a fair average price of the cost of producing good wool in the United States may be put down at 25 cents; and yet we find here that an average of what our farmers would receive for their wool after the expense of getting it to market is deducted would not exceed 8 or 10 cents a pound—more than 50 per cent below the actual cost price of producing the wool.

That being true, none of the Senators who represent constituencies engaged in manufacturing industries will pretend to say that the duties which are proposed by the bill to be laid upon manufactured goods will interfere with the business of manufacturing to the extent of reducing the value of the goods in the market 50 per cent below their cost. They understand very well that an average duty of 35 to 50 per cent on the manufactures of woolen goods is enough. It is enough to protect the manufacturing industries of the country, and hence they have not complained.

Now, I want to know, and I have a right to know, because when I go home to my constituents I wish to explain it to them, the reason why the Democratic majority in the Senate of the United States have done this, and I ask the Senators to answer me and to answer me openly and before the Senate and the country, why it is that they are not willing to leave us some protection upon our wool industry when they leave ample protection upon the manufactures of wool? That is a fair question, and I ask it expecting it to be answered. There certainly is some Senator here who can answer the question. There must be some reason for it, and I wish to know what it is. I see the chairman of the Committee on Finance in his seat, but probably it would hardly be fair to ask him to answer, for the reason that on account of the Senator's health he has not been able to attend the meetings of the committee nor the sessions of the Senate as frequently as he otherwise would have done. But surely there is some Senator, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], or the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who can answer it.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Kansas wish me to answer in his time?

Mr. PEFFER. I wish the Senator to answer now.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I can give in a very few words the reason which controls my vote and my action as a member of the Finance Committee.

The Senator from Kansas has been engaged, in the remarks he has just made, in proving to the Senate that notwithstanding the duties imposed by the McKinley act upon wool and woolen goods the price of raw wool has continued to fall to the producer in his State and in mine and throughout the country. Not only is that true, but the number of sheep has decreased until to-day east of the Mississippi River there are about one-half the number of sheep there were in 1867.

More than that, the report of the Agricultural Department for 1891 shows that while the number of sheep has slightly increased, taking the whole country, east and west of the Mississippi, the increase has been caused by the increase of what are called the mutton breed, in the vicinity of the cities, for the use of the markets in the way of food. But as to the quantity of wool and as to the number of wool sheep, there has been a decrease notwithstanding the high duties, and there has also been a falling in prices.

Now, it has been said here that the wool-producer will receive twice as much if there be a duty put upon wool, because there will be a larger quantity of wool produced by him. These duties were imposed in 1890, and yet the quantity of wool did not increase, and the market for wool went down upon the producer of wool. Still the Senator stands here and demands that the duty shall be retained or made greater.

Experience demonstrates that it does not benefit his people nor mine who raise the wool, nor has it benefited really the body of the woolen manufactures. We have the highest testimony from experts in woolen manufacture to the effect that this country can not produce the wools which are necessary to enable us to compete in the manufacture of woolen cloths with foreign manufacturers. We are bound to have foreign wool, and if we can increase the quantity of foreign wool brought in to this country, we will increase the demand for domestic wool, which is necessarily to be mixed with it in order to produce the cloths that would give to us any portion of the markets of this country or of the world.

I do not believe that taxing wool has been a success. I do not believe it has helped the wool-producers of the United States. I have the statistics here showing that in Missouri the number of sheep has steadily decreased. I have here the exact figures. In the State of Missouri in 1868 there were 1,377,547 sheep; in 1892, there were 916,623. In Ohio there was a loss from 1868 to 1892 of 2,262,039. In Michigan there was a loss from 1868 to 1892 of 1,594,412. In Pennsylvania the loss was 2,330,525; in New York, 3,575,425, and in Illinois, 1,888,339. Now, does the Senator from Kansas mean to tell me that if duties upon raw wool made the raising of wool profitable our people would not have found it out?

I went to Missouri when I was a boy, in 1852, and I remember that in Central Missouri there were men with from 7,000 to 10,000 sheep upon their farms. They deliberately abandoned the raising of wool because it was not profitable, and turned their land to other culture and to other interests. Are our people so stupid that they are not able to realize their own interest? Why is it, if the duties in the McKinley act operated in favor of the woolgrowers, that the price of wool has continued to fall? The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] tells us it is because of the great production throughout the world. But the price has gone down in this country to a larger degree than it has abroad, and if a high tariff would prevent such a result why has it not done so?

Mr. ALDRICH. The tables which I have put in the RECORD to-day will show exactly the opposite result.

Mr. VEST. Very good. Without going into an examination of those tables, which we shall see to-morrow, I assert this proposition, which no tables can controvert, that the price of wool has gone down in the face of these high duties since 1890 when I heard in this Chamber that if this duty were put on wool there would be an increased price to the woolgrowers. That has not been true. Hundreds of men, who voted for Mr. Harrison believing they would receive more for their wool, were disappointed until in my State to-day it is a standing jest with the Democrats who remained true to the party that many of their neighbors who voted for Harrison can not now look a sheep in the face. [Laughter.]

I have here the statement of Mr. Whitman, of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association, to the effect that it is impossible to produce in this country all the varieties of wool which are necessary to the manufacture of cloth. Now, are we to be told that we must continue this system, which so far has not inured to the benefit of the woolgrowers? Does the Senator from Kansas intend to go on in the same road that we have been pursuing for years? Does he think that the result in the future will be different from that which has obtained in the past? What right has he to assume that to put back the McKinley duties or any portion of them will inure to the benefit of the woolgrower as to the price he will receive for his product?

In the McKinley act we have enormous duties, amounting to over 225 and 230 per cent, in favor of the manufacturer. The argument has been made, and but for the consumption of time I could read here statements to that effect from all the authorities of the Republican party, including Mr. McKinley himself, that the specific duties in the McKinley act were put there to compensate the manufacturers for what they were compelled to pay for foreign wool, and that those specific duties were put there for the benefit of the woolgrowers. Now, what do we propose to do? We propose to remove those specific duties and give to the manufacturers what Mr. McKinley said he gave them in effect, and that is, free wool. But the moment we undertake to meet the argument and the demand of the Republican party in 1890 we are told that will not do; "we want to retain the specific duties." In other words, they admit that those duties were not for the benefit of the woolgrower as they said in 1890, but went into the pockets of the woolen manufacturers themselves.

The Senator asks me why I favor free wool. I favor it in the interest of the wool producers of this country and the consumers and users of woolen cloths. I favor it to get rid of 230 and 240 per cent upon one of the prime necessaries of life. I favor it because we have tried the system now crystallized upon the statute books in the shape of the McKinley act, and we have found that every promise made to the people of the United States has proven to be false. Let us in the name of the people try something else.

Let us give to the wool producers of the United States the chance to test what I absolutely believe to be true, that when foreign wools which we can not produce come here and can be used by our manufacturers in being mixed with the domestic wools, there will be a production of woolen cloths never before known in this country. There will be a demand for the domestic article which we have never known and the result will be, as it always is, that increased demand will increase the price, and the people in Kansas and Missouri and the other States of the Union in which wool is produced will reap the result.

This, Mr. President, is inferior to the other great consideration. Woolen clothes will be cheaper. These enormous duties will not be recouped off the people of the United States, either by the importers or by the domestic manufacturers. We will not be compelled to pay as much in the shape of duties as we pay now for the cloths themselves. Does the Senator from Kansas want this result, or does he want to put a duty upon raw wool, and then force us to put up the duties on manufactured products, which would be the inevitable and logical result?

If you put a duty upon raw wool you must increase the duty upon the manufactured cloths, because the manufacturer has the right to say to us, "You have increased the price of my raw material and you must compensate me for that legislation."

Mr. HOAR. What if you do not?

Mr. VEST. If you do not, then of course gaunt famine will stalk in the streets of all the manufacturing towns and cities, and there will be desolation in the land.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me for a second?

Mr. PEFFER. Yes; for one second.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to put upon record as against the statement of the Senator from Missouri the statement that every promise made by any of the advocates of the act of 1890 as to the beneficial effects of that act upon the wool-producing industry in the United States, or the woolen manufactures of the United States, or as to the reduced price of clothing to the people of the United States, has been verified a thousand times over by the actual results. It is true——

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask——

Mr. ALDRICH. Just a second. It is true there was a slight decline in the price of wool in the United States for the fifteen or twenty months subsequent to the passage of that act, but while there was a decline of about 6 per cent in the United States there was a decline in London during the same period of nearly 30 per cent, showing that our tariff had saved the people of the United States from the disastrous competition which came from reduced prices.

It is further true that after the election in November, 1892, there was a ruinous fall in the prices of wool which has continued to the present moment, growing out of the threats (which the people of the country believed would be kept) of the destruction of the wool-producing interests of the country.

Mr. VEST. In other words, the fear of a Democratic victory within one year after Harrison was elected caused a fall in the price of wool. Who believes that statement? I want to say this——

Mr. ALDRICH. No; one year after Cleveland was elected.

Mr. VEST. One year after Harrison was elected.

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not talking about that. I have made no such statement.

Mr. VEST. It is exactly the same statement. In 1890 the voters of the country were told, "Elect Mr. Harrison and the price of wool will go up." He was elected, and the price of wool went down, and it shows that the Republican victory, with the prospects of the increased duties by tariff legislation, did not have the result which the Republicans are claiming to-day, and which they claimed then.

But, Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, when he talks about the falling in the prices of woolen goods, what has been the fall abroad? How is it the importers are able to pay these enormous duties that you put upon cloth in the McKinley act and yet take a large portion of this market? Does anybody believe they give their goods away? Does anybody believe they bring these goods here in the spirit of philanthropy and love of the American consumer? Who pays those duties? Why is it that to-day we are taxed to the amount of these enormous duties and these goods are brought in here for consumption, and yet we are told that goods have fallen in this country since the passage of the McKinley act? How much have they fallen abroad? How much more do we pay than the foreign consumer by reason of that tariff act? That is the only question.

However, I merely wish to ask in corroboration of my assertion—I shall not take time to read it or have it read—that the statement of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers in regard to the object of the compensatory duties in the McKinley act, and also the statement of Mr. Whitman, ex-president of the National Woolen Manufacturing Association, in regard to the absolute necessity for the importation of foreign wools to enable the American manufacturer to compete with his foreign rival, be inserted in the RECORD.

The National Association of Wool Manufacturers in a communication addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury in October, 1885, gave the following explanation of the wool duty:

"The wool manufacturer is to be placed in the same position as if he had his wool and other raw material free of duty; and then to receive substantially the same measure of protection accorded to other industries. The method by which this problem is solved is by the imposition upon woolen cloths and other manufactures of wool of such specific duties as will be sufficient to reimburse the manufacturer for the amount of duty and other material entering into such manufactures, and the amount paid on account of such duty.

"The protection to the manufacturer is provided by an ad valorem duty; being, with slight exceptions, fixed in the old and existing tariff as 35 per cent—these two classes of duty, the specific and ad valorem, constituting that system of compound duties which is held to be the only one that can be effectually defensive of the woolen manufacturer, or is consistent with protection to wool.

"Necessity for importations of wool.—It may be said that a remedy for these difficulties is to be found in the exclusive use of the domestic wools, which will be abundantly supplied under due protection. To this we reply that neither our own country nor any other in the world does or can produce, to advantage, wools of all kinds and grades. Experience under high protection of wool in this country for over thirty years has demonstrated that our domestic woolgrowers find it to their advantage to produce only the staple wools required for the ordinary range of woolen fabrics; and as these fabrics will always be in demand, they build up their flocks, a work of time, for the production only of the fleeces which will be profitable for a long series of years. This system, although providing admirable raw material for common goods, is incompatible with the variety required for the diversified and highly advanced manufacture which should be our aim. The American manufacturer to compete with the fabrics of other nations in the endless variety demanded by our times, must have the power of selecting a portion of his raw material from all the world's sources of supply. The sudden and exceptional demand for more or new raw material must be supplied by importations."

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I do not expect to be called away from the basic point of my question by a discussion of what effect duties or the absence of duties have upon prices. What I want to know is why it is that when you take these duties away from unmanufactured wool you do not also remove the duties from the manufactures of wool. That is the question, and the Senator has given me no answer to it. What he has answered is upon his own responsibility as a Senator, and does not assume to answer for the party.

Mr. POWER. Will the Senator from Kansas allow me?

Mr. PEFFER. I should rather not yield until I get through with this thought. It is a pretty big thought and it will take me some little time to deliver it.

Mr. POWER. I wish to give the Senator some information as to prices.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator will have an opportunity when I get through. The prices of wool have fallen; the prices of manufactured wools have fallen. I have shown to the Senate and to the Senator that by reason of the expectation of the passage of the pending bill the wool buyers are now purchasing wool and making contracts upon the free-trade basis, which is some 4 or 5 cents below the price of raw wool on the farms. That being true, I say to you that the removal of these duties destroys the wool industry to that extent.

The same argument that the Senator from Missouri addresses to me and to the Senate, that protective duties are destroying the wool industry, will apply to the woolen-manufacturing industry. The argument that is good for John is good for Peter; the argument that is good for Paul is good for Silas; the argument that is good for the farmer is good for the manufacturer. What I wish to know the Senator has not answered. He insists that the prices of wool have been falling. I concede that. We all know that.

The prices of wool have been falling, and without reference to what has been the cause of it, if it be true, as the Senator from Missouri says, that it is because of the high duties upon wool, then in the name of all that is fair and honest remove duties from woolen manufactures. You will have my hearty consent. I am not objecting to the wool schedule. That is passed. I offered two or three amendments. I presented such arguments as I was able, to show that we were entitled to a reasonable protection if anybody is, and I do not ask it unless the others are entitled to it. The farmers are perfectly willing to abandon the whole system of protection, as I have told you before a dozen times in this Chamber.

The farmers and woolgrowers of Kansas and Missouri and every other State in the Union, so far as I know, are perfectly willing to abandon duties upon everything that they raise if you will only abandon duties upon the articles you manufacture. Now, I ask you is that not fair? It is an answer to that question that I want. Why do you do this thing? Here are the disciples of Jefferson and of Jackson, who have promised us time and time again that they are going to revise these duties in a spirit of fairness to all industries, and yet you cut off all the protection upon wool and leave it upon the manufactures of wool.

Mr. VEST. I endeavored to the best of my ability to state this fact——

Mr. PEFFER. I understood the Senator very well, but I did not understand him to answer my question.

Mr. VEST. I am not responsible for the Senator's conclusion that I did not answer. I tried to answer him.

Mr. PEFFER. Then the Senator says, and he says truly, that if duties are levied upon wool there must be compensatory duties levied upon manufactures, provided of course that there is any necessity for levying duties upon either. Now, if you say to the woolgrowers that we do not need any protection, then we say to the manufacturers, you need no protection; and we put it upon the simple proposition of common fairness between men, common fairness between industries in which men are engaged. If you remove our duties, we will remove yours. That is just what my amendment means, and I submit it to the Senate.

All I ask is that when you come to a vote that the Senate do me the kindness and the courtesy to give me a yea-and-nay vote, so that those who wish to place themselves upon record as being fair and candid men can do so and the record can go down. I do not care to detain the Senate any longer. I have tried to put the proposition plainly and forcibly in order that Senators may understand that I am perfectly candid about it. I want duties taken off all manufactured wools if they are taken off unmanufactured wool.

Mr. POWER. Mr. President, we have the verbal assurance of the Senator from Missouri that free wool would not be an injury to the sheepgrower, but nothing to prove they are the facts. I have written to Boston commission men in the last few days to know what they advanced on shipments of wool from Montana commencing in 1887. Jeremiah Williams & Co. say:

In reply to yours of the 11th will say that we buy several million pounds of Montana every year, and our prices have been as follows:

In 1887, 20 cents to 22 cents.
In 1888, 15 cents to 17 cents.
In 1889, 20 cents to 22 cents.
In 1890, 18 cents to 20 cents.
In 1891, 19 cents to 20 cents.
In 1892, 17 cents to 19 cents.
In 1893, 10 cents to 11 cents.

After the election of Mr. Cleveland—

Ten cents to 11 cents.
In 1894, under free wool, we can not pay over 6 to 7 cents.

What does this mean? These are facts. This is not a simple assertion. The farmers know this. One-third at least of the citizens of my State have come from the State of the Senator from Missouri, and they all realize that these are facts, not verbal assertions.

You notice that in 1888 prices were 15 to 17 cents. That was the year free wool was being agitated and the Mills bill was before the House, if we remember rightly, and we bought Montana at 17 cents that we paid 22 cents for in 1887.

Here is a letter from Fenno Bros. & Childs, also of Boston, dated June 14, 1894:

Your esteemed favor of the 11th is at hand and we note contents with interest. In the year 1888-'89 we handled about one and one-third million pounds of Montana; in the year 1889-'90 about the same amount; in 1890-'91 about one and three-fourths million; in 1891-'92 about two million; in 1892-'93 about two and one-fourth million; and in 1893-'94 a little less than two million. What we shall handle this year is of course problematical.

In 1888 we advanced 15 cents to 16 cents; in 1889, 16 cents to 17 cents; in 1890 about 16 cents; in 1891, 15 cents to 15½ cents; in 1892, 14 cents to 15 cents.

An advance is when the woolgrower has his wool ready to ship, and landed at the railroad. Then the commission man advances him the amount named and takes the bill-of-lading wool consigned to him.

In 1893--

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator——

Mr. POWER. In a minute; when I finish this letter. Fenno Brothers & Childs say:

In 1893, with the possibility of free wool in view, 7½ cents, and this year, when we are apparently nearer than ever the solution of the wool-tariff problem and on account of the passage by the House of the Wilson bill putting wool on the free list, 5 cents to 6 cents. Should wool be put on the free list we should feel that even these advances were dangerous.

You will thus see how fearful a blow the threat of free trade has struck at the interests of the Montana woolgrower. On account of its evil influence the price of scouring fine medium Montana wool, which is the average grade, has declined since 1891 in the neighborhood of 50 per cent. This ought to be a sufficient commentary, even to the most doubting among our legislators, upon what the agriculturist or woolgrower will be forced to suffer in case of free wool. As you and we very well know, no one can profitably raise fine sheep in this country with wool at its present price, and that industry will assuredly be killed out in case we have free wool.

We also from very good authority hear that there are vast amounts of so-called tops, that is to say, the combined product of wool, already made in the various European wool markets for shipment to this country, should the provisions of the Wilson bill become a law. These were made to be sold at a very low figure, and the delay in the settlement of the tariff question, which has existed up to this date, has resulted in the makers of these tops being obliged to now turn them into money at fearfully low prices.

We have heard of fine tops being sold as low as 35 cents per pound in the European markets. Of course these will be manufactured into yarns which can be offered also at ruinously low prices, and then the goods which are made up from these yarns will probably be shipped to this country no matter what legislation occurs upon the tariff; and all this has been brought about by the expectation, owing to the well-known proclivities of the party in power, raised in the breasts of the Europeans of free wool and free tops, or at most a very slight duty upon them.

We very sincerely hope that you will be successful in stimulating the Senate to agree to a duty on wool. We feel positively sure that the interests of the fine-woolgrowing industry in this country depend upon it.

And we remain, very truly, yours,

FENNO BROS. & CHILDS.

BOSTON, MASS., June 14, 1894.

Mr. VEST. What has been the fall in the price of wheat and horses?

Mr. POWER. In regard to the fall in the price of wheat we agree perfectly. We understand the cause.

Mr. VEST. I ask what the fall in the price has been?

Mr. POWER. We passed on that last September. We understood that perfectly and we agree entirely. We killed the Sherman law——

Mr. VEST. The Senator is talking about the silver question now. Does he mean to say that has not affected everything that is for sale. I want to ask him if he does not think that has affected woolens.

Mr. POWER. I say to the Senator that the price of wool in the market has declined, but you can not deny that if you give the woolgrower 5 cents protection the wool will be worth that much more. You can not deny that proposition.

Mr. VEST. Then when the duty was put up in the McKinley act the price ought to have gone up instead of going down.

Mr. POWER. It did go up as compared with European London prices.

Mr. VEST. It did not go up; it fell all over the United States.

Mr. POWER. Here are the prices that I have read to you. Now wool is worth 6 and 7 cents because of your free-trade bill.

Mr. VEST. Wheat was then worth $1.25 and $1.30 a bushel and now it is worth 35 cents at the country depots in the West. The fall has been much greater in wheat; and a distinguished citizen of the Senator's State told me not long ago that he shipped one hundred and fifty horses from his horse ranch to Illinois and the proceeds of the sale in Illinois did not pay the freight from Montana there.

Mr. POWER. The Senator has asked why the price of horses has declined. I will tell him. One reason is because of the electric roads. The general decline in business is, of course, another reason. The price of horses everywhere has declined on account of the use of electricity. Every man, woman, and child in the country knows that to be the situation.

Mr. VEST. And wheat, too, I presume, on account of electricity.

Mr. POWER. We agree on wheat exactly. The decline in silver is the reason of the decline in wheat. But wheat is exported, while wool sufficient to satisfy our demands has to be imported, and that is the reason why the farmer should have a duty upon wool. I believe the Senator understands the situation.

Mr. DOPLH. Mr. President, I do not know that I understand exactly the position of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If I do he has been contending that the tariff upon wool will not increase the price, and that the effect of the McKinley law had been to decrease the price of wool. But whenever the Senator from Missouri talks about the tariff he talks about a tax, and he claims that the duty levied at the custom-house is a tax upon the consumer and adds just that much to the cost of the article to the consumer. If that is true in regard to anything it is true in regard to wool. It seems to me the Senator is rather inconsistent. He had better stop talking about a tax, and if the duty levied at the custom-house does not increase the price of wool then he had better levy duties so as to get some revenue, as it will do no one any harm.

The truth is, as I said yesterday, the price of wool is fixed in the London market by the world's supply and demand, and the price of American wool since the McKinley act and before and ever since and until to-day has been the London price, with the duties collected at the custom-house added.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I desire to make an appeal to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] not to press his proposition to put manufactured woolens on the free list. He certainly does not wish to put himself in the attitude of destroying the industry of manufacturing wool in the United States because the effort to put a duty upon wool has received a temporary check.

The Senator can not fail to have noticed how near he came to carrying his amendment placing a duty upon wool. It was lost by only two majority; and the Senator from Kansas, instead of proceeding to become an iconoclast and seeking to destroy, ought to persevere in an effort to get a majority for his previous amendment. I suggest to the Senator that he endeavor to get his Populist party to continue to act unitedly, and they may get one more vote. The Populist party in the Senate has wobbled a good deal during the present session. It has not shown unity of action; it has not shown that disposition to harmony and united action that a little party of three men ought to show. But to-day the Senator from Kansas got them together, all three of them, they voted together, and they came within two of carrying a duty upon wool.

Now, I suggest to the Senator from Kansas, considering what I know of his perseverance, and that of the Populist Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and the Populist Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE], that they three, if they unite, are good enough for one more vote. That will make a tie, and then I am sure the devotion of the Vice-President to the sheep of this country would induce him to give the casting vote, and then the Senator will have accomplished all he desires. It can not be that those three Senators can not capture the Senator's colleague, the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], in favor of a duty upon wool. I am sure that if the junior Senator from Kansas is appealed to he will give a vote as the other Populists want him to vote.

The junior Senator from Kansas was elected by a Legislature that had but three Democrats in it. There were Republicans, and there was a Populist majority, but there were almost no Democrats there; and he represents on this floor the Populists of Kansas and not the Democrats of Kansas. I am sure, if he were approached in the right way by this united Populist party, he would vote for a duty on wool. There are two or three other Senators upon the opposite side of the Chamber who I am quite sure are shaky on the subject, and who do not like to be put in the position of voting to make everything else dutiable, more or less dutiable, adequately or inadequately dutiable, and placing wool, the universal product of the farm, on the free list.

I say to the Senator from Nebraska, and to the Senator from South Dakota, and to the Senator from Kansas, go to work and proselyte a little between now and the next two or three days, instead of trying to break down the manufacturers of wool in this country, and either by an accession of votes on that side, or by the vote of the Vice-President, we shall have the flocks of this country saved from destruction. If the Senator from Nebraska will put half as much energy into getting one more vote to protect the sheep of this country as he is putting into the effort of his lifetime to find out the mysteries of the sugar trust, we shall have the sheep of this country protected before to-morrow night.

Mr. President, I can not think of any better idea on which to adjourn than that the now reunited Populist party in the Senate, after praying over the subject all night, are to go to work to-morrow morning, and try to get at least one vote on the other side of the Chamber which has some sympathy and some regard for the sheep industry of the United States.

Mr. POWER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion which he has just made. The Senator from Missouri, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, desires very much to have a deficiency bill considered, it being important that it should be considered promptly. After that a short executive session is necessary this evening. I therefore suggest to the Senator from Montana that he withdraw his motion.

Mr. POWER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that he ask for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill at this time.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS FOR PUBLIC PRINTING, ETC.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes, to report it without amendment. It makes appropriation for the Printing Office and the payment of some salaries there, and for a deficiency in the Treasury Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator from Missouri whether the consideration of that bill will not displace the tariff bill? If so, I ask that unanimous consent be given that, after the appropriation bill is disposed of, we may go on with the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I will not trouble the Senator to ask unanimous consent. I think I can get the floor, and may possibly have votes enough to take up the tariff bill if it should be displaced.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall vote with the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. I am glad that the Senator from New Hampshire will do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. I think we ought to proceed as rapidly as possible with the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill which I have just reported.

Mr. HOAR. Has the deficiency bill just reported been printed?

Mr. COCKRELL. It has been printed as passed by the House of Representatives and there are no amendments reported to it. It is a very short bill, only a page and a half, with practically only three items in it.

Mr. HOAR. Why should we not go on with it to-morrow?

Mr. COCKRELL. Simply because this is the day when a large number of employés in the Printing Office ought to be paid, and there is no appropriation from which they can be paid.

Mr. HOAR. That is a good reason.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7458) making appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. HARRIS. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TURPIE in the chair). The Senate resumes consideration of the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 16, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate June 15, 1894.

INDIAN AGENT.

J. George Wright, of South Dakota, to be agent for the Indians of the Rosebud Agency, in South Dakota, his term of office having expired.

POSTMASTERS.

Frederick B. Clark, to be postmaster at Moodus, in the county of Middlesex and State of Connecticut, in the place of Charles H. Emily, whose commission expired May 7, 1894.

Frederick E. Jacobs, to be postmaster at North Haven, in the county of New Haven and State of Connecticut, in the place of Edward L. Goodyear, deceased.

David C. Lee, to be postmaster at Kissimmee, in the county of Osceola and State of Florida, in the place of Willard L. Van Duzor, whose commission expired May 7, 1894.

James D. Casey, to be postmaster at Ligonier, in the county of Noble and State of Indiana, in the place of John H. Hoffman, whose commission will expire June 14, 1894.

Henderson S. Martin, to be postmaster at Marion, in the county of Marion and State of Kansas, in the place of John Lynch, deceased.

Thomas R. Phelps, to be postmaster at Harrodsburg, in the county of Mercer and State of Kentucky, in the place of Ovie Smedley, whose commission expired March 24, 1894.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Ordnance department.

First Lieut. Sidney E. Stuart, to be captain June 12, 1894.
First Lieut. J. Walker Benét, to be captain June 12, 1894.
First Lieut. William W. Gibson, to be captain June 12, 1894.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 15, 1894.

CHIEF OF BUREAU OF INDEXES AND ARCHIVES.

Pendleton King, of North Carolina, to be chief of the Bureau of Indexes and Archives in the Department of State.

ASSISTANT UNITED STATES TREASURER.

POSTMASTERS.

Howard H. Baker, to be postmaster at Buffalo, in the county of Erie and State of New York.

William F. Hutton, to be postmaster at Holstein, in the county of Ida and State of Iowa.

Z. B. Dunlap, to be postmaster at Perry, in the county of Dallas and State of Iowa.

Matthew J. McEniry, to be postmaster at Moline, in the county of Rock Island and State of Illinois.

George W. Mathews, to be postmaster at Armour, in the county of Douglas and State of South Dakota.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 15, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. RUTER W. SPRINGER.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

COLVILLE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of deficiency in the appropriation for opening a part of the Colville Reservation in Washington, submitted by the Secretary of the Interior; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House copies of the findings of the Court of Claims in the cases of the following-named persons against the United States; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims: George Black, deceased; H. A. Butler, and N. H. Knight, deceased.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

SECTION 3331, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H.R. 6054) to amend section 3331 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RESTRICTIONS ON SALE OF LEAF TOBACCO.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 6993) to remove certain restrictions on the sale of leaf tobacco; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY, EASTERN NEBRASKA AND GULF RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (S. 1995) granting to the Eastern Nebraska and Gulf Railway Company right of way through the Omaha and Winnebago Indian Reservation, in the State of Nebraska; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. SWEET, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation a bill (H. R. 397) providing for the erection of a public building at Chicago, Ill.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. BRETZ. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the resolution of the House, I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report a bill locating the Public Printing Office.

The bill (H. R. 7459) to authorize the erection of a Government Printing Office in the city of Washington, D. C., was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT JUDGE, EIGHTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. TERRY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation an act (S. 1390) providing an additional circuit judge in the eighth judicial circuit, and obtained leave to file the report thereon later in the day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The report was read, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 6913. That, beginning on page 51, line 14, the bill shall be read through, and during such reading all points of order made against any provision in the bill shall be decided by the Chair, debate on each not to exceed ten minutes. That at the conclusion of such reading the further consideration of the bill shall be resumed by the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, and amendments shall be in order to any part thereof. That at the hour of 3:30 p. m. this day, the bill as amended in the committee, with all pending amendments, shall be reported to the House. That the previous question shall then be ordered on the pending amendments and the bill to its final passage, and no intervening motion shall be in order until the bill is fully disposed of.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

Mr. MCRAE. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the adoption of that rule at this time unless modified so as to respect the agreement heretofore made.

The general debate on the second section of this bill was expressly reserved until it was reached and a fixed time allowed for debate upon it. It is an important matter, in which the people of my State are interested; and I desire an oportunity to discuss and amend that portion of the bill. I was recognized by the Chairman and the Committee of the Whole House gave me unanimous consent that this should be done when that part of the bill is reached. I think it would be unfair and unjust to insist now upon the adoption of such a rule as this before we reach that paragraph and before those who desire to amend it are allowed the opportunity which the Committee of the Whole House has already agreed to accord to them. We have not been responsible for the delay upon the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It was agreed by the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] whether it is his purpose now to allow debate on the resolution, or to insist on his motion for the previous question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have asked the previous question——

Mr. BURROWS. That of course is not debatable.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But I presume this discussion is not to be considered in the nature of debate.

Mr. BURROWS. If this debate is to preclude the opportunity for debate after the ordering of the previous question, I want that fact understood.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is not my purpose.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to understand this matter from the Chair. I ask the parliamentary inquiry whether, if the previous question should now be ordered on this resolution, debate already had would be considered as such debate under the rule as would preclude debate after the ordering of the previous question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The present discussion is not in the nature of debate. The gentleman from Arkansas has simply been permitted by the House to make a statement.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has already risen to a question of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. What transpired in the Committee of the Whole will, of course——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend one moment. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has raised an inquiry which is very proper. The rules of the House provide that where there has been debate on a proposition preceding the ordering the previous question there shall be no debate after the previous question is ordered, but where there has been no debate preceding the ordering the previous question, then there shall be thirty minutes' debate after it is ordered.

The gentleman from New York inquires whether the debate which has already taken place on this resolution would be considered by the Chair as such debate, in the contemplation of the rule, as would preclude the thirty minutes' debate after the ordering of the previous question. The Chair is inclined to think that any debate preceding the ordering the previous question cuts off debate after it is ordered; but he would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] that the matter can be easily arranged by yielding before the ordering of the previous question fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I had asked the previous question. I did not yield the floor. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] was making a personal statement——

The SPEAKER. But that is in the nature of debate.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If that is to be regarded as in the nature of debate, then I shall permit this debate to run on for thirty minutes, meanwhile retaining the floor and the control of the resolution, and then ask the previous question.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. BURROWS. With due deference to the suggestion of the Chair, it seems to me the statements which have been made ought not to be regarded as debate on this proposition, because the motion for the previous question is not debatable, and therefore this debate was not in order; so that anything which may have been said——

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] to withhold the demand for the previous question.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withhold it, and yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether this order, if adopted, will cut off amendments which were proposed to be offered to a paragraph beginning on page 48. This resolution provides that we shall begin at page 51 to read and consider the bill under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. Page 48 is passed.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am making a parliamentary inquiry. Yesterday evening a paragraph was carried over upon a point of order; it was withheld until this morning; and all amendments which were proposed to be offered to that paragraph were promised this morning a standing by the Chair. I proposed to offer an amendment to a paragraph preceding page 51; and the Chair informed me that that would be in order this morning when that paragraph, on page 48, was taken up. Now, will this resolution if adopted have the effect of cutting off the opportunity to offer such an amendment?

The SPEAKER. If this order is adopted, only those portions of the bill following page 51 can be considered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MCRAE. This matter was passed over in committee with the distinct understanding that I have stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge of passing over anything in committee. It is not customary for the committee, and the Chair, of course, has no information as to the matter.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. On the day before yesterday an amendment was offered by myself which has not been passed upon. The Chairman of the committee reserved the point of order on it, and I have had no opportunity to present my side of that contention. My question is as to whether or not I will have permission under this rule, if it be adopted, to recur to that amendment and have it considered?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman could not go back to page 51 if this rule is adopted.

The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be deplored on both sides of this Chamber that the Committee on Rules should feel constrained to bring in an order like the one just reported. We are considering a very important bill embracing 138 pages. Only 51 pages of the bill have been read in committee and considered up to this time.

There has been nothing, so far as I have observed, in the consideration of this bill to warrant the order now proposed. There has been no filibustering; the amendments proposed, as a rule, have been substantial amendments, and have been presented in good faith, debated, and voted upon. The difficulty with the Committee of the Whole is a difficulty inherent in the rules themselves. Had a provision been adopted to limit a quorum of the Committee of the Whole to one hundred, much of the time spent in committee would have been saved during the consideration of this bill.

A considerable time has been taken up in roll calls to secure the presence of a quorum, which by the rules, in Committee of the Whole, is the same as a quorum of the House. If we had a rule such as the Fifty-first Congress adopted, making a quorum of the Committee of the Whole one hundred, as it should have been, no difficulty would have been experienced and the business of the House could have been much more rapidly advanced.

This order proposes to take the bill from the Committee of the Whole and put it upon its passage, with the previous question ordered upon it, at half past 3 o'clock this afternoon. The only thing the committee can do under the order is to make points of order against the various provisions of the bill as they are read. Then debate can proceed upon points of order for ten minutes, after which the point must be decided.

I want to call attention to another provision:

> At the conclusion of such reading further consideration of the bill be resumed by the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, and amendments shall be in order to any part of the bill.

Now, by that provision this House, or the committee, will be precluded from making any amendment but one, because it is provided that "it shall be in order to offer an amendment to any portion of the bill to be considered under the five-minute rule."

One amendment might take the entire time of the committee until 3:30 o'clock this afternoon, preventing any further amendment, and preventing any member of the committee from offering but the one amendment named. Had the rule read "and may offer an amendment to any other portion of the bill on which there shall be debate pro and con for five minutes," it would have given liberty to any member of the committee to offer such amendments as he thought proper. But if you adopt this rule in its present form, you bind yourself hand and foot, put it in the power of any member to take up the entire time by the discussion upon a single amendment, as I have already suggested.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire any time?

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman from Indiana does not wish to occupy the floor now, I want to suggest merely this to my friend from Ohio in charge of this resolution—that there are, I fear, some matters embodied in the bill which will not have sufficient time, under the arrangement proposed by the resolution, for their proper consideration, and I will call attention to one of them, which refers to a question of settlement between the State of Tennessee and the United States. There are bonds of my State, as the gentleman is aware, held by the Government of the United States in trust for certain Indian tribes. We have had a complicated sort of claim with the Government pending for many years, but have not been able to secure a settlement.

There has been an effort made on the part of those of us representing the State to have a clause included concerning this by means of which the matter could be properly adjusted. I had hoped that when we reached that portion of the bill we could frame a satisfactory clause to be incorporated and a conclusion arrived at by which this complicated question between the Government and the State could be settled. I hope too little time for this will not be allowed.

I wanted merely to make this statement in view of the resolution pending, so that it might be placed properly before the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Just a minute in regard to the bond matter. These bonds do not belong to the United States and never have. Indian funds were invested in these bonds, and the Government holds them in trust, just as it would have held the money that was invested in them.

The Committee of the Whole agreed, by unanimous consent, that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] should have half an hour, and that the geatleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] should have half an hour upon that question. The provision is subject to a point of order, I think, but the object was that the subject should be brought before the attention of Congress for the first time in thirty years, so that the facts should be understood, and I hope no action will be taken which will deprive these gentlemen of the opportunity of delivering their addresses.

Mr. COX. What arrangement as to time is made in regard to the bonds of the State of Tennessee? This gives all the time to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. LYNCH. Half an hour upon each side.

Mr. COX. It is not the same matter at all.

Mr. LYNCH. If the bond provision is not stricken out on a point of order, I have no doubt that unanimous consent will be given to the gentlemen to engage in debate.

Mr. COX. There are half a dozen States involved.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] want any time?

Mr. COX. No; not on the rule.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, I believe in cloture, and I am always in favor of the most speedy action that can possibly be had upon any measure after a reasonable time has been given for discussion; but I do not believe that it is just at this time by a special rule to take this bill from the committee before the important parts of it have been reached and thereby defeat my reserved right to speak. The parts which have been reached deal with salaries and matters that must of course be passed, but the remainder of the bill is full of legislation, new legislation, important legislation, and legislation which, if it is enacted as the committee have proposed it, will outrage the public land laws.

There is legislation embodied in this bill which can not be defended upon sound principle. I have amendments prepared to perfect it in every respect. I had a solemn agreement with the committee to discuss the matter that my State was particularly interested in. I am anxious and ready to do it. The Chairman recognized me. I had the consent of the committee to pass it until the paragraph was reached, and I think it is very unjust treatment now to have the Committee on Rules undertake to take this measure out of the hands of the committee without providing for the time that has been agreed on by the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is no feeling on the part of the Committee on Rules. It is a mere matter of business.

Mr. McRAE. I know there is no feeling with you, but there is feeling with me, because this is a matter to which I have devoted a part of my eight years of service here, and I feel deeply upon it, and I want this Congress and the people to understand the matter. The State of Arkansas has been charged with being a defaulter. We resent it, and stand here to show that she is willing to pay every dollar that she justly and equitably owes. She has invited the United States to a settlement upon honorable and equitable terms, and when this, the best chance that we will perhaps have, is taken away in this manner, I say and I repeat it, that it can not be justified, and I can not but feel that this House, as it now understands the facts, will vote down this order and give me the time that I am entitled to under the agreement.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McRAE. Yes.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is this matter in the latter part of the bill, or has it been passed over?

Mr. McRAE. It has not been reached. The agreement was that when it was reached we should be heard upon it, and rather than discuss the matter in general debate before it was reached, an express agreement was made that I should be allowed to be heard when the paragraph was reached; because I desired that this House should understand what we propose and what the State of Arkansas has requested Congress to do, by an act of its Legislature.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The Committee on Rules has no disposition, and the gentleman should know it, to cut out any agreement that has been made, or to cut out any State or section of the country from a fair consideration of measures of such importance as those that he represents his to be. But the gentleman must have observed that this bill has dragged its slow length along under the most exasperating tactics.

Mr. McRAE. I admit all that.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. And that there has been gross abuse, a violent abuse of the prerogatives of members of this House by the tactics which have been pursued. We have had roll call after roll call about nothing, and points of no quorum made about the most trivial sort of matters.

Mr. McRAE. That is all true; but it does not apply to me.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We have had discussions which would have shamed school boys.

Mr. McRAE. But it does not apply to those of us who are interested in this matter in the slightest, because we have consumed no unnecessary time and should not suffer for the acts of others.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I do not mean to intimate that the gentleman has; but the Committee on Rules is disposed to extend the time necessary for the consideration of these important matters. How much time was it that the gentleman was to have had?

Mr. McRAE. I think it was thirty minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. And the State of Virginia is also involved.

Mr. COX. I want to make a statement with reference to these bonds in which Tennessee is involved.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What does the gentleman from Tennessee say?

Mr. COX. I want to make a statement to you. There is a proposition that has been introduced here and which has passed the Senate in behalf of the State of Tennessee, which has invited the Government to a settlement of accounts in which these bonds are involved; and under the proposition contained in this bill they are to put up the bonds and sell them.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But is not that proposition subject to a point of order?

Mr. COX. I clearly think so. Now, I say to you, so that the House will understand, that there is a proposition coming from the State, which has passed the Senate and is in this House, to settle this question. Now, then, the Government proposes to take a part of the bonds that the Government insists is involved in the settlement, put them up to the highest bidder, and sell them.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. As one member of the Committee on Rules I wish to say that I apprehended no danger on that, because I was under the impression that it would go out on the point of order, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. COX. If not, we want to get at it on the merits.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, in connection with this rule, that there is a proposition which will be reached in the bill for the sale of bonds of the State of Virginia owned by the United States. It is proposed to sell these bonds that the United States hold as trustees for the Indians. For the past sixty years the State of Virginia has been endeavoring to get the United States to settle all accounts between them, but she has failed to do so. Yesterday the whole day was taken up in the consideration of an amendment to raise a salary from $2,500 to $3,000. Yet here a rule is introduced that cuts off the consideration of the question of a settlement between the United States and the State of Virginia, and other States, Virginia has been endeavoring to secure for sixty years, and a State, too, which has been the most generous State to this Union of all the States in the Union, and yet we are to be cut off and can not get an opportunity to present our claims to have that account settled.

Now, I say that it is not fair to those States which stand here by the proposition in this bill as being in the attitude of defaulters. This is the only opportunity we have had to discuss the matter, and there are precisely the same kind of claims presented by other States as are claimed by the State of Virginia. I say it is not fair or just to cut off this opportunity for a discussion and settlement of those claims. I shall not vote for this rule unless ample time is given.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Having heard these statements, it appears there would be some justice in extending this time, and permitting these matters which have been passed over, or upon which an agreement has been made for time to be kept so far as possible; and therefore I suggest as a modification of the rule, that debate shall close at 5 o'clock this evening instead of 3:30.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me suggest to my friend that that does not obviate the difficulty in the case; and you could not obviate it by continuing debate until 5 o'clock.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think the agreements already made could be carried out in an hour and a half.

Mr. BURROWS. You can not carry them out. It is impossible.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. But if the rule is so modified as to permit it, why can not we carry it out?

Mr. BURROWS. That cuts off every other amendment. The whole time could be consumed in the consideration of one amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It does not cut out anything.

Mr. BURROWS. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he withdraw his order and modify it as he would like to and bring it in later.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I suggest the modification of the rule which I have designated, that debate continue until 5 o'clock, the vote to begin to-morrow immediately after the reading of the Journal; the bill to be reported from the committee to the House to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal, the hour and a half additional time to be devoted to the consideration of those matters on which gentlemen say an agreement has already been made.

Mr. HARTMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I have an amendment for an appropriation to maintain a school which was established in my State last year, and which has now 231 pupils, an appropriation which is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and is omitted from this bill. May I have an opportunity to offer that amendment?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The opportunity to offer that amendment is not cut off by this rule. The gentleman will certainly have an opportunity.

Mr. BURROWS. But I want to say to my friend that he will not have an opportunity to offer his amendment under this rule, because any amendment that is offered may be debated until 5 o'clock. If the rule had provided that upon any single amendment there should be only five or ten minutes' debate, then all these amendments might be reached; but the difficulty is that one amendment may take up the whole time.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not at all.

Mr. BURROWS. Then I can not read the English language.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The rule provides that we are to proceed under the five-minute rule, and it is to be expected that under the five-minute rule the Chairman will see that debate does not extend beyond the proper limit.

Mr. BURROWS. Does the gentleman mean to say that under the five-minute rule one amendment can not be debated more than five minutes?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If the rule is strictly construed. The practice has been very liberal I know, but under the rule you can stop debate at any time.

Mr. BURROWS. You can, if you can get a quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, if there is to be filibustering on that line, we shall only have to let those who do the filibustering suffer by it.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether this rule will cut off votes upon amendments that have been already offered but have not been voted upon, or the presentation of points of order that have been raised and reserved regarding such amendments?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It will not cut off the vote upon any of the amendments that have been offered. They are pending amendments, and are provided for in the rule.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. And it also gives a sufficient time for the presentation of questions arising on points of order?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Only ten minutes, which is more than sufficient for some of them. Now, I have asked gentlemen who are interested in the bill whether the modification of the order that I propose, extending the time until 5 o'clock, will be satisfactory.

Mr. McRAE. Does that preserve the agreements?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Using that hour and a half for the purpose of preserving any agreements that may have been made.

Mr. LYNCH. If the bond question does not go out on a point of order, there will be no necessity for extending the time on that.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I would like, with the consent of my colleague on the committee [Mr. OUTHWAITE], to ask unanimous consent that this bill be proceeded with in the usual way, and that the bill and any amendments that may be pending at 3 o'clock to-morrow be voted upon at that time. I do not see how there can be any objection to that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Why not let this report be withdrawn, trusting that the admonition which this committee has had that there is a disposition to bring in a rule will bring real consideration of the bill, if there has not been such up to this time. Let us devote to-day and to-morrow to the bill, and if the consideration of it is not carried on in good faith it will then, I submit, be time enough to bring in a new rule. This is an extraordinary bill; time is required for its proper consideration, and I do not believe there has been any filibustering up to this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS] asks unanimous consent that this bill be proceeded with in the usual way, that to-morrow at 3 o'clock it be reported back to the House, and that the vote be then taken.

Mr. SICKLES. Say Monday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Objection was made.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, I will amend the rule by striking out "3 o'clock and 30 minutes to-day" and inserting "3:30 p. m. to-morrow;" with the modification that the agreements heretofore made by the House and the committee shall be first acted upon. That gives an opportunity for carrying out all agreements that have been made. I demand the previous question upon that proposition.

Mr. PAYNE. Do not you propose to yield any time to this side?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I withdraw the demand for the previous question until the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] shall have exhausted his 15 minutes.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, when the House surrendered its powers to the Committee on Rules we were told that there was no surrender, that the whole matter was left in control of the House, and that whenever a rule was brought in that the majority did not agree to, the House could vote it down, and thus take its business into its own hands. I have been waiting for a year to see enough manhood manifested on the part of the members of this House to take the business of the House into their own hands in opposition to the Committee on Rules. Time and time again we have seen rules brought in here that cut off debate and cut off amendment, and bill after bill has gone from this House to the Senate not expressing the will or the mind of the House, simply because the Committee on Rules had interposed its power and compelled the House to submit to this dictation. Now the House has an opportunity to show the manhood of its individual members. The modification proposed in this rule does not help it at all.

Why, do gentlemen realize that the whole time from now till half past 3 o'clock to-morrow can under this proposed rule be consumed on points of order? Points of order can be raised on every paragraph; and with the usual number of members present an appeal can be taken on every paragraph of the sixty, yes, seventy odd pages of the bill yet to be read. Are you to be hoodwinked by any such proposition as that?

Some of the gentlemen whom I see here this morning are very much interested about the proposed removal of the Indian warehouse from New York to Chicago. I do not care anything about it myself. My constituents are not interested. Only for the general good of the Government am I interested at all. But are you gentlemen interested, and will you sit supinely by and not join in voting down this gag rule brought in here—the last and the worst of outrages, both grand and petty, attempted by the rulers of this House—the czars of this House—the Committee on Rules? Yet, I suppose you will walk up and take your medicine. The members who are interested in this bill, among them the gentleman from Arkansas, so much interested that his life work in Congress seems to be hanging in the balance upon this bill, will, I suppose, walk up and take their medicine.

When we call the roll and have the yeas and nays, I want to see how many men there are on that side of the House who do not belong absolutely to the Committee on Rules, who will not surrender their convictions, who will not surrender their judgment, who will not surrender their patriotism to the supposed exigency that compels the Committee on Rules to bring in this resolution when the House has not in front of it any business that will occupy more than one or two weeks. Why, the Committee on Rules will be in here before a great while, asking the House to save itself from bad legislation because it has nothing else to do.

Mr. BURROWS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this bill has taken much time in the Committee of the Whole; but it is a wonderfully important bill, and has in it more of change, more of important appropriations and proposed legislation than any Indian appropriation bill of which I have had knowledge in twenty years. Its consideration has not taken undue time; and we have just reached one important measure, and are about to reach still other important measures in the bill, which ought to be considered and settled in justice and righteousness after full debate and amendment by the people's representatives in Committee of the Whole. This rule cuts up such consideration by the root. Under this rule, if adopted, whether the time allowed for consideration be one day or two days, makes no difference; the right of consideration in the great Committee of the Whole House is practically destroyed.

What are we on now? The consideration of the Indian school appropriations have just been entered upon. Do gentlemen think that by adopting this rule they can avoid the responsibility of properly making those appropriations by abridging debate and cutting off amendment? We ought to consult, we ought to debate, we ought to amend, we ought to understand what appropriations should be made and how made; not in prejudice, but in the very right, as sensible men throughout the United States, American citizens of all churches and of no church would agree to. It is practicable to do this by entering upon the policy of vigorously expending Government money in Government schools and allowing all persons the largest liberty in education at private or church schools at their own expense. But you propose by this rule to place it out of the power of the minority; ay, more, if you adopt the rule, it will be placed out of the power of the majority to have honest debate and a fair vote upon these questions. Let gentlemen understand what they are doing when they adopt this rule.

One word further. There is no necessity for this haste. The Senate has not touched an appropriation bill. We are far ahead of the Senate. This House has not begun to take the time on appropriation bills that was occupied in the corresponding session of the Fifty-first Congress. I have here a statement made by the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, a correct and painstaking man. In the first session of the Fifty-first Congress we took sixty days in this House in the discussion and amendment of appropriation bills in the Committee of the Whole. Now, we have the time. Let us vote down this rule in the interest of fair play and sound legislation.

In conclusion, I again say if gentlemen adopt this rule they can not hereafter say that under the rules of the House they had no chance to discuss or amend, because you are now to make the rule that puts it out of the power of the majority to either amend or consider important legislation or appropriations proposed in this bill or to be proposed touching all the remaining provisions of the bill.

I yield back to the gentleman from Michigan the remainder of my five minutes.

Mr. BURROWS (addressing Mr. OUTHWAITE). Have you any time?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would like to have the gentleman from Michigan use the rest of his time.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the proposed rule as modified be read. I would like to hear the modification.

The Clerk read as follows the resolution as modified:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House bill 6913. That beginning on page 51, line 14, the bill shall be read through, and during such reading all points of order made against any provision in the bill shall be decided by the Chair, debate on each not to exceed ten minutes. At the conclusion of such reading the further consideration of the bill be resumed by the Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule, and amendments shall be in order to any part thereof. That on Saturday, after the call of committees for reports, the committee shall resume the consideration thereof; and at the hour of 3:30 p. m. on that day the bill as amended in the committee, with all pending amendments, be reported to the House; and that the previous question shall then be ordered on pending amendments and the bill to its final passage; and no intervening motion shall be in order until the bill is fully disposed of. This order not to interfere with any agreements as to debate that have heretofore been made; but the same shall be carried out within the time herein mentioned.

Mr. BURROWS. Now, Mr. Speaker, the only modification proposed by the gentleman from Ohio to this rule is the extension of the time until to-morrow afternoon at half past 3 o'clock, and also to permit the agreements made in Committee of the Whole for debate upon certain propositions to be carried out. How many there are of those propositions I do not know. But the modification does not meet the objection which I made to this order in the beginning.

While the order specifies that points of order may be made upon any portion of this bill and limits debate upon such a point of order to ten minutes, it does not limit debate upon amendments; and any gentleman getting the floor and proposing an amendment this afternoon can, under the practice in Committee of the Whole, consume the entire afternoon on that amendment; for he can move to strike out the last word, he can withdraw that amendment, somebody else can renew it; and thus debate can go on under the practice, and the whole time may be consumed.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] says that this resolution preserves pending amendments. But that clause relates entirely to the reporting of the bill back to the House. It provides that pending amendments shall be considered when the bill is reported to the House. But that provision does not refer to consideration in Committee of the Whole. I hope the resolution will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, it would probably be a very difficult thing for anyone on this side of the House to frame a rule or a resolution which would be entirely satisfactory to the last three gentlemen who addressed the House on this subject. The first presents to this side of the House the question of patriotism, and asserts that bills have been passed by the House, under orders from the Committee on Rules, which did not meet the approbation even of the gentlemen on the majority side of the House. That assertion is one the correctness of which I challenge.

No bill has ever passed this House driven through the House by a report from the Committee on Rules, as they were in the Fifty-first Congress, when the gentleman from Michigan and his colleagues on that side of the House saw no occasion to protest against it. He appeals to the manhood and the patriotism of the House, and presents himself as one by whom members on this side of the House shall pattern their patriotism and manhood in disposing of legislative questions. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] also takes up the subject, and in discussing it points out to the Democratic majority on this side of the House, as he usually does, with craft and cunning, the danger they are in; that they will not be able to control this bill, and that they will not be able, even in a majority, to do what they believe to be right and which their consciences approve concerning it, if they bind themselves, as he says they will be bound, by this rule. Such appeals, Mr. Speaker, are not worthy the consideration of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber.

This rule as now modified provides for keeping all of the agreements which have been heretofore made in Committee of the Whole, as to those important questions on which gentlemen have proposed, or propose, to address the committee. It provides ample time, as I said in my remarks a few moments ago, for the discussion of the important features of the bill. The conduct which we have witnessed from some individual members of the House in the consideration of the bill was not of a character to reflect honor or credit on the American House of Representatives.

Gentlemen point out dangers which do not exist except in their imagination, dangers which do not lurk in this order. There is no probability even that the proposition concerning the removal of the Indian warehouse from New York to Chicago will not have full and ample consideration, or that any gentleman who is interested in that matter shall not have a sufficient opportunity to present his views in the time here fixed. There is no probability that the proposition concerning the schools will be deprived of proper consideration.

Gentlemen familiar with the bill know that most of the remainder of it consists of treaties, and that page after page is filled up with the names of Indians, signers to the treaties, which are unnecessary even to read, and which can take up no time, at all events, in disposing of.

The rule proposes, and all it proposes is, that the bill shall be read through and points of order to portions of it disposed of, and then a fair opportunity offered for amendments, which may be proposed by any member of the committee. If gentlemen see proper to raise points of order against paragraphs of the bill as they are reached, they are permitted to do so under the rule, and debate on such points of order is limited to a reasonable time.

Under the terms of this rule, when a parliamentary question is under consideration and when an appeal will be submitted, if it shall be submitted to the Chair, we will not see, as we saw on yesterday, a gentleman from Iowa insisting upon reading a petition to the Congress of the United States and a list of names which occupied nearly a column of the RECORD, which was to have been read from the Clerk's desk at his request as a part of the parliamentary discussion on that point of order. This rule permits a discussion for ten minutes on a point of order; and if gentlemen can not make it clear in ten minutes' time as to what the point of order is and the reasons for or against it, then, without wasting any more time of the committee, it will be decided by the chairman of the committee without difficulty.

I ask the previous question on the rule as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURROWS) there were—ayes 128, noes 63.

So the previous question was ordered.

The question being taken on the adoption of the resolution there were, on a division (demanded by Mr. BURROWS), ayes 131, noes 6.

Mr. BURROWS. No quorum.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. OUTHWAITE and Mr. BURROWS as tellers at the desk.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 176, nays 76, answered "present" 3, not voting 97; as follows:

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish to obtain leave of absence for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He received a telegram that his wife was very sick, and so he has suddenly left the Hall.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] will be given indefinite leave of absence, on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. SORG with Mr. WEVER.

Mr. O'NEILL of Missouri with Mr. MERCER.

Mr. MUTCHLER with Mr. WHITE.

Mr. MOSES with Mr. WRIGHT of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMINETTI with Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. KILGORE with Mr. WILSON of Ohio.

Mr. MEYER with Mr. HULICK.

Mr. SCHERMERHORN with Mr. BELDEN.

Mr. WELLS with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Arkansas. My pair with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] was read, but I voted in order to make a quorum, that right being reserved.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. OUTHWAITE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the case of Andrew S. Bloom, Fifty-second Congress, there being no adverse report thereon.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a matter of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] states that he rises to a question of personal privilege.

[The foregoing is given as understood by the reporter. For incidental correction, see proceedings immediately following the conclusion of Mr. RICHARDSON'S statement.]

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for nearly ten years I have been a member of this House, and during that period I have never felt called upon to make a statement of matters personal to myself.

On yesterday an evening paper of this city, the News, contained in its local columns an article on the subject of the overhead trolley for street railroads in this city, in which reference was made to myself. The same paper also contained an editorial making reference to the same matter, and I now ask to have this editorial read at the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the matter referred to by the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

A JOB IN THE HOUSE.

Since Correspondents Edwards and Shriver were headed toward the jail for telling the truth about the sugar trust and the Senate, the News is a little timid. It knows some things about the Philadelphia overhead trolley syndicate and the House of Representatives, but being already under investigation by Mr. Quay's Senate, it is afraid to say very much. It is so frightened that it does not make any charges, but hopes the statements, more statements, mind you, in an article on its first page to-day will not result in the incarceration of its presses and paste-pots by an indignant Congress.

Those statements seriously affect the further usefulness of Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. They are to the effect that he used his position as a member of the House District Committee to unload some real estate on the Philadelphia syndicate, and four days later favorably reported the syndicate's Belt Line Railway bill to the House. This may be a perfectly legitimate manner of doing business on the outside by a member of Congress. That is for the House to decide. The News makes no charges; its statements simply tell the whole story, and quote from the records, which a House investigating committee can examine.

There is no malice in these statements of the News, only a desire to protect the interests of Washington, for which it hopes it will not be sent to jail. The statements show how the city is raped year after year; how official power is prostituted by men from far-off States, who have no love for the city, in the bargaining and sale of its franchises and the trading on its public interests. No wonder Mr. WALKER said that on District day reputable members told him to keep away from the House; that they never went; that it was a day of jobbery. The statements in the Richardson trolley road story of to-day throws a powerful light on the processes to which District legislation is subjected.

We have made no charges. The statements about Mr. RICHARDSON are sufficiently serious, however, it seems to us, to rob the Senate of a monopoly of holding an investigation, and to show the House that it, too, better investigate the whole District Committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that the editor states that there is no malice in the statements which are published, and further he says: "We have made no charges." The reflection on me in these articles is in part direct and in part by innuendo.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that as a public man all my official acts are entitled to be subjected to the severest scrutiny. I do not shrink from any investigation of them. On the contrary, I invite it. The newspapers have nearly always been as fair and just to me as I deserved as a public man, perhaps more so.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that under the circumstances I should make a plain statement of the facts of my connection with the sale of real estate which is referred to in these articles, and I will proceed to make that statement somewhat in detail, in order that I may be set properly before the House and the country, and I shall rely upon this statement as an answer to all the charges directly and indirectly made.

The facts are, that on May 26, 1891—not in October, 1892, as stated in the article—in connection with a gentleman from Murfreesboro, Tenn., Mr. C. H. Byrn, who is my son-in-law, I began purchasing from Mr. Gilbert Moyers, an attorney at law of this city, not a real estate dealer, part interests in said square 1030 in this city. His deed to us for the interests purchased then bears date May 26, 1891, and was duly recorded June 5, 1891. This was before I was ever on the District Committee or ever expected to have a place on it.

I was put upon the committee in the following December, when the Fifty-second Congress was organized, being placed there by the present occupant of the chair, without solicitation upon my part or knowledge that I was going to be placed upon that committee until the committees were announced at the Clerk's desk. The following year, in October, 1892, Byrn and I purchased other portions of said square from Mr. Moyers. The entire interest of Mr. Moyers in the square had been bought by him at different dates from different persons prior to this sale to us, for about $39,000. In his purchases of the property he had paid about one-third of the purchase money, say $13,000, thus leaving unpaid two-thirds thereof, or about $26,000.

He conveyed to Mr. Byrn and myself, as stated, an undivided one-half of his interest, and we paid him one-half he had paid, and we assumed the payment of the one-half of the remainder of the unpaid purchase money. We all expected to sell the property before having to meet the deferred payments for the same, in which hope, however, we were disappointed by reason of the dullness in the sale of real estate in the District of Columbia.

The unpaid purchase money became due in the summer of 1892, 1893, and 1894, and as the same fell due, not being able to pay, the same was extended by our paying interest, and in some instances commissions. Being unable to meet and discharge the remainder of the purchase money as the same matured, we agreed last fall and winter to sell the property. To this end I went to Austin P. Brown & Co. and Messrs. Emerson & Cahill, reliable real estate firms, and asked them to find a purchaser for the property.

About the first of March Mr. Brown reported to me that he could get a purchaser who would pay Mr. Moyers, Mr. Byrn, and myself the moneys we had paid out, which, as stated, was about one-third of the whole purchase money, say $13,000 with interest, and would assume to pay the remaining two-thirds thereof, say $27,000, and asked for an option to this effect for sixty days. Messrs. Emerson & Cahill at one time reported that they had secured a purchaser at about the cost of the property to us, but this offer failed for reasons not necessary to mention here.

Feeling unwilling to try to carry the debt longer, the offer of Mr. Brown was accepted by us, and was reduced to writing and signed by the parties. It is as follows:

CITY OF WASHINGTON, District of Columbia:

The undersigned, Gilbert Moyers, JAMES D. RICHARDSON, and C. H. Byrn, own jointly the west one-half of square 1030, Washington, D. C., which one-half contains about 112,000 square feet of ground, and includes sublots 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, the said Moyers owning one-half thereof, and said RICHARDSON and Byrn together the other one-half thereof. Said property was conveyed to them by deeds from various persons at different dates, all of which are duly registered in the office of the recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia. Of the purchase money for said property said Moyers, RICHARDSON, and Byrn have heretofore paid one-third thereof, $13,088.58, more or less, and in the proportion of one-half by said Moyers and the other half by RICHARDSON and Byrn together.

The remainder of the purchase money for said property is unpaid, being about two-thirds thereof, and amounts to about $28,000, and is a lien on all of said property, all of which is shown by proper deed and conveyances of record in said office of the recorder of deeds. Now it is hereby agreed by and between said Moyers, RICHARDSON, and Byrn, and the undersigned Austin P. Brown, that the said Brown shall become the purchaser of said property upon the condition set forth below, to wit:

That he shall within sixty days from date thereof pay to said Moyers, RICHARDSON and Byrn the purchase money they have heretofore paid for said property, $13,088.58, more or less, and also pay to them the several payments of interest they have made on the purchase money, amounting in the aggregate to $2,249.26, and will lawfully assume, and bind himself to pay the remainder of the purchase money on the said property, and save them from liability thereon.

The conveyance to him shall be in proper form, and shall convey all the right, title, and interest of said Moyers, RICHARDSON, and BYRN in said property to said Brown or his order, and will be properly executed upon the compliance by him with the conditions herein set forth. The title papers to said property are all duly recorded as hereinbefore stated, and are referred to for fuller description of the property mentioned herein, and for evidence of paid and unpaid purchase money thereon.

MARCH 12, 1894.

Signed,

JAMES D. RICHARDSON.
C. H. BYRN.
GILBERT MOYERS.
AUSTIN P. BROWN.

That is a copy, Mr. Speaker, but I hold in my hand the original, which any gentleman who desires to do so can see for himself.

Shortly after this, and in accordance with the terms of the option, Mr. Brown reported that he would consummate the sale of the property if we would make the deed. He prepared the deed to Mr. Henry Guillaume—who I afterwards learned was a clerk in his office—which was signed by us all on or about March 31, 1894. As I have stated, Messrs. Moyers, Byrn, and I were not able to pay the purchase money due thereon, and were glad to be relieved of our purchase The sale to Mr. Gillaume was consummated, and we were paid back the money which we had paid out for the property, Mr. Moyers receiving as his half of the same $7,964, and Mr. Byrn and I the same sum, or $3,982 each. I now hold in my hand the receipt of Mr. Moyers for said sum in the following words:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31, 1894.

Received of Austin P. Brown, agent, $7,964, in full payment of my interest in west half of square 1030.

GILBERT MOYERS.

And on the back of said receipt are these words:

Received of Austin P. Brown $7,964, in full payment of the interest of C. H. Byrn and myself in said square 1030, mentioned in within receipt. One-half of this sum, $3,982, belongs to me and the same sum to C. H. Byrn.

This March 31, 1894.

JAMES D. RICHARDSON.

The paper which I hold in my hand is the original, which has been kindly furnished to me by Mr. Brown.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it only remains, I think, for me to say, which I do here and now say, that we did not sell this property to Mr. Bowers of Philadelphia, as alleged in the article in the paper, or to his agent, Mr. Schoepf, manager and vice-president of the railroads known as the Belt Railroad and the Eckington Railroad in this city, nor to the street railroad company. It was a sale to Mr. Austin P. Brown, as I have stated; he, however, taking the deed to his clerk, Mr. Gillaume, for reasons which were satisfactory to him, and which I did not inquire into.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a letter from Mr. Schoepf. But before mentioning this, if my colleague [Mr. SNODGRASS] is here, it occurs to me that I ought to make one statement. In addition to having this property offered to Mr. Austin P. Brown & Co. and to Emerson & Cahill, the real estate agents of this city, I also offered it to my colleague [Mr. SNODGRASS] about the same time and at the same price; that is, the cost and interest to me, and he considered purchasing it for a while, but declined to do so for reasons satisfactory to him. I mention this, Mr. Speaker, simply to show that I was endeavoring to get rid of the property at first cost and interest.

Now, sir, I hold in my hand a letter, dated this morning, from W. Kesley Schoepf, vice-president and general manager of the Eckington and Soldiers' Home and Belt Railway Companies, the railroads which I have mentioned. It is in these words, and addressed to me:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: Having seen the article in the News of yesterday, in which it is charged that you had sold certain land to the Eckington and Soldiers' Home Railway Company, I would state that while engaged in looking for a suitable location for the proposed car barn and stables for the above-mentioned company Mr. Austin P. Brown called upon me and offered the west half of square 1030, at which point the East Washington extension terminates, at a price that was 10 cents less per square foot than any other property in this section, and suitable for the purpose named. I agreed with him to purchase the land, and until after that date I did not know that you were or ever had been the owner of the property.

Respectfully,

W. KESLEY SCHOEPF,
Vice-President and General Manager.

Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
House of Representatives United States, Washington, D. C.

I have also, Mr. Speaker, a letter from Mr. Brown, the purchaser of this property, dated June 15, addressed to me. He says:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1894.

DEAR SIR: The facts regarding the real estate referred to in an article published in the News of yesterday with which my name is connected, are as follows, to wit:

You requested me in January last to find a purchaser for the said real estate, stating that you and the other owners were very anxious to sell, and that you would be glad to let the property go at the price paid for the same and the interest thereon.

I informed you about the 1st of last March that if I could get an option for sixty days I had no doubt but that I would be able to dispose of the property. You secured the option and I sold the property, which was deeded to my clerk, Mr. Guillaume, at my request and was conveyed by him as directed by me.

You had no information from me as to whom I had sold the property to.

The statement that I told the Ninth street builder that I received the money from you to pay a note presented by him is false.

You are at liberty to use this statement if you so desire.

Very respectfully,

AUSTIN P. BROWN.

Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I submitted this statement this morning to Mr. Moyers, a reputable attorney of this city, from whom these purchases were made. I have his letter in my hand, which reads as follows:

Washington, D. C., June 15, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I have read your statement, to be made to the House to-day, in regard to the sale of certain lots of land located in square 1030, Washington, D. C., and find the same to be absolutely true in every particular.

The sale of said real estate was to Mr. Brown, a real estate agent of this city, without our knowledge of any interest or prospective interest of any railroad company of this city or elsewhere in the same.

Very respectfully, yours,

GILBERT MOYERS.

Hon. JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
House of Representatives, City.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have the statement of Messrs. Emerson & Cahill, which I believe I did not read, but will read now:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 15, 1894.

DEAR SIR: We have seen the article in the News, in which your name is mentioned. We have also read the statement which you make to the House to-day, and it is true in every particular so far as we are concerned. Both you and Col. Moyers authorized our firm to sell the property last winter at first cost to yourselves with interest.

Very respectfully,

EMERSON & CAHILL.

Hon. J. D. RICHARDSON,
House of Representatives.

Now, sir, this ended my connection with the matter, except that soon after the sale, as stated in the News article, a builder on Ninth street, I presume Mr. Z. Jones is referred to, called to see me about the payment of a debt due him of $1,252.55, being a part of the unpaid purchase money, saying he had seen Mr. Moyers about it and had been referred to me. I told Mr. Jones that we had sold the property, but that the purchaser from us would pay his debt and all the other unpaid purchase money. Of course I knew I was bound for it, as I have stated, and so I communicated with Mr. Brown, possibly by telephone, and I also went to his office in person, and asked him to pay Mr. Jones, which I was assured he would do, and which I was informed he did.

And now as to the reference in the article to the overhead trolley, I wish to state emphatically that never at any time or place has any human being asked me, or in any manner solicited me, to support any measure for the use of the overhead trolley in the city of Washington. I do not consider it would be a disgrace if I had been asked to do so, or if I favored it. But as a fact I have never favored the introduction of the overhead trolley on the principal streets of this city; and as I have stated, nobody has asked me to favor it. I do not favor its use on the Belt Line extension, or L street line, now pending before the House of Representatives; and I have never been asked by anybody to favor it on that road. On the other hand, I offered an amendment to the bill forever excluding its use on that L street line. Such is the position I now occupy upon it.

Now, one of the charges made is that I reported the House bill (H. R. 6596) on the 6th day of April, 1894, for the charter or for an amendment of the charter of the Belt line, to run on L street. I did so, Mr. Speaker, in the honest discharge of my duty as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It was the unanimous report of that committee, and I believed then, as I do now, that the bill should pass. I had introduced the bill in the House on the 22d of February, 1894; and it is a copy of a bill previously introduced into the Senate by Mr. GORMAN of Maryland.

I simply used the bill which he had introduced in the Senate, striking out only such words as made it applicable to the House. The report on this bill was made in pursuance of the recommendation of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. They recommended that it be changed from M street and placed upon L street, and the Committee on the District of Columbia made its report in accordance with their recommendation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I state that I have acted in all these proceedings in a proper manner; and I state that I have received no compensation, nor am I to receive any whatever for my services. I sold the property honestly and in good faith, and got back the money which I had put into it, with interest, and some little amount of taxes I had paid. I am content to leave this matter without further reference to it, and, as I have stated, confidently rely upon the honest judgment of all those who know me, and on the truth of the facts that I have given for my full vindication. I thank the House, Mr. Speaker, for its courteous attention. [Loud general applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under the order adopted the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'NEIL] will take the chair.

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry. Was this proceeding had by unanimous consent of the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked consent to make a personal explanation.

Mr. REED. Asked consent? Was unanimous consent asked?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked consent.

Mr. REED. Was that put to the House?

The SPEAKER. Of course that was put to the House. Why does the gentleman ask the question?

Mr. REED. Because I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman had been here he would probably have heard it. Under the order adopted the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will please take the chair.

Mr. REED. I am informed that it was not put to the House.

The SPEAKER. The House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will take the chair.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6913, and under the rule the Clerk will now proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BURROWS. I think it would be well if the Chair will interpret this order before the reading of the bill goes on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that under the provisions of the order the Clerk would now proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, sir. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether if any points of order are to be made against any portions of the bill they must be made during the first reading?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. I hope the Chair will so state; and if the points of order are not made during this first reading, the committee will be precluded, or any member of the committee will be precluded, from making points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands the rule.

Mr. BURROWS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Do I understand that the bill is to be read through and then to be re-read for amendments?

Mr. BURROWS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. When are amendments to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires information he will please address the Chair.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I desire to know at what point amendments are in order?

The CHAIRMAN. After the bill has been read, subject to points of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And amendments will then be in order to any part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. To any part of it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It will not be read a second time.

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

Mr. BURROWS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I am correct in the question I asked the Chair, that points of order must be made during this reading or not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. They must be made during this reading, or not at all.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. I was not in when the ruling was made. I want to know whether it will be absolutely necessary for the Clerk to read that portion of the bill that contains all those Indian names?

The CHAIRMAN. Unquestionably.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Then we will not get through by to-morrow at 3.30.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will get through by 3.30.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. All right; I will wait for the pronunciation. [Laughter.]

The Clerk, reading the bill, read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the several Indian tribes interested therein, the face value of certain nonpaying State bonds or stocks, including certain abstracted bonds described on pages 153 and 154 of annual estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895 (House Executive Document No. 5, Fifty-third Congress, second session), to draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, as provided by the act of April 1, 1880; and thereupon said State bonds or stocks shall become the property of the United States.

For the payment of interest on said bonds for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, $78,320, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to sell and dispose of said bonds with the accumulated interest thereon at the best price that can be realized for the same, and to that end he shall at once advertise, for thirty days, inviting sealed proposals, and shall accept only such bids as may equal or exceed the face value of the principal of such bonds as the bidder proposes to buy.

Mr. OUTHWAITE (before the reading of the section was completed). Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order may be reserved. It was agreed, by unanimous consent, that at this time the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] should have thirty minutes to address the committee, and that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] should have the same time.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Does not the rule that we are now operating under overrule all other agreements until the bill shall have been read through, and do we not then come back to execute the agreement?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. We are operating under the direct order of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand the order, the debate on this provision by the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Kansas is to occur now, and then will come the ruling on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how the gentleman in charge of the bill can make any arrangement of that kind. The gentleman from Arkansas has no more rights here than we who represent Tennessee have, upon a matter involving the same question, and to a certain extent the same points. Why exclude Tennessee and turn over all this privilege to Arkansas? I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that the rule as originally brought in by the Committee on Rules was afterward modified so as to provide that any arrangements or agreements that had been made should be enforced. Now, early in the consideration of this bill, before it was taken up under the five-minute rule, unanimous consent had been given that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] should have thirty minutes each when this portion of the bill was reached.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, however, that rule may have been adopted—and I make no criticism upon it—why should Arkansas have any right that is denied to Tennessee?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must see that that is a matter that the Chair has no control over.

Mr. COX. One more question, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] has the floor.

Mr. COX. Wait a moment. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] raises a point of order here.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on that point of order will take place after the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Kansas have been heard.

Mr. COX. Will the Chair just bear with me for a moment until I can get my position right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. COX. I understand that the point of order goes to both these sections of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Only one has been read. The point can be raised as to the other afterwards.

Mr. COX. Well, I reserve the point of order upon both.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. It seems to me that under the terms of the order the Chair should determine the point of order now, because the rule declares that the Chair shall pass upon the points of order. The latter portion of the rule, modified after it was brought into the House, preserves previous agreements. I think this debate should occur at the close of the reading of the bill, or certainly after the point of order is disposed of. The bill is read now simply for points of order, and for the information of the House, and I think it would be well for the Chair to dispose of the point of order now, and let the debate take place after the reading is completed. In that way, it seems to me, the Chair would carry out the order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will keep the agreement that has been made, and will now recognize the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] for thirty minutes.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. As I understood the reading, the Clerk read only the first paragraph of the second section. I desire to ask whether it is not the opinion of the Chair that the whole of that section should be read?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I was under the impression that the whole section had been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will complete the reading of the section.

The Clerk read the second paragraph of section 2, as above.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I make the point of order against this whole section that it is new legislation, and does not on its face reduce expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. To save the trouble of offering an amendment to the bill, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he except from his point of order the first three lines of the second paragraph, which simply maket he ordinary appropriation which, of course, has to be made "for the payment of interest on said bonds for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894—1894, not 1895—$78,320."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I have no objection to those lines remaining in.

Mr. HOLMAN. So the point of order is not made as to the first three lines of the second paragraph.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the point of order against that part of the second section beginning at the word "and," in line 16, and ending with the paragraph.

Mr. COX. And I desire to reserve the point of order on the section commencing on line 1, page 59, and extending down to and including line 23, on the same page.

Mr. HOLMAN. Except the three lines I have indicated.

Mr. COX. No; I do not except anything.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CRAIN] desires to make a brief statement, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. CRAIN. Under the decision of the committee or of the House, I was authorized to occupy thirty mintues during the discussion of this bill under the five-minute rule. I wish now to transfer my time to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. SWANSON. I reserve that time until the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] gets through.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the Committee on Indian Affairs has called the attention of Congress to and made it possible for us to legislate with reference to bonds of certain States held by the United States for the Indian trust fund. Early in the first Administration of President Cleveland the Treasurer, Mr. Jordan, took up the question of the indebtedness from the several States to the United States and to the Indian trust fund, and I will ask the Clerk to read the following correspondence had upon the subject at that time, from which the legal status will be very clearly understood.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, May 7, 1885.

SIR: My attention having been called to certain bonds and stocks of the Indian trust fund, held in custody in this office, on which principal and interest are due and unpaid, I have the honor to submit at once the accompanying statement of such bonds.

Under the act of June 10, 1876, Revised Statutes, volume 19, page 58, transferring the Indian trust fund from the Department of the Interior to the custody of this office, it is made the duty of the Treasurer of the United States to make all purchases and sales of bonds and stocks authorized by treaty stipulations or by acts of Congress, when requested so to do by the Secretary of the Interior, and to collect all interest falling due upon the bonds and stocks so held.

The principal and interest of a large number of these bonds have become due and remain unpaid, some of them for many years.

While it is made the duty of the Treasurer, under the act, to make all purchases and sales of bonds and stocks when requested so to do by the Secretary of the Interior, and to collect all interest falling due without such request, there may be a question as to the responsibility or duty of the Treasurer in reference to such past-due bonds and the interest thereon. I desire, therefore, for my guidance and information (if any action is to be taken by this office), to know—

(1) What steps are necessary to collect the principal of overdue State bonds, or to prevent statutes of limitation in the respective States from barring any action that may hereafter become necessary.

2. What steps are necessary to collect past-due interest on such bonds, or on bonds not yet matured.

3. What proceedings should be taken where the bonds are liens upon railroads and other corporations, as in the case of some of the bonds of the State of North Carolina.

Formal demand has been made for the payment of certain North Carolina bonds and refused, and correspondence has been had with the authorities of States in reference to the payment of past-due bonds with similar results.

Under section 3481, Revised Statutes United States, moneys due certain States have been stopped by this Department and the amount applied to the payment of interest due. The items are set forth in the accompanying list.

The statutes of the different States authorizing these bonds are not accessible to this office, and therefore the conditions under which the bonds were issued and the full nature of the liens are not known here.

Several of the State authorities have made propositions, authorized by their respective Legislatures, for the exchange of bonds at certain rates for those of a new issue, which propositions could not be entertained without the authority of Congressional action.

If it shall be held that further demands be made for the payment of overdue principal, or that demands be made or suits instituted for the payment of overdue interest, I respectfully ask for instructions.

Very truly,

C. N. JORDAN,
Treasurer United States.

Hon. DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

(Statement of bonds and stocks inclosed with letter.)

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., May 20, 1885.

SIR: I have received your letter, "J. C. B.," of the 7th instant, asking for information respecting your duties as custodian of certain bonds and stocks of the Indian trust fund, under the act of June 10, 1876.

In reply I inclose herewith copy of communication, dated 22d instant, from the Solicitor of the Treasury, to whom your letter had been referred, stating his views on the subject of your inquiry.

Very respectfully,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

The TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
OFFICE OF SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C., May 22, 1885.

SIR: By the act of June 10, 1876, the securities held by the Secretary of the Interior in trust for the benefit of Indian tribes were transferred to the custody of the United States Treasurer.

It was made the duty of this officer to collect the interest falling due thereon and deposit the same, and issue certificates of deposit therefor in favor of the Secretary of the Interior as such trustee, and to make purchases and sales of the securities authorized by treaty or acts of Congress when requested by the Secretary of the Interior.

From a statement made by the Treasurer it appears that the principal and interest of a large number of these securities have become due and have remained unpaid, some of them for years.

He asks, in view of this fact, what steps are necessary for him to take to collect the principal and interest of overdue State bonds, and what proceedings should be taken where the securities are liens on railroads or other corporations.

The statute to which I have referred places a certain responsibility on the Treasurer. He is to be the custodian of the bonds. He is to collect the interest as it falls due, and he is to make purchases and sales of bonds when requested so to do by the Secretary of the Interior. His duties, it seems to me, as defined by the act, are ministerial simply.

If the principal of the stock or bonds or the interest on the same falls due and is not paid on demand made by the Treasurer of the United States, that fact should be communicated by him to the trustee, the Secretary of the Interior.

Whether or not such suit should be brought or other proceedings taken to compel payment from the defaulting maker of the bonds or other securities rests with the Secretary of the Interior, the trustee.

Very respectfully,

A. McCUE,
Solicitor of the Treasury.

Hon. DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

This correspondence was then referred to the Secretary of the Interior, with the accompanying letter, the reply to which is herewith given:

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, May 28, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of an opinion of the Hon. A. McCue, Solicitor of the Treasury, delivered to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, in reference to certain unpaid stocks and bonds of the Indian trust fund, in response to a request made by myself on the 7th instant, a copy of which is also inclosed.

If, in pursuance of this opinion, it is necessary to take any action in reference to the unpaid principal and interest of said bonds, I respectfully ask for instructions in relation thereto.

Very respectfully,

C. N. JORDAN,
Treasurer United States.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 7, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th of May last, inclosing, for the information of the Secretary of the Interior, as trustee for certain Indian trust funds, a copy of an opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury regarding the duties of the Treasurer of the United States in the matter of certain unpaid State stocks and bonds belonging to the Indian trust fund.

The State bonds now belonging to the Indian trust fund which have matured and remain unpaid are as follows: * * *

The interest on these bonds is also due and unpaid by the States for different and various periods.

The Indian trust funds were invested in these bonds by the Secretary of the Interior prior to 1861. The laws governing the matter at the time of purchase will be found in the act of January 9, 1837 (section 2096, R. S.), and act of September 11, 1841 (section 3659, R. S.).

By the act of June 10, 1876 (10 Statutes, 58), the stocks, bonds, securities, etc., of the Indian trust fund were transferred to the Treasurer of the United States as custodian, and it was thereafter made his duty to collect the interest theron as it became due, etc.

The Solicitor holds in the opinion referred to that the Treasurer's duties as defined by this last-named act are "ministerial simply."

"If the principal of the stock or bonds or the interest on the same falls due and is not paid on demand by the Treasurer of the United States, that fact should be communicated by him to the trustee, the Secretary of the Interior. The duty of the Treasurer in this regard ends here. Whether or not suit should be brought or other proceedings taken to compel payment from the defaulting maker of the bonds or other securities rests with the Secretary of the Interior, the trustee."

In view of this opinion, you request instructions in relation to the unpaid principal and interest of said bonds, if it is necessary to take any action in relation thereto.

This matter has heretofore been considered by Congress. By the act of March 3, 1865 (13 Statutes, 539), appropriations were made for the Indians for whom the nonpaying bonds were held, in sums equal to the interest then due and unpaid. Since that date annual appropriations have been made to meet the unpaid interest, not only on the bonds not yet matured, but also on those which have matured.

The act of March 2, 1867 (14 Statutes, 497), required:

"That the Attorney-General of the United States shall be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the condition of all funds held in trust by the United States for said tribe (Chickasaw) and for all other tribes of Indians, and what proceedings should be taken for the security of the United States in respect to the same, and report thereon to Congress on the first Monday in December next."

The report of the honorable Attorney-General made in compliance with this law is found in House Executive Document No. 59, Fortieth Congress, second session. The concluding portion of the report is as follows:

"So far as the States are liable upon these, either as principal obligors under the bonds issued by them respectively, or as guarantors of bonds issued by private or municipal corporations, I see no ground upon which that liability can be enforced either at law or in equity. A State can be sued only by its own consent. I am not advised that either of these States has, by its own consent, submitted itself to suit in any court. Nor is there a case made here for original suits against either of these States in the Supreme Court of the United States under the Constitution of the United States; for whether we regard these bonds as belonging to the United States or to the respective Indian tribes, the right to bring an original suit upon them against a State in the Supreme Court of the United States does not exist either in favor of the United States or any of these Indian tribes; for neither the United States nor an Indian tribe is a foreign state within the meaning of the constitutional provision, and as such entitled to bring an original suit against a State in the Supreme Court of the United States. But if any of these States hold claims against the United States, it may be deemed expedient to exercise the right of retention and application in the nature of a set-off, following the precedent set by the joint resolution of March 3, 1845 (5 Statutes at Large, page 801).

"This resolution is as follows:

"'That whenever any State shall have been or may be in default for the payment of interest or principal on investments in its stocks or bonds, held by the United States in trust, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to retain the whole, or so much thereof as may be necessary, of the percentage to which such State may be entitled of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands within its limits, and apply the same to the payment of said interest or principal, or to the reimbursement of any sums of money expended by the United States for that purpose.'

"As to the remedy upon the bonds issued by private or municipal corporations by action at law to recover the amount due for principal or interest, or by proceedings in foreclosure, where the bonds are secured by mortgage, or in mandamus to compel the levying of a tax by municipal corporations, in order to provide payment, the remedy would be the same in favor of the United States as in favor of any individual creditor upon the bonds.

"I am at a loss to suggest any specific measure for further security in respect to these bonds. But it may happen that the indebted States and corporations may offer propositions for compromise favorable to the bondholders, and Congress may deem it expedient to give the Secretary of the Interior authority to entertain, and, in the exercise of a proper discretion, to agree to such propositions."

Sums of money found by the Treasury due the States in default of payment of interest on bonds have been from time to time covered into the Treasury to reimburse the United States for moneys appropriated by reason of such default.

The authorities of the State of North Carolina submitted in 1883 a proposition for the substitution of the old bonds of that State for those of a new issue, authorized by act of the State Legislature. It was considered by my predecessor on December 11, 1883, who, under the circumstances of the case, declined to accede to the proposition, stating among other reasons that he doubted whether it would be proper for the Secretary of the Interior to make the exchange without the grant of special legislation therefor by Congress. Bills were pending in the Forty-eighth Congress which contemplated the granting of the necessary authority, but no law was enacted on the subject.

The facts regarding these State bonds which have matured, as well as those upon which instalments of interest are past due, are essentially the same or similar to those which obtained at the time of the report made by the honorable Attorney-General, whose opinion and conclusion on the subject are quoted above.

In view of the opinion of the Attorney-General, and of the further facts herein set out, the Secretary of the Interior does not consider it necessary or proper that any further means should be attempted with reference to the collection of the unpaid principal and interest of the bonds under consideration until appropriate legislation therefor shall have been enacted by Congress.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary and Trustee.

Hon. C. N. JORDAN,
Treasurer United States.

Extract from Treasurer Jordan's report for 1885-'86:

The bonds held by this office should receive the serious attention of the legislative power, the greater part of these bonds having been lying in the vaults of the Treasury, paying no interest save such as may have been sequestered from sums due the respective defaulting States, notwithstanding the fact that these States have in great part compromised with their creditors, and are now paying interest on a portion or the whole of their debt. These securities have cost the United States par, and there would seem to be no good reason why proper efforts should not be made to obtain payment in full or effect some compromise with the insolvent States.

By a former ruling of this Department it has been held that money due the respective defaulting States could not be seized except for the current interest, and that no attention should be paid to the fact that by reason of default the principal had become due. The Treasurer has advised, under date of October 8, 1886, each of the Secretaries and accounting officers who may be called upon to settle the accounts of these States, that all sums due the respective States should be held by them in order that such sums shall be applied to the payment of the principal or interest, or both, when any indebtedness from the Government to these States may arise. The correspondence in regard to this matter is herewith submitted.

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, October 8, 1886.

SIR: Referring to section 3431, Revised Statutes of the United States, providing for the retention of moneys due from the United States to any State that may be in default in the payment of principal or interest on stocks or bonds issued by said State and held in trust by the United States, I have the honor to call your attention to the following States whose bonds are held in this office in trust, on which principal and interest are due and unpaid; and to request that payment of moneys due any of said States be withheld and this office advised of such action: Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia.

Very respectfully,

C. N. JORDAN,
Treasurer United States.

To the FIRST COMPTROLLER.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 27, 1893.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of September 10, instant, referring to me House bill No. 117, "to authorize a compromise and settlement with the State of Arkansas," with the request for my opinion as to the propriety of passing said bill.

I transmit herewith a report from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which contains all the facts shown by the records of his office relative to the claims of the State against the United States.

I have no information as to what amount of bonds and coupons of the State of Arkansas are held by the United States in trust, or otherwise, nor of other indebtedness arising under claims by the Government against said State.

I would suggest that the bill be referred to the proper Department to ascertain such indebtedness. In the absence of such information I am unable to express an opinion upon the merits of the bill.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS C. McRAE,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands, House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., October 21, 1893.

SIR: I am in receipt by departmental reference of September 12, 1893, from Hon. THOMAS C. McRAE, chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House of Representatives, H. R. bill 117, entitled "An act to authorize a compromise and settlement with the State of Arkansas," with his request for an opinion as to the propriety of passing the same.

By this bill it is provided that the United States "cancel and deliver to the proper officer of the State of Arkansas all the bonds and coupons issued by said State now owned or held in trust by the United States" upon the relinquishment by the State of all her "claims and demands against the United States for the 5 per cent fund allowances under the act approved June 23, 1836, * * * for a portion of the distribution fund under the act approved September, 1841, for indemnity under the acts approved March 2, 1855, March 3, 1857, and under this act, and for all swamp and overflowed lands under the act approved September 28, 1850, not heretofore approved to the State," and for keeping prisoners under Executive order of February 5, 1867.

The records of this office disclose that the sum of $234,281.57 accrued to the State under the act of June 23, 1836, prior to June 30, 1892, and that the sum of about $310 has accrued to the State under that act during the year 1893. If the rule announced by the Supreme Court, in Iowa vs. McFarland (110 U. S. 471), relative to lands appropriated by military land warrant locations continues to be applied to lands taken under the homestead laws, but little will accrue to the State under this act in the future; 5,531,314.10 acres have been entered under the homestead law, 2,263,226.92 acres have been located with bounty land warrants, and 880 acres with scrip.

Prior to repeal of the act of September 4, 1841, the sum of $5,012.16 was found to be due the said State under that act, but no part of that amount has ever been paid. No money has ever been paid and no certificates have ever been issued to said State under said acts of March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and it is at this time impossible to state accurately how much is due the State from that source as indemnity in land and money.

On January 24, 1889, Commissioner Stockslager, after evidently careful examination of the records of this office, furnished a statement showing that 200,750 acres of selected swamp lands in said State had been sold for $196,-990, 106,500 acres had been located with warrants, and 55,529 had been taken under the homestead law.

Selections aggregating 3,656,312.63 acres have been made by said State under act of September 28, 1850, and of these selections approvals have been made amounting to 7,638,987.45 acres, leaving an apparent claim remaining of 967,325.18 to be adjusted, but it is estimated that a large per cent of this may be included in that portion of the original claim already rejected by this Department or in duplicate selections.

It is not possible for me to give at this time anything like an exact estimate of the amount of land in place now claimed under this act, as to do so would involve the expenditure of much time and labor, and I presume this report is desired as early as possible.

The foregoing comprises all the facts shown by the record of this office relative to the claims of the State against the United States. I have no information at my command which would enable me to estimate the value of the additional claim for keeping prisoners under said Executive order, or of the "bonds and coupons" now owned and held in trust by the United States. In view of the fact that many of these claims are growing old, and their adjustment and settlement is likely to be a source of much annoyance and will involve a large amount of labor and cost, both on the part of the State and of this Department, it is deemed advisable to adopt some equitable and fair method which would lead to a speedy and complete adjustment of the whole matter.

The General Assembly of the State of Arkansas on the 8th day of April, 1889, passed the following act, fully empowering the governor to compromise and settle the claims of the State, to wit:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas, That the governor be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to enter into negotiations with the proper authorities of the United States, with a view of compromising, adjusting, and settling all or any of the claims of the State of Arkansas that have accrued or that may hereafter accrue under existing and future laws and grants; and he is further authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and settle the same upon such terms and conditions as he may deem just and right, after having examined into all the facts in relation thereto, the sum or sums agreed upon for such claim or claims as he may compromise and adjust to be applied upon the bonds of the State owned by the United States. The governor is fully empowered to relinquish and quitclaim to the United States any or all claims or demands adjusted or unadjusted upon the surrender to the State of such of her bonds as he may stipulate for in the compromise."

I am of the opinion that Congress by appropriate legislation should vest in some Department of the Government ample authority to compromise and settle with the State of Arkansas the several claims hereinbefore referred to. By analogy it would seem that such authority should be committed to the Department of the Interior. But whether the compromise is proposed to be effected by a commission created directly by Congress, or through the medium of agents appointed by Department, this office will be pleased to expedite by all means in its power a successful compromise of the existing differences.

Very respectfully,

S. W. LAMOREUX, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., December 8, 1893.

SIR: Referring to your written request for an expression of my opinion as to the advisability of the passage of House bill 117, and to several more recent interviews on the same subject, and requesting information concerning the condition of the indebtedness of the State of Arkansas to the United States as shown by the records and files of the Treasury Department, I have the honor to state that some legislation by Congress seems desirable if not indispensible to facilitate a satisfactory settlement and adjustment of the complex and long-standing differences between the Government and the State of Arkansas growing out of their mutual claims and demands, and I therefore heartily approve the plan that looks to such appropriate legislation.

It appears to me, however, the bill submitted does not give sufficient power and discretion to the proposed contracting powers or their agents to cover so fair and full an adjustment of such differences as is desirable, since it seems to contemplate only a mutual cancellation and surrender or discharge of all claims or obligations that each may have against the other, without regard to balances.

I would therefore suggest and recommend that the bill be so amended as in substance to authorize the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury, or three such competent persons as they may select or cause to be selected on behalf of the United States, to fully settle, compromise, and adjust the differences contemplated herein with the governor of the State of Arkansas, or with such person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of that State to act in its behalf in the premises.

The accompanying statement, compiled from the files and records of this Department, shows approximately and as accurately as can be ascertained, in all probability, until a final adjustment is had, the state of the differences in question so far as they pertain to the Treasury Department.

The more difficult matters of adjustment perhaps being those growing out of the claim of Arkansas against the General Government, in connection with the public lands, you are respectfully referred to the Secretary of the Interior for any information connected with that branch of the subject of differences.

Respectfully, yours,

J. G. CARLISLE, Secretary.

Hon. THOMAS C. MCRAE,
Chairman Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MCRAE. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have here the recommendation of the late Treasurer Jordan and the lamented Lamar when he was Secretary of the Interior, and also the present Secretaries of the Treasury and Interior, that authority should be given to compromise and settle these old matters. It is perfectly apparent that no settlement can be had until there is some appropriate legislation upon the subject. I have labored hard to have such legislation so far as the bonds of Arkansas are concerned, and I submit that pending such measures the proposition to sell her bonds is a most remarkable one.

I can not believe that those who brought it here understood all the facts growing out of the complex and long-standing differences between the State of Arkansas and the United States. I desire to briefly state all the facts. The mutual claims, though complicated, ought to be understood by Congress before it passes any law to sell bonds against which the plea of payment is alleged, and if the committee will give me attention I will try to state the history of these transactions and the present status, so far as the State which I in part represent is concerned. The State of Arkansas, in the year 1838, borrowed from the Smithsonian Institution fund, which was then in the United States Treasury, the sum of $538,000, and issued State bonds therefor, dated January 1, 1838, bearing 6 per cent interest, $500,000 of which were redeemable October 26, 1861, and $38,000 January 1, 1868.

The State ceased to pay interest on $404,000 of the above loan January 1, 1842; the Smithsonian Institution fund was reimbursed by appropriation of Congress August 10, 1846 (9 Statutes, 102). An adjustment made by the Secretary of the Interior with the State by virtue of the act of December 13, 1872 (17 Statutes, 397), whereby certain Indian trust bonds were funded, resulted in the issue of State bonds to cover the indebtedness due from the State arising from appropriations to pay interest accrued, but for the payment of which the State was in default.

The amount of interest thus appropriated for was $91,800; but the United States had withheld $7,677.80 due the State for the care of military convicts, and in the adjustment this sum was deducted, leaving a balance in favor of the United States on account of interest appropriated for of $84,122.20. The State paid $122.20 in cash and delivered to the United States $84,000 in 6 percents, dated January 1, 1870, redeemable January 1, 1900. These bonds are owned by the United States.

This adjustment also resulted in the issue by the State of $168,-000 funded stock, 6 percents, dated January 1, 1870, redeemable January 1, 1900, and the payment of $300 in cash. These bonds belong to the Indian trust fund, and are a part of the bonds involved in the pending bill.

Three thousand dollars in registered 5 per cents, dated January 1, 1837, redeemable January 1, 1887, bonds of the State of Arkansas, were also acquired under authority of an appropriation made by Congress to pay Hiram R. Pitchlyn the proceeds of the sales of two quarter sections of land which were sold and the proceeds invested in the stock of the State of Arkansas, pursuant to the provisions of the eighth article of the treaty with the Chickasaw Indians. (10 Statutes, 43.) It will thus be seen that the United States holds in its own right, in all, bonds of the State of Arkansas, the principal of which amounts to $625,000, all of which are in the Treasury.

The Treasurer of the United States, as custodian for the Secretary of the Interior, trustee, holds the $168,000 in Arkansas bonds belonging to the Indian trust fund before mentioned, and these are some of the bonds now sought to be sold by the second paragraph of the pending section.

No interest has been paid either on those bonds ($168,000) belonging to the Indian trust fund or those held for the United States ($84,000) since 1874.

The State ceased to pay interest on $366,000 of the Smithsonian Institution loan January 1, 1842; on $1,000 July 1, 1852, and on $133,000 July 1, 1860, and on that part of the loan redeemable in 1868 ($38,000) it ceased to pay interest January 1, 1842. On the $3,000 registered 5 per cents no interest has been paid since July 1, 1876.

But the Treasury Department has retained under joint resolution, March 3, 1845 (5 Statutes, 801), and section 3481, Revised Statutes, the sum of $204,410.75, accruing to the State under the act of June 23, 1836, on account of 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale of lands in the State of Arkansas. There were two instalments found due, but never paid to the State, under the distribution act of September 4, 1841 (Statutes 5, page 453); one, June 30, 1842, for the sum of $4,482.79, and the other, July 1, 1842, for $529.37, making a total of $5,012.16, also held and which should be applied to the bonds of the State.

The State authorities insist, and I think properly, that the sums thus retained, with what is fairly and equitably due on the unadjusted swamp-land claim of the State, will more than pay what she owes on the bonds. The State claims and is, beyond question, entitled to a large cash and land indemnity under the acts approved March 2, 1855 (10 Stat., 634), and March 3, 1857

(11 Stat., 251). Nothing has ever been allowed or credited to her on this account, as has been done for other swamp-land States. The Interior Department admits that the State has a just claim for both cash and land, but the amount has never been officially determined and credited on her debt. In fact, there is no law authorizing any such credit to be entered by the Department, and it can not be done without legislation of the character I will propose.

The Government of the United States has sold about 200,750 acres of swamp land, the property of the State, for which it received the sum of $196,990, and has also disposed of, for land warrants, scrip, and homestead, 162,080 acres of other swamp-lands, worth at $1.25 per acre, the sum of $202,600. The State should therefore in common fairness be credited with the sums so received, as of the years in which the sales were made, and should also be allowed $1.25 per acre for such lands as were otherwise erroneously disposed of.

The total claim on account of swamp-land indemnity is $399,590. So we have an aggregate, about which there should be no question, of about $609,012, to say nothing of the contested claim for 967,325 acres of swamp lands selected, and still pending before the Interior Department, nor for 5 per cent of the value of lands located with land warrants and as homesteads, which if allowed would more than double the claim of the United States.

A large part of these swamp selections the State insists should have been approved to her because the field notes show them to be swamp, and the United States have agreed to settle by the field notes. The United States surveyor-general certified all of them to be of the character contemplated by the act. The State also insists that as a matter of simple justice she is entitled to have and ought to be credited with 5 per cent on all public lands entered under the homestead laws and located with military bounty land warrants and scrip, estimated at the minimum price for Government lands, $1.25 per acre, but the payment now insisted upon does not depend upon the allowance of this nor is it involved in the amendment I will submit. My apology for referring to it is to show how strong the equities in favor of Arkansas are.

In 1836, when the State was admitted to the Union, there was no way of disposing of public lands except by cash sale or for warrants and scrip. The homestead law was not passed until 1862, and the State, with such a contract as it made, does not think it just to her that the General Government should be allowed to adopt a policy that will have the effect to diminish the fund, upon which she had a right to rely, for the payment of the bonds in question. She did not borrow the money until after the United States had solemnly pledged her 5 per cent of all the proceeds of the public lands within her borders for making public roads and canals. She had a right to rely upon this fund to aid her in repaying the money she borrowed The greater part of all lands disposed of in Arkansas within the last thirty years have been given away by the United States under the homestead law, and nothing has been allowed the State for it.

Up to June 30, 1887, the date of the latest statement I now have, the aggregate of such lands taken as homesteads and with bounty warrants and scrip was 7,795,451.02 acres. Estimating them at the minimum price fixed by the law, the State would be entitled to the sum of $487,215.65 for such lands. This is more than has been allowed on all sales under the present rulings of the Department.

I am aware that the Supreme Court, in the 5 per cent cases (110 United States Reports, 471), has decided that the States are not entitled to the percentage on the value of the lands disposed of by the United States in satisfaction of military land warrants; but in view of the very able dissenting opinion of the lamented Justice Miller, concurred in by Justice Field, and of the fact that the question of jurisdiction was not passed upon by the court at that time, I do not regard the question as finally settled against the State.

The question of allowing the claims for such a percentage on homesteads has never been presented to the court, and besides the personnel of the court has very much changed since the land-warrant decisions were rendered. But whether this rule will be adhered to or not, I ask, Mr. Chairman, is it right and just in a matter of sacred contract like the admission of a State into this great Union for the United States on one part to make so radical a change in the disposition of the lands as to destroy the consideration passing to the State? Against the right and objection of the State, the other party to the agreement, can the Government honestly rely upon such an unfair and illiberal construction made by its own courts?

This Government can, in my opinion, afford to be honest with the States in matters of contract and account like this. I believe that it will in the end be fair, and I predict the time will come when the injustice of this ruling of the court will be corrected.

The act of June 23, 1836, for the admission of Arkansas (5 Statutes, page 58), says that in lieu of the propositions submitted to Congress by the Territorial convention, which are rejected, the following propositions are hereby offered to the General Assembly of the State of Arkansas for their free acceptance or rejection, which, if accepted, shall be obligatory upon the United States. They were formally accepted by the General Assembly. So the propositions were the result of a negotiation. It was a fair contract, entered into between sovereign parties. The third item of the contract, which was accepted by the State and is yet obligatory upon the United States, is as follows:

Third. That 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale of lands lying within the said State, and which shall be sold by Congress, from and after the 1st day of July next, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for making public roads and canals within the said State, under the direction of the General Assembly thereof. * * * Provided, That the five foregoing propositions herein offered are on the condition that the General Assembly or Legislature of the said State, by virtue of the power conferred upon it by the convention which framed the constitution of the said State, shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that the said General Assembly of said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil within the same by the United States, nor with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers thereof; and that no tax shall be imposed on lands the property of the United States; and that in no case shall nonresident proprietors be taxed higher than residents; and that the bounty land granted, or hereafter to be granted, for military services during the late war shall, whilst they continue to be held by the patentees or their heirs, remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under authority of the State, whether for State, county, township, or any other purpose, for the term of three years from and after the date of the patents respectively.

The State had the right to tax all the lands of the Government as soon as disposed of, and had other rights as to the disposal, but in consideration that she would agree not to interfere with the primary disposal, nor tax nonresidents higher than residents, nor to tax the property of the United States, nor lands granted for military services for three years after the date of the patents, either for State, county, or township purposes, the United States agreed to pay the State 5 per cent of the net proceeds of the sale of lands lying within the said State, and which shall be sold by Congress from and after the 15th day of June, 1836.

Land warrants were receivable for public lands at $1.25 per acre. Homesteads are granted to all settlers who are qualified, upon the payment of certain fees and five years' continuous residence and cultivation upon the lands. This was a wise and proper policy for Congress, but the same necessity for public roads exists in a country settled under the homestead law as one settled under the preëmption or graduation laws. While I believe that this is the best disposition to make of public lands, the State should not be cheated out of the 5 per cent of the value which she had contracted for and had a right to expect. Congress can be just to the State as well as generous to the settlers.

Many of the public-land States settled prior to the passage of the homestead law, or principally under the preëmption law, have received large sums on such sales, but Arkansas has practically received nothing since 1862. Upon this item alone the State ought to be credited with at least $500,000 more than she has received, but I do not say that she can get it without other legislation. I stand here to say for the State that she will pay every dollar she honestly owes on the bonds owned in their own right or held in trust by the United States, under the law as construed by the courts; but I protest against the erroneous and misleading statements here and elsewhere which represent her as a defaulter until some opportunity is given her to settle.

The Departments have by might and power appropriated to their own use over $600,000 of money due the State, and by a narrow and selfish construction of a contract cheated the State out of as much more, and it is now proposed to ask Congress to extend and enlarge this fraud upon the rights of the State by selling a part of the bonds which the State alleges have in all honesty and fairness been paid. For nearly ten years I have asked Congress to authorize an adjustment of all the differences between the State and the United States, and I must now insist that something of that kind should be done before any sale of her bonds is authorized.

The Treasury Department has more than once suggested that some authority ought to be given to compromise, adjust, and settle these matters. The State Legislature has long ago authorized the governor to make a full settlement of all the matters in dispute, and I appeal to this Congress to pass this amendment and let the settlement proceed upon the lines of equity and common fairness.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the proposition which I desire to submit does not require that the United States shall waive any of their rights under these bonds; the amendment does not ask Congress to make a settlement; it simply provides that the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior, or any three persons they may select, may make a settlement with the State of Arkansas and report to the next session or to some subsequent Congress. That is all that is involved in the proposition, and under it the whole of these matters can be settled, or if not settled the facts and points of difference officially ascertained and reported to us.

I stand here now to say for Arkansas, representing a generation of people a large part of whom had nothing to do with securing this loan and nothing to do with the other matters that have brought about this delay and complication, that she is ready and willing to pay every dollar that she honestly and justly owes. Through her representatives she has invited Congress year after year to provide some method for a settlement of these matters. We stand here to-day appealing to you in the name of fairness instead of denouncing her as a defaulter for refusing to pay interest on her bonds, which have been fully paid, that you give authority to some one to make a settlement with her. We submit it is not manly, it is not fair, it is not honest to refuse to authorize such a settlement. You should make haste to withdraw the erroneous charges that have been preferred against a proud and progressive people of a great State, and meet her upon the honorable terms proposed in my amendment. I feel that you will do so.

And now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there can be no more fitting time for such just action than the 15th day of June. On this very day fifty-eight years ago Arkansas was solemnly admitted into this great Union upon equal terms with the other States, and she would like to put this old debt matter behind by an honorable settlement. Since that time her people have undergone many trials and afflictions; but they are as honest now as they were then. She has hardships yet to encounter, troubles to endure, and many debts to pay; but on this the anniversary of her admission as a State I promise for her and her people that she and they will be honest amidst it all.

"But though they suffer, they shall triumph yet,
For once again our State is free,
And energy shall soon destroy
Those gifts of dying tyranny—
Our poverty and debts; and joy
And hope, unfelt through many years,
Now nerve our hearts and calm our fears."

I appeal to you gentlemen to give this matter a fair consideration and vote to authorize negotiations with the State looking to a final settlement. When the time comes for me to offer this amendment, I will propose the following in lieu of that to sell the Arkansas bonds. My amendment which I will print should follow the first paragraph of this section:

That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior, or any three persons they may jointly select or cause to be selected on behalf of the United States, are hereby fully authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and finally settle with the governor of the State of Arkansas, or with such person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of that State to act in its behalf, upon such terms and conditions as to them may seem just and equitable, subject to approval by Congress, as hereinafter provided, all or any of the differences between the Government and the said State growing out of and arising from the issue of certain bonds by the said State which are now owned in their own right or held in trust by the United States; the 5 per cent fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved June 23, 1836; the unpaid portion of the distribution fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved September 4, 1841; the swamp and overflowed lands in place granted by the act approved September 28, 1850, and not heretofore approved to the State; the land and money indemnity due the said State under the acts approved March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and all other claims and demands of whatever kind or nature; and any compromise or settlement they may make with the said State shall be fully reported back to Congress, giving the basis thereof for its further action, said compromise not to be effectual and final until approved by Congress.

I yield the remainder of my time to my colleague, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY].

Mr. PAYNE (before Mr. MCRAE had concluded his remarks). I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is debate proceeding on this paragraph, and not on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I would like to know how that can be done under the order of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has once stated how it can be done. The order was so modified as to carry out previous arrangements in regard to debate. The debate on this question was included in one of those arrangements, it having been agreed that when this paragraph of the bill should be reached the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] should each have thirty minutes. That arrangement having been excepted from the operation of the order, the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] for thirty minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not understand there was any such modification of the order. I should like to see the order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. MCRAE resumed and concluded his remarks, and then said: Mr. Chairman, if I have any time left I yield it to my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY], one of my associates on the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas has four minutes remaining.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, in the four minutes allowed me I can perhaps say all that I desire to say on this question. The matter which has just been discussed by the gentleman from Arkansas was presented to the Committee on Public Lands in bill 4903, on which the committee has expressed its views in report No. 239 of the present Congress. This Indian bill proposes to dispose of $187,000 of trust funds of the State of Arkansas, which are held for the benefit of certain Indians. It is proposed to treat these bonds as money, to turn them into the Treasury, and to account for that money in some form to the Indians.

It seems to me very proper that in this connection the condition of accounts between the United States on the one hand and the State of Arkansas on the other, so far as concerns this sum of $187,000, should be investigated and disposed of, and that provision on this subject may properly be made on this bill. But the State of Arkansas can not settle with the United States without the consideration of a number of other items of account between the two governments; and the bill reported back by the Committee on Public Lands provides that a settlement shall be negotiated, that this settlement shall be referred back as soon as agreed upon to Congress, to become effective and complete when approved by Congress. Thus in that bill the rights of the Government are fully and completely preserved.

Now, the amendment which I understand it is proposed to offer to this bill proposes to incorporate as part of it the bill which has already been reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Lands. This measure, in short, simply provides that these two governments shall appoint commissioners, who shall go through the entire account and agree upon a settlement and report the settlement to the United States on the one hand and the State of Arkansas on the other.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is rather important legislation to be put on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LACEY. It is important legislation, but it is not at all complicated legislation—by no means as complicated as the legislation brought in here by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] upon a bill which we passed a few days ago, providing for a reorganization of a part of the business of the Departments—a provision upon which a point of order was made and overruled.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There were special reasons for that.

Mr. LACEY. This question in regard to this sum of $187,000 ought to be disposed of in some way. It can not be disposed of without a settlement with the State of Arkansas, and such a settlement ought to be provided for. Either the Government of the United States ought to take up that $187,000 as here provided, or else the obligation on the part of the State upon those bonds ought to be provided for in some way. The legislation proposed in connection with this subject is very simple in its character. It is tentative. It reserves the right of Congress in the future to approve or disapprove any settlement that may be recommended. It seems to me it ought to go through on this bill.

A MEMBER. Has any other State a similar claim?

Mr. LACEY. I think the State of Virginia has a somewhat similar claim.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOCKERY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6576) to provide for the closing of part of an alley in square 622 in the city of Washington, D. C., and for the relief of the president and directors of Gonzaga College.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 115) for the development and encouragement of silk culture in the United States under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture;

A bill (S. 168) granting to the State of Wyoming certain lands in the Fort D. A. Russell military reservation for agricultural fair and industrial exposition grounds, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 207) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the towboat Future City, her barges, cargoes, etc.;

A bill (S. 217) for the relief of the heirs of James Bridger, deceased;

A bill (S. 807) for the relief of Joseph Redfern and Eliza J. Redfern, his wife;

A bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public-school trustees in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (S. 1957) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee again resumed its session, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, in 1836 Congress authorized and directed the Secretary of War to invest, in the manner which, in his judgment, would be most safe and beneficial to the Indian trust fund, certain moneys in the Treasury belonging to certain Indian tribes and all moneys that might thereafter be received under treaties, containing stipulations for the payment to the Indians annually of interest upon the proceeds of the lands ceded by them.

By virtue of the authority given in 1836 there was invested up to the year 1860 in State bonds the sum of $3,396,241; the Government was bound to pay interest to the various Indian tribes on this amount annually and has done so.

In 1860, Mr. Godard Baily, who held the position of Indian appeal clerk and as such had possession of these bonds, embezzled 870 of them, which amounted to $870,000.

In all reports and estimates since 1860 these bonds have been designated as "abstract bonds."

The original amount of abstracted bonds was $870,000, as follows:

Missouri 6's	$370,000
North Carolina 6's	357,000
Tennessee 6's	143,000
Total	870,000

Belonging to—

Delawares	514,000
Iowas	77,000
Kaskaskias, Peorias, etc	196,000
Cherokee national fund	68,000
Cherokee school fund	15,000
Total	870,000

The amounts belonging to the Delawares, Iowas, and Kaskaskias, etc., were provided for by the act of July 12, 1862 (12 Stat., 539, 540). A limited number of those abstracted were traced to certain parties, but what became of the remaining is not known. (See report of committee, second session Thirty-sixth Congress, volume 2, page 9.)

The abstracted bonds not yet provided for by the United States are as follows:

Cherokee national fund:
Missouri 6's	$50,000
North Carolina 6's	13,000
Tennessee 6's	5,000
		$68,000
Cherokee school fund:
North Carolina 6's	8,000
Tennessee 6's	7,000
		15,000
Total		83,000

There are still $83,000 of the abstracted bonds not yet provided for, and upon which the Cherokee tribe is receiving interest annually.

In addition to these abstracted bonds there are 1,277 State bonds which the Government is holding trust for various Indian tribes, and is paying thereon interest every year.

I herewith submit a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in regard to said bonds and the date from which interest is due.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 7, 1894.

Very respectfully,

HOKE SMITH, Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS, House of Representatives.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. It appears from this statement that of the $3,396,241.82 invested under the act of 1836, there is still held for the various Indian tribes the sum of $1,277,666⅔, upon upon which the United States is paying interest each year and is receiving no interest from the States.

The balance of the $3,396,241.82 has been, so far as the Indian tribes are concerned, provided for, and an amount equal to the sum held in trust for the tribes, except those shown in said statement, has been placed to their credit, or they have been fully paid by the Government; but a large number of the bonds are still held by the United States.

The Arkansas bonds were purchased with the funds belonging to the Indians February 27, 1839, and no interest was paid up to 1873, when the State funded its bonds and the unpaid interest; the Arkansas bonds now held in trust amount to $168,000, the unpaid interest May 1, 1894, amounted to $170,550, making a total of $338,550.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the way these bonds came to be funded in 1873. By an act of Congress passed December 13, 1873, it was provided as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Department of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue at once and deliver to the secretary of the State of Arkansas the full amount of college scrip, to wit, 150,000 acres, and 90,000 acres to the secretary of the board of trustees of the Florida State Agricultural College of the State of Florida, as provided for in said act, to be used and appropriated to and for the purposes and objects in said act specified, and none other: Provided, That no scrip as aforesaid shall be delivered to the authorities of the State of Arkansas until said State shall have made some satisfactory arrangement by which the bonds of said State, principal and interest, now held by the United States as Indian trust funds shall have been funded in new bonds authorized to be issued by said State for this purpose.

The Florida bonds were purchased October 4, 1857, and the amount now held in trust is $69,000; the unpaid interest May 1, 1894, amounted to $97,538.33⅓, making total of $166,538.33⅓.

The Louisiana bonds were purchased October 4, 1857, and the amount now held in trust is $22,000; the unpaid interest May 1, 1894, amounted to $2,120, making a total of $24,120.

The North Carolina bonds were purchased October 4, 1857; the amount now held by the United States in trust is $41,000; the unpaid interast amounted to $80,665 May 1, 1894, making total of $121,665.11.

One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars of the Tennessee bonds were purchased July 21, 1836; $66,666.66⅔ were purchased March 3, 1837; $19,000 were purchased April 13, 1853, and $104,000 were purchased in October, 1851. The amount now held in trust is $314,666.66⅔. The unpaid interest amounted to $501,115 on the 1st day of May, 1894, making a total of $815,781.66⅔.

The South Carolina bonds were purchased February 4, 1858, and the amount now held in trust is $122,000. The unpaid interest May 1, 1894, amounted to $193,926.66⅔, amounting in all to $315,926.66⅔.

The bonds of the State of Virginia held in trust for Indian tribes were purchased July 9, 1860, and amounted to $541,000; the unpaid interest on these bonds (up to May 1, 1894) amounted to $827,600, making a total of $1,368,600.

It will be seen that the State bonds of the seven States above mentioned, with the unpaid interest, which are held by the United States in trust for the Indian tribes, amount to the enormous sum of $3,151,181.66⅔.

I am informed that a demand has been made every year since 1874, upon the various States, for the payment of the interest due on the Indian trust fund bonds, but they have not paid.

In response to a letter addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Treasury, I am informed that—

The uniform reason given by the different States for not paying their bonds when due, is the want of funds and the absence of any provisions of law authorizing the same.

Several States whose bonds are past due have statutes providing for the refunding of their indebtedness; but no action has been taken under these refunding statutes in reference to the bonds held for the Indian trust fund.

It will be seen that the States mentioned have been in no haste to pay the interest as it became due.

Neither have they expressed any desire to pay the bonds.

These States should be made to pay their indebtedness to these tribes and to the United States. There is no reason for this long delay in the payment. Other States have paid their obligations and these States should be compelled to do so.

The committee having charge of this bill thought it would be a good plan to place to the credit of each tribe the amount of money invested by the Government in these bonds in trust for said tribes, and then to sell the bonds with accumulated interest to the highest bidder for not less than their face value, as provided in section 2.

The objection of the several States to this section is not sound; they can set off no claim they may have against the United States against these bonds, for they belong to the Indian tribes and not to the United States. And therefore the objection of the gentleman on the other side to the sale of the trust-fund bonds is not good. There can be no legal set-off against them. The Government of the United States does not own them. They belong to the Indian trust funds, belong to the various Indian tribes. The States can not set up any claims they may have against the United States as a set-off against these trust funds.

Why do not these States do as the other States have done? The other States that had claims against the United States and the United States held certain of their bonds in trust for the Indian tribes, paid off their bonds and then urged their claims against the United States.

Many members of the committee believe this action by Congress will bring about a settlement in a very short time, and that such a section will enable the Government to dispose of said bonds without loss, and should it prove a success it will furnish a good way to dispose of the remainder of the bonds which originally belonged to the Indian trust fund, but which Congress has at different times made appropriations to pay the Indian tribes the amount of money invested in them for their benefit.

These bonds with unpaid interest amount to several hundred thousand dollars, and are still held as the property of the United States.

The following is a list of the bonds which Congress have been providing for by the United States, but which the States have not paid, and I ask the Clerk to read a communication which I send to the desk from the Treasury Department bearing upon this question.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE TREASURER,
Washington, D. C., May 28, 1894.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 25th instant, in reference to the bonds owned by the United States which formerly belonged to the Indian trust fund, I have to furnish you the following information:

State bonds belonging to the United States formerly belonging to the Indian trust fund.

Arkansas, $87,000, interest due at 6 per cent on $84,000 from January 1, 1874; interest due at 5 per cent on $3,000 from July 1, 1876.

Florida, $80,000, interest due at 7 per cent on $59,000 from January 1, 1862; interest due at 7 per cent on $21,000 from July 1, 1862.

Louisiana, $15,000, interest due at 6 per cent on $10,000 from October 1, 1873; interest due at 6 per cent on $5,000 from November 1, 1873.

North Carolina, $29,000, interest due at 6 per cent on $13,000 from October 1, 1871; interest due at 6 per cent on $7,000 from April 1, 1861.

South Carolina, $3,000, interest due at 6 per cent from July 1, 1860, to July 1, 1867, and from July 1, 1871, to date.

Tennessee, $21,000, interest due at 5 per cent on $15,000 from January 1, 1869; interest due at 5 per cent on $3,000 from January 1, 1870; interest due at 5 per cent on $2,000 from January 1, 1872; interest due at 5 per cent on $1,000 from January 1, 1879.

Virginia, $59,800, interest due on $41,800 from January 1, 1861, to January 1, 1867, at 6 per cent; from January 1, 1867, to January 1, 1870, at 2 per cent (4 per cent having been paid), and from January 1, 1870, to date at 6 per cent; interest due on $12,000 at 6 per cent from January 1, 1861.

In addition to the foregoing there is belonging to the United States $538,000 Arkansas bonds which formerly belonged to the Smithsonian Institution. On these bonds interest is due at 6 per cent as follows: On $133,000 from July 1, 1860; on $404,000 from January 1, 1842; and on $1,000 from July 1, 1852.

The States of Virginia and Arkansas, in addition to the reason of no funds, also claim as a ground for refusing payment that the United States is indebted to them.

Respectfully, yours,

D. N. MORGAN,
Treasurer United States.

HON. CHARLES CURTIS, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I am informed by the gentleman from Florida that the same claim is made on the part of that State.

It will be seen that the States have neglected to pay the interest upon these bonds, the same as they have upon the bonds which belong to the Indian trust funds.

The State of Arkansas is in very poor situation to object to a disposition of these bonds.

Money belonging to the Indians was invested in Arkansas bonds in 1839; the State paid interest until January 1, 1842, and paid no interest from that date until 1873, when the bonds of said State, principal and interest, held by the United States as Indian trust funds, was funded in order to obtain certain college scrip.

The State paid interest until January 1, 1842, and paid none from that time until 1873, when the bonds of that State, principal and interest, held by the United States as Indian trust funds, were funded in order to obtain the college scrip heretofore mentioned.

Mr. MCRAE. I think the gentleman is mistaken as to the college scrip, and I know that the gentleman misrepresents me when he seeks to put me in the attitude of opposing the proposition to credit the Indians with face value of the bonds. I have said that I was in favor of that proposition, and commended the Committee on Indian Affairs for taking hold of this matter in this way.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I am glad to hear the gentleman favors the proposition. I am not mistaken about the college scrip, as I have had the law read in regard to it.

Mr. MCRAE. All I desire is to secure an amendment to authorize the Treasury and Interior Departments to make settlement with the State as to all matters of difference.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I am glad the gentleman wants to settle even this late, but my time is limited and I decline to yield further.

The bonds were funded in 1873, but there has been no interest paid and the State is still in default for interest on said bonds.

An examination of the bonds held by the United States shows that there are now $168,000, on which no interest has been paid since 1873; really none since 1842.

This amount, with accrued interest, still belongs to the Indian Trust Fund, and principal and interest now amount to	$338,550
They can make no set-off against this as it belongs to the Indians.
There is also $87,000 in the bonds of this State that formerly belonged to the Indian Indian trust fund, but now belongs to the United States. No interest has been paid on $84,000 since 1874, and none on $3,000 since 1876. Principal and interest amount to	193,560
And there is belonging to the United States $538,000 Arkansas bonds which formerly belonged to the Smithsonian Institution; the principal and interest now amounts to	2,084,440
Total	2,616,550

Taking out the amount belonging to the Indian trust fund, $338,550, leaves $2,278,000.

The State may set off against it, if it has any legal claim against the United States. It surely has none against the Indian trust funds.

There is another thing that I wish to call attention to. Is it not a very poor claim that they must rely for its justness upon the fact that because there has been a change in the United States Supreme Court they hope the court may reverse the former decision of that court? If the Supreme Court of the United States has held, as the gentleman said, that a part of their claim was not a legal claim against the United States, I do not see how they can ask Congress to hold it to be good because they hope that the court may decide it to be a legal claim now when formerly it decided against it.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman misunderstood my argument entirely. That was outside of the claim altogether. I had already shown that the indebtedness of the United States to the State for claims about which there can be no question equaled the aggregate of that of the State, and the 5 per cent claim is outside and above it. I was simply making that argument to show how strong the equity in the claim of the State is. There is nothing in my amendment overruling the decision in the "5 per cent cases."

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. You claimed to the committee that if you could get a chance to settle that the claim would be upheld, because the court had been reorganized. I have not seen the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman misunderstood me entirely. While I deny the correctness of the decision, the payment claimed does not depend on that.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Now, Mr. Chairman, if these States have a claim against the United States at all, it will be paid just as the claims of the other States have been paid. But why do they, the seven Southern States, or rather the two, not pursue the same course in regard to the adjustment of their claims that was pursued by the State of Kansas and Pennsylvania and other States? The United States Supreme Court has held that certain of these claims have no foundation in fact, and are not just. I repeat, then, it is a poor claim that must depend upon a reversal of the former opinion of the court, simply because there has been a change in the court. Now, all the second section provides for is a sale of the bonds that belong to the Indian trust fund.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment? Does not the gentleman know that the Treasurer of the United States and the Secretary of War have both reported that the United States owes the State of Florida over $200,000 of principal and interest away beyond our bonds held by the Government, and we have not been able to get it paid?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I stated to the committee that the gentleman from Florida claimed that there was an offset against the United States similar to that claimed by the State of Arkansas.

Mr. COOPER of Florida. The Treasurer of the United States so reports.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. There can be no legal set-off against these trust funds. And let me ask in this connection why were the bonds of Arkansas funded? There is no use talking; gentlemen should not ask to have a set-off or ask that the Indian trust fund be held back and not settled simply because they pretend to have some claim against the United States. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that their conduct shows beyond all question they have no legitimate claim against the United States.

The time has come when this matter should be settled, and the sooner it is settled the better it will be for all concerned. There can be no possible excuse for further delay. If the States can not pay then they should at least settle with the Government and fund their indebtedness by issuing new bonds. Other States have paid their indebtedness, and why not these States? If this section does not have the desired result, then the officers of the Government should be directed by Congress to take the necessary steps to collect the amount due on these bonds. [Applause.]

[Mr. SWANSON withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few remarks in reply to the gentleman from Kansas, who, in speaking of the indebtedness of Virginia to the Federal Government, or rather, I should say, to this Indian trust fund, said that that State should be compelled to pay her honest debts.

In reply I say yes; but the obligation upon Virginia to pay her debts is not stronger than is the obligation upon the Government of the United States to pay its debts and to deal fairly with all, and I undertake to say that if the members of this House will take the trouble to inform themselves what the proposition is that we are discussing, every gentleman within the sound of my voice will agree that to carry it out would be unconscionable. What is it? It is to take the bonds of my State and sell them. How did the Government get possession of those bonds?

In 1860, as was stated by the gentleman from Kansas, the Government of the United States took $581,000 from the Indian trust fund; if that was improper it was the act of the Government of the United States and not of Virginia. The Government took $581,000 of that trust fund and transferred it to my State, and took in exchange interest-bearing bonds, the bonds to which this section alludes and which it is proposed to sell. How stood the account between Virginia and the National Government at that date? At that time the Federal Government owed the State of Virginia over $1,000,000; $339,212 principal, and over $700,000 interest.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend tell me when it was that the Government finally settled with Virginia?

Mr. WISE. The indebtedness of which I speak still exists——

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not the Government settle with Virginia when it settled with Maryland?

Mr. WISE. On what account did the Federal Government owe that money to the State of Virginia? The debt had its origin in the expenditure by the State of Virginia of certain moneys for military purposes during the war of 1812——

Mr. HOLMAN. How did it happen, then——

Mr. WISE. I decline to be interrupted. Moneys were advanced at the same time by Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Delaware, South Carolina, and the city of Baltimore——

Mr. HOLMAN. And we have paid them all off.

Mr. WISE. Money was advanced by all these States, and this Government has paid Massachusetts, Maryland, and other States; but there has never been a settlement with Virginia, as you will find in the reports on this subject in every Congress for the last thirty years. It thus appears that the Federal Government has been indebted to my State for nearly one hundred years on account of advances made in the prosecution of a war with Great Britain.

And yet, Mr. Chairman, the proposition is submitted that the Secretary of the Treasury shall be clothed with the authority to sell her interest-bearing bonds, which were obtained as I have explained, and now constitute a part of this Indian trust fund.

Instead of the perpetration of such a foul wrong upon one of the States of the Union, fair dealing and honesty alike require a settlement in accordance with the principles of justice and equity. There is not a Representative within the sound of my voice who, if familiar with the facts of this case, will ever vote to put into this Indian appropriation bill such a provision as that.

If you do not mean to pay, then, in the name of God, do not resort to this trick in order to make complications in my State. Virginia's indebtedness has been settled with her bondholders, and it is not fair or just that the Government should take such action as is here proposed.

But, gentlemen, I have not stated all. I have only spoken of the indebtedness of the National Government on account of advances for the war of 1812. My colleague [Mr. SWANSON] has alluded to the fact that the United States owes Virginia $120,000, advanced after the Revolutionary war for the erection of the Capitol in which we sit.

I hold in my hand a copy of the act penned by John Marshall, the first and greatest Chief Justice of the United States, who was then a member of the General Assembly of Virginia—an act by which was advanced to the Federal Government $120,000, more than one hundred years ago, to be applied toward erecting public buildings. This money has never been returned; and to emphasize the fact that this was an advance, when that act was under consideration in the General Assembly of Virginia, the word "grant" had been inserted in its title by mistake. It was stricken out upon the motion of Judge Marshall, and the word "advance" was substituted.

Yet, notwithstanding these facts are staring us in the face, the gentleman from Kansas gets up here and tells us that we ought to make—make—Virginia pay her debts! I think, as I said in the beginning, that the obligation is no greater upon the State of Virginia to pay her honest debts than it is upon the Government of the United States. No conscientious, honest Representative knowing the facts as I have stated them will vote for such a proposition.

Mr. Chairman, if the point of order raised by the gentleman from Tennessee should not be sustained, as I think it ought to be under the rules, then I call upon gentlemen upon both sides to vote to strike out this provision of the bill and let this question remain as it is until the National Government is ready to come up and treat on honest, fair terms for the settlement of the account between my State and the National Government. We ask for no generosity; only justice. [Applause.]

Mr. COX addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] makes a point of order against these two paragraphs on page 59. Under the order the Chair will hear the gentleman for five minutes.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. This is a most interesting question, involving considerable to various States. I ask unanimous consent of the committee that the debate proceed for thirty minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. The House has adopted for the guidance of the committee a rule fixing the time for debate; and the committee can not set that aside.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I thought the Committee of the Whole might do whatever it agreed to do, by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. It can not set aside an order of the House.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. We did set aside an order of the House.

Mr. TRACEY and others. Regular order!

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The order of the House was a very peculiar one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX] will proceed.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, upon this question I have yielded as far as I could to the Representatives from Arkansas and Virginia as much time as they desired. I now wish to occupy only a few moments. First, I want to address myself to the point of order which has been raised and which the Chair is now called upon to decide. It arises upon two paragraphs on page 59, and the point I make is that the provisions embraced in these paragraphs are entirely new legislation. I submit that these two provisions—the first charging these bonds over against the United States as an obligation of the United States, and the second, providing for taking these bonds and putting them on the market for sale—I submit that these two provisions are entirely new legislation. That is the point of order.

Now, when you come to the words in line 14—

For the payment of interest on said bonds for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, $78,320—

I do not think my point of order reaches that. I think those words ought to be included in the bill. But outside of those lines, 14, 15, and 16, every line of that provision is new legislation, and I do not suppose the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs would dispute it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will remember that when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] reserved the point of order against these two paragraphs, he then asked unanimous consent to exempt these three lines quoted by the gentleman from Tennessee from the point of order.

Mr. COX. That is right; and I said that the gentleman from Ohio was entirely correct, on an examination, to exempt these lines. The rest of it, however, is clearly subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will also modify the point of order he is now making to exempt these three lines?

Mr. COX. Exactly; to conform to the point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio; so that the point of order goes to the whole of these two paragraphs, except the three lines 14, 15, and 16, up to the word "dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, these three can only be exempted from the point of order by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the point of order being made, as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee, except as to the three lines of the second paragraph on page 59, lines 14, 15, and 16, which the Clerk will read?

The lines were again read.

Mr. COX. These are the lines exempted from the point of order.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Is the point of order raised on the section, except these three lines?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I desire to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COX. I do not desire to insist on any more time, but it is a very strange thing that the gentleman from Virginia, the gentleman from Arkansas, and the gentleman from Florida have discussed the whole merits of this question, and Tennessee should be excluded. Therefore I ask five minutes in the discussion on the merits, in so far as it affects the State of Tennessee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wishes to state to the gentleman that the time which has been allowed to the gentleman from Arkansas the gentleman from Kansas, and the gentleman from Florida was allowed by the committee before debate begun under the five-minute rule. And it was granted by unanimous consent. Under the order adopted by the House ten minutes only can be allowed to debate a point of order. The Chair has given the first five minutes of the ten to the gentleman from Tennessee, and if the chairman of the committee does not desire to occupy the other five, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COX. I understand, then, that so far as Tennessee is concerned, she is confined to five minutes, when Virginia and Arkansas and Florida have an hour?

Mr. McRAE. Because the gentleman asked no such privilege at the time we did. He made no request for any time, and therefore his reflection on those of us who did is not just.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is one of parliamentary procedure. If I understand correctly, the point of order raised now expressly excepts lines 14, 15, and 16 on page 59?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. It only puts us to the trouble of reoffering the provision.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, shall occupy only a part of the five minutes and be very glad to yield whatever time remains to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COX].

I take it, Mr. Chairman, that if there had ever been enacted a statute authorizing the sale or disposition of these bonds, and it is still in force, that then section 2 is in order, and I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the act of April 1, 1880, which provides as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to deposit in the Treasury of the United States any and all sums now held by him, or which may hereafter be received by him, as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of various Indian tribes, on account of the redemption of United States bonds, or other stocks and securities belonging to the Indian trust fund, and all sums received on account of the sale of Indian trust funds or on account of the sales of stocks lately purchased for temporary investment. * * *

Now, here is an act of Congress directly authorizing the sale of these bonds, because they are the only ones that are held in trust, and it directs what shall be done with the funds received from their sale. All that is attempted in section 2 is to provide how said bonds shall be sold and in what way the sale shall be made; that is, by advertising, and to the highest bidder, for not less than their face value.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to the fact that the second section refers specifically to nonpaying State bonds or stocks, and the law to which the gentleman has referred makes no special reference to them.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. While it does not name them, they are the bonds meant, because they are the only bonds held in trust for the Indian tribes and they are described as nonpaying bonds or stocks, because the States have been failing to pay interest, and that is the reason they are so described in that section; and this act authorizes the sale of those stocks, which are the ones that we attempt in this section to have sold, and the only ones. They are the only bonds that belong to the Indian trust fund, and they are the ones that are provided for by the act of April 1, 1880.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this point of order is exhausted.

Mr. McRAE. I want to say that I think the gentleman from Kansas is correct. These are the bonds referred to, and I think the point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that this is new legislation, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry. Before we commence reading the bill, I wish to say that on day before yesterday there was an amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. DOOLITTLE], which it was asked might go over until the chairman of the committee could have a meeting of the committee, or obtain some information. Under the rule that we are now operating under, when will it be proper to have that matter come up?

The CHAIRMAN. After the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill. After proceeding some time,

Mr. HOLMAN said: Mr. Chairman, the Clerk has now read down to page 77. I wish to ask unanimous consent that the names of the Indians who subscribed to this agreement, all from line 11, page 77, to line 23, page 92, be omitted. These pages embrace the names of the Indians who subscribed to this agreement and the various certificates of authentication. I suggest that those pages be omitted.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BOWERS of California. I object. We can not change the order of the House.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. One minute, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MARSH. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading of the bill. Having proceeded for some time,

Mr. MAHON said: I ask unanimous consent that all those names be omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] renews the request that the names of the Indians signing this petition be omitted by the Clerk. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. What is that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of these Indian names in the treaty. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The Chair will recollect that I called his attention to that matter in the early part of the reading of this bill. There is not a human being on earth who could read them so that anybody could understand, and I will not object.

The Clerk, omitting the reading of the signatures, proceeded with the reading of the bill. Having read the first paragraph on page 94,

Mr. McRAE said: A parliamentary inquiry. Should a point of order be made before a paragraph is read, or after?

The CHAIRMAN. At the conclusion of the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to make a point of order to the second paragraph on page 94.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second. That the lands by said agreement ceded to the United States shall, upon proclamation by the President, be opened to settlement, and shall be subject to disposal only under the homestead and town-site laws of the United States (except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which shall not apply), excepting the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each Congressional township, which shall be reserved for common-school purposes and be subject to the laws of the State of South Dakota: Provided, That each settler on said lands shall, before making final proof and receiving a certificate of entry, pay to the United States, for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $3.75 per acre, one-half of which shall be paid within three years from the date of his original entry; but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall not be abridged except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid: Provided, however, That each settler shall be limited to 80 acres in amount, but after the expiration of six months from the opening of said land to settlement, may take an additional 80 acres from any of the lands of said tract then subject to entry: And provided further, That after three years' actual and continuous residence upon said land from date of settlement, the settler shall, upon full payment of $3.75 per acre, receive patent for the tract entered: Provided, That settlement shall be made under this act within thirty days from date of filing on land.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, that paragraph changes the public land laws of the United States, is new legislation, and contradicts the very treaty that it confirms. Article 8 of the treaty provides that surplus lands shall be disposed of under the existing land laws of the United States. This paragraph of the bill which has just been read involves new land legislation, and I have always contended and now insist that while all the treaties that can possibly be should be ratified, yet I do not want a separate land system for every reservation that is opened. It is vicious and makes a great deal of trouble and allows fraud in many cases.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Dakota or any member of the committee care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I suppose as a matter of fact that the provisions which have already been read are subject to the same objection as this particular section. The legislation is founded on a treaty or an agreement with an Indian tribe. I suppose that at the present time these are regarded as agreements or as contracts between an Indian tribe and the United States. They were formerly treated as a treaty, and stood on the same footing as a treaty with a foreign nation, until about fifteen years ago.

Since that time they have been considered as contracts, requiring the action of both Houses of Congress. Prior to that time they were ratified in the Senate, after they had been negotiated by the President, just the same as a treaty which had been negotiated with a foreign nation. This is the ratification of an agreement between an Indian tribe and the United States, and it involves a modification of the treaty or the provisions of the agreement; as, for instance, the agreement provides that the money is to be placed to the credit of this Yankton band, bearing interest at the rate of 5 per cent. That is above the rate we have been paying of late years; and therefore it is proposed to modify this agreement so as to reduce the amount of interest to 4 per cent, as of late years we have never paid more than 4 per cent.

There are all through this ratification changes in the terms of the agreement; and I admit that in the particular section referred to, there is a provision that modifies the land law. The present law, the act of March, 1891, provides for a residence of fourteen months to the extent of a quarter section of land.

This provision contemplates a homestead of 80 acres, instead of 160 acres, except that after a period of six months after the land has been opened, if the land is not taken up, a settler may enter an additional 80 acres, making 160. In this respect there is a change made in the law now in force. There is also a provision extending the time of commutation from fourteen months to three years; and I do trust that my friend from Arkansas will not object to that. The homestead law of 1862 contemplated a residence of five years.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to know what paragraph the gentleman makes his point of order on.

Mr. HOLMAN. To the second paragraph.

Mr. McRAE. If I could make it to a part of it I might do it, but I made it to the whole of the paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. He made it to the whole of the second paragraph.

Mr. McRAE. Not in reference to the bonds.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this legislation is based on an act of Congress providing for negotiations with these Indians for the cession of their lands and taking a portion of their lands in severalty. It is based on an act of Congress, and under all the circumstances it seems to me it comes within the rule, as it is carrying out an agreement made under an act of Congress, and it modifies that agreement and refers the subject back to the Indians. I did not think of this point being raised, or I would have had the law; but I would be very glad if the Chair will see the law under which this agreement was made and on which this legislation is founded before deciding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the point of order, as stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, is that it changes the existing law under which this treaty was made between the Yankton tribe and a commissioner of the United States. Article 8 says that after the ratification of this agreement by Congress these lands shall "be offered for sale through the proper land office, to be disposed of under the existing land laws of the United States," etc.

Now, the gentleman from Indiana admits, as the Chair understands, that this is a modification of the existing laws of the United States, and that in that respect it differs from the treaty which has been agreed upon between the tribe and a commissioner of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is not only with reference to that provision, if the Chair please, and not only with reference to that article of the treaty, but here all the articles are modified and sent back to the tribe. The Chair will have to consider the existing law authorizing these negotiations so as to see whether this comes within the inhibition——

Mr. PICKLER. Call the attention of the Chair to the words "as modified," on page 93, Mr. HOLMAN, and to see whether that is subject to the point of order? If it is new legislation, not included by the existing law, why the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will permit me, in the line of his argument, I desire to call his attention to the "general allotment act," which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to do certain things by or between the Government and Indians. For instance:

And provided further, That at any time after lands have been allotted to all the Indians of any tribe as herein provided, or sooner if in the opinion of the President it shall be for the best interest of said tribe, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with such tribe for the purchase and release by said tribe, in conformity with the treaty or statute under which such reservation is held, of such portions of its reservations not allotted as such tribe shall from time to time consent to sell, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and the said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress, and the form and manner of executing such release shall also be prescribed by Congress.

Now, the position of the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the committee, as I understand it, is that all of this proceeding is in line with existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. In line with existing law.

Mr. HERMANN. And this law authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to enter into negotiations with these Indians.

This particular paragraph includes matter which forms the substance of an agreement with the Indians, modified by these proceedings on the part of Congress, and therefore it is in line with existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is an important provision and the question which it raises is applicable to some other provisions of the bill. I therefore suggest to the Chair that this second clause on page 94 be passed over for the present until we can look up the statute.

Mr. PICKLER. Nearly all of this section is a recital of the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the objection of the gentleman from Arkansas to be to the proviso beginning in line 9, page 95, and extending down to and including the word "entry," in line 14.

Mr. MCRAE. No, sir. I make the point of order against the second subdivision of this section, because it can not be amended. If I could submit my amendments now I think I could make it conform substantially to the land laws, but as I can not do that, I am compelled to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the gentleman will agree to let that go over also.

Mr. MCRAE. I have not the slightest objection to that; with the understanding that the point of order is still pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending, of course.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are two other provisions that cover the same ground.

Mr. MCRAE. I make the same point of order on the next paragraph.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be read first.

The Clerk read as follows:

Third. That any person who was not the owner of land in any State or Territory of the United States at date of passage of this act may make an entry of the lands open to settlement under the provisions of this act, although said person may have heretofore made an entry under the provisions of the homestead law: Provided, That said person is not otherwise disqualified.

Mr. MCRAE. I make the point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman let that go over too.

Mr. MCRAE. That is satisfactory to me, with the same understanding as in the other case.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fourth. That immediately after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules and regulations to procure the ratification by said Yankton tribe of Sioux Indians to the changes in said agreement, as provided for in section 1 of this act, and shall without delay, upon the agreement of said Indians to said changes, under such regulations as he may prescribe, open said lands to settlement, provided the settlers upon said land shall be required to pay 75 cents per acre at the time of filing upon same: Provided, That the proclamation of the President opening said lands to settlement, as provided in section 3 of this act, shall be issued within thirty days after the ratification of the changes in said agreement by said Indians, as provided in section 1 of this act, and that said proclamation shall be issued giving at least sixty days' notice of the date said lands will be open to settlement.

Mr. MCRAE. I make the point of order on that also.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this paragraph also will go over until to-morrow.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls attention to the fact that there is a duplication in the printed bill, beginning on line 10, page 108, and extending down to and including line 19, page 116.

Mr. HOLMAN. The committee are aware of that. That is a mere blunder of the Printing Office.

The Clerk continued the reading, and read the bill down to the word "Congress," line 23, page 127.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration a bill (H. R. 6913), the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 499) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAGUIRE, indefinitely, on public business.

To Mr. MALLORY, until Monday next, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE of Kentucky obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of A. J. Bloom, Fifty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RECESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, under the rule a recess is taken at 5 o'clock until 8 p. m. If there be no objection the Chair will now declare the House in recess. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROOKSHIRE] will perform the duties of the Chair at the evening session.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes) took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 p. m., Mr. BROOKSHIRE in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is in session under paragraph 3 of Rule XXVI.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after this evening session the previous question be considered as ordered upon the amendments, engrossment, third reading, and final passage of each bill which has been recommended to the House by the Committee of the whole, subject, however, to the precedence of existing orders, general appropriation bills, and conference reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. JONES. I shall have to object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Virginia that this does not include any cases of the kind that he has been opposing, except possibly one.

Mr. JONES. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think consent ought to be given for that order in this slim House. I did not intend to make objection myself, but there are scarcely a dozen members here, and if the gentleman will make this request when there is a fuller House, or when as many members are present as we usually have at these Friday evening sessions, I promise not to make any objection, but I do not believe the request ought to be made now when there are only a dozen present.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering bills upon the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business upon the Private Calendar, under the rule.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to the Calendar, I ask unanimous consent to make a very brief statement, not to occupy more than two or three minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to these facts. There are now on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Pensions, of which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MOSES] is chairman, fourteen bills. There are on the Calendar several bills—I have not counted the number—reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, involving the charge of desertion. There are no bills that I have any knowledge of on the Calendar from the Committee on the Judiciary for the removal of political disabilities. There are thirty-five bills on the Calendar that have been favorably reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Of this number four involve the question of granting a pension again to a woman once pensioned on account of the death of her husband in the service, she having been remarried and divorced on account of the brutal or cruel conduct of the husband.

There is one other bill involving something of that character, the Mary E. Trickey bill, making, altogether, five bills of that particular type. There are also five bills involving the cases of widows whose husbands died in the service who remarried, and who again became widowed by the death of the second husbands, the proposition of the bill and of the reports accompanying them being to restore those widows to the pension roll. That makes ten of these two classes of bills. Subtracting these from the thirty-five reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, there remain twenty-five of an entirely different character.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am most sincerely, heartily, and earnestly in favor of the passage of the ten bills of which I have spoken. But I want to present to the Committee of the Whole this evening the question whether, in view of the fact that there is less than a quorum present, it would not be best to agree to a proposition to pass over the bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and these ten bills involving the question of remarriage and of divorce, and proceed at once to the consideration of the other bills. I will add that I have had an assurance given to me by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], from the Committee on Pensions, that fair hearing and consideration, without filibustering, will be bestowed upon these other twenty-five bills.

Having made this statement I will, for the purpose of testing the sense of the House—acting on my own responsibility and not undertaking to represent any other member or any committee—ask unanimous consent that the bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs and the ten bills referred to which have been reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions be passed over at this evening session without prejudice and without losing their places on the Calendar, and that we proceed to consider in Calendar order the other bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and also the bills reported from the Committee on Pensions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN]?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I would like to understand what reason there is for passing over the bills reported from the Committee on Military Affairs which simply remove the charge of desertion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If I may be permitted, I will explain. A number of gentlemen in this House have made up their minds resolutely that they do not intend that these bills pensioning deserters and bills paying pensions to women who were the widows of soldiers and who, having remarried, are widows again, and bills of a third class proposing to pay exceptionally large pensions to officers of the Army or their widows, shall ever pass.

Every Friday night these bills absolutely block the proceedings here. At the same time there are some meritorious pension bills here, bills which any reasonable man on the face of the earth would agree are proper and just. Some of them are to pension very old or very necessitous people. Why not dispose of these bills? And then, if gentlemen want to engage in a wrangle about these other propositions, let them make a test case of one bill and fight it out, but not obstruct business every Friday night by pressing bills of that character.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I object for the present. I want simply to say this——

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. Debate is not in order.

Mr. LANE. I ask unanimous consent that to-night each member may be permitted to call up one bill—an easy bill. [Laughter.] I will call up my bill first, if there be no objection. [Laughter.] I think there will be no opposition to it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I object to that.

Mr. CHARLES W. STONE. I ask leave to state the reasons for making my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to state his reasons for objecting.

Mr. JONES. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first business in order.

HARRIET WOODBURY.

The Clerk read the bill (H. R. 811) for the relief of Harriet Woodbury.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What has become of House bill No. 1196, which precedes on the Calendar the bill just read by the Clerk?

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the last evening session, but is advised that the bill just read is pending as unfinished business.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. This bill having been debated on two previous evenings, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

CORNELIA DE PEYSTER BLACK.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3156) for a pension to Cornelia de Peyster Black, widow of Henry M. Black, late colonel of United States Army, deceased.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that this bill, which has been the subject of much discussion, be passed over without prejudice.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

MARY E. TRICKEY AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1196) to restore, Mary E. Trickey, and children of Hartwell M. Trickey, to the pension rolls.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. This bill has heretofore been considered by the Committee of the Whole; but as there are several gentlemen here now who were not present on that occasion, I will briefly quote from the report——

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has not yet been reported.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Very well; I will make my explanation after the bill has been reported.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to restore Mary E. Trickey, widow of Hartwell M. Trickey, late of Company I, One hundred and sixth New York Volunteer Infantry, and their children, to the pension rolls as of the date of December 1, 1891.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved June 27, 1890, the name of Mary E. Trickey, as widow of Hartwell M. Trickey, late of Company I, One hundred and sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry."

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I was about to read the body of the report in connection with the statement I propose to make.

Mr. STALLINGS. I prefer first to hear the report, and then the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to ask the very careful attention of each member of the committee to the reading of the report. Probably it will result in avoiding an extended discussion.

Mr. WEADOCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEADOCK. How often can a report be read on the same bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that a report is not read as a matter of right. It can only under the rule be read in the time of some gentleman.

Mr. WEADOCK. This report, I think, has been read two or three times already.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. It has been read once.

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask that it be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio was recognized.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If I am recognized I intend to use the report in connection with some remarks I wished to make upon the bill. After that, if any gentleman desires to have it read at length, it can be read.

Mr. STALLINGS. I ask the gentleman to have the report read.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly, if the gentleman desires it.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Ohio.

The report (by Mr. HARE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1196) to pension Mary E. Trickey, have carefully considered the same and submit the following report:

A similar bill was favorably reported in the Fifty-second Congress, but failed of passage. The facts shown are as follows:

Hartwell M. Trickey served as a private in Company I, One hundred and sixth New York Infantry, from July 22, 1862, until June 22, 1865. He was pensioned at $4 per month for gunshot wound of left forearm, and died June 11, 1889.

Mary E. Trickey applied for pension as his widow, and proved to the satisfaction of the Pension Bureau that she was married to the soldier July 2, 1872, and pension was allowed her under act of June 27, 1890, at $8 per month, plus $2 for each of four children from July 2, 1890. Payment of pension was suspended August 15, 1891, on information tending to show that she was not the legal widow of the soldier, and a special examination was had to determine the facts, which are as follows, as is fully shown by evidence now on file in the Pension Bureau:

The soldier, while home on furlough, was married November 12, 1863, at Ogdensburg, N. Y., to one Jane Ritchey, and remained with her one or two weeks at that time. Again, after his discharge, he lived with her as his wife for about one and a half years, when he went to Pennsylvania and she did not accompany him, and never afterward did they live together. The reasons for this separation do not appear. This separation seems to have been about 1867. In 1868 the present claimant, Mary E. (Montgomery), met the soldier at Pottsville, Pa., and on July 2, 1872, they were married at Wilkesbarre, Pa., and lived together continuously as man and wife from that time until his death, and they had five children.

It appears, however, that the soldier was never divorced from Jane, his first wife, and hence this so-called marriage to Mary E. was not legal. Some two or three years after the separation above referred to Jane commenced to live with one William Rogers, and they had lived and cohabited as man and wife openly and publicly since that time, and have a family of four children, one of whom is 20 years of age, and she is commonly known as Jane Rogers. All this is shown by her own admissions and by other evidence.

On November 29, 1890, Jane filed a claim for the accrued pension due the soldier at the date of his death, and although this had already been paid to Mary E., it was determined in the light of all the facts that it must be paid to Jane, as the former payment to Mary E. was illegal; this was accordingly done, and the name of Mary E. was permanently dropped from the rolls. The amount of accrued pension which was thus twice paid seems to have been not more than $13, and possibly not more than $1, if the soldier himself lived to draw the pension for the quarter ending June 4, 1889.

Although it has been determined that Jane was legally entitled to the accrued pension, it does not follow that she is entitled to a continuous pension as widow. It is evident that she has lived as wife with Rogers both before and since the soldier's death, and, even if a common-law marriage does not arise on the death of the former husband, her relations with Rogers are clearly such as to defeat a claim by reason of the act of August 7, 1882, as to open and notorious adulterous cohabitation.

Inasmuch as the object of this bill is to pension the beneficiary as an act of justice rather than of strict legal right, and inasmuch as a considerable sum of money has already been paid her illegally, though, perhaps, through no conscious fault of her own, pension, if allowed, should date from the approval of the act.

Your committee therefore return the bill and recommend that the bill do pass, after being amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the act approved June 27, 1890, the name of Mary E. Trickey, as widow of Hartwell M. Trickey, late of Company I, One hundred and sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry."

Also amend the title so as to read "A bill to pension Mary E. Trickey."

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Chairman, this report is slightly incomplete, and for the purpose of supplementing it I will make a brief statement in regard to this case. A similar bill was favorably reported to the Fifty-second Congress, but failed of passage. It did not fail of passage in the House, however, it having been discussed in Committee of the Whole, passed in the committee, and passed the House, but reached the Senate too late to be taken up on its Calendar. So that it has this indorsement that comes from the Fifty-second Congress, so far as that may weigh on the mind of anyone.

In the second place, it does not appear from the report, as it should, that the place at which Mr. Trickey met this claimant was quite a considerable distance away from the point where the other woman was living. It was a distance of over 500 miles. He first married in Northern New York, and the second marriage occurred over four years after that, in the coal regions of Pennsylvania, more than 500 miles away, and of these regions it may be said that there were no railroad connections. Trickey lived near the present claimant four years as a single man. She met him as a single man and married him lawfully, according to the forms of the church and the ordinary requirements of law.

After that time they came into my district to live. She bore him five children, all of them taking his name. She nursed him in his final illness, and after his death she applied for a pension. It was granted her because she made all the proofs necessary under the law.

Now, why was she dropped from the rolls? Sometime afterwards, the other woman learning of his death, and being advised that she had a legal claim to the accrued pension of $13, made application and secured the pension. At the time this bill was considered in the Committee of the Whole here at the last meeting the gentleman from Virginia raised the question as to the probability of the other woman coming in and getting a pension.

The report says, in an argumentative way, that this could not be. But since that time, in order to make sure of the fact that it would be impossible for the other woman to get a pension, and that but this one woman could get it as the widow of the man Hartwell Trickey, I visited the Pension Office and examined the papers, and requested the Commissioner of Pensions to examine and give me a report on the subject as to the condition of the claim and as to the facts which exist in relation to this inquiry. I have that letter before me. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C., April 27, 1894.

SIR: In reply to your personal inquiry of this date I have the honor to advise you that one Jane Trickey, of Gouverneur, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., applied for pension on the 28th of November, 1890, as the widow of Hartwell M. Trickey, late private Company I, One hundred and sixth New York Volunteers.

She has never been pensioned, but, on the contrary, the claim has been rejected on the ground that she is not now the soldier's widow, having lived and cohabited with one William Rogers for more than twenty-one years past, being known by that name, and as his wife. She has, in fact, no title to pension under the act of June 27, 1890, nor under any other law.

Very respectfully,

WM. LOCHREN, Commissioner.

Hon. J. H. OUTHWAITE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. STALLINGS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. STALLINGS. I understand the claim of the first woman was investigated by the authorities, and it was held that she was not entitled to a pension.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is correct. I did not know when the bill was under consideration before that it had been actually investigated and rejected. Jane Rogers has, in fact, no title to pension under the act of June 27, 1890, nor indeed under any other law.

This letter puts a very different face on the question from that presented by the committee, as will be seen.

Mr. JONES. May I ask a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I observe in this report that it is stated that this soldier, for whose services this woman deserves a pension, left his first wife in New York, and went to Pennsylvania?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes.

Mr. JONES. And that she did not accompany him?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. True.

Mr. JONES. And that the evidence does not show what was the cause of the separation?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. That is true.

Mr. JONES. I understand that to be the case. Now, the report does not show whether this soldier willfully deserted his wife and went to Pennsylvania, or whether or not he left her because of some misconduct on her part. I should infer from the report that this soldier abandoned his lawful wife and married another woman simply because he preferred the second woman, and not because of any fault of his wife.

Now, if this dead soldier deserted his wife for this woman, who lives in the district of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], does the gentleman think that under those circumstances this woman ought to be pensioned on account of his services?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think so, because this woman had no knowledge of his previous marriage. This woman met him, supposing him to be a single man, and married him. Her intention was good. Her skirts are as clear of offense against the moral law and as white as snow.

Mr. JONES. I understand that. I do not understand that there is anything in the report that at all reflects on this woman.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. True.

Mr. JONES. But the doubt in my mind arises from the fact that she was not his wife during the war. She did not suffer any privations on his account during the war. She simply married him in 1872. Now, at that time, if he had actually deserted the wife who had lived with him during the war, if it was his fault, does the gentleman think she ought to be pensioned on account of his service during the war, for it is on that account she is to be pensioned, if pensioned at all. If he had not been in the war at all she could not, of course, ask for a pension. The gentleman would not ask for a pension for her except on account of the services of this man during the war. She married him long after the war, when he had deserted his lawful wife, whether she knew that fact or not.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to this fact, that there is no discrimination in the act of June 27, 1890, between the widow of a soldier who married a soldier during the war or before the war, and a widow who had married a soldier subsequent to the war. This woman is in the same predicament as many——

Mr. JONES. Of course I understand that perfectly; but if he had not been a soldier, of course the gentleman would not be here asking to pension this woman?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Certainly not.

Mr. JONES. And the distinction I draw is that the wife who lived with him during the war, and who lived with him a year and a half after the war, was deserted by him, as I infer from the language of this report. It may be that because of conduct of the abandoned wife after her desertion she can not now secure a pension, but is that any reason for pensioning the woman who never could have been his lawful wife and who is not now his widow? Is it absolutely necessary that somebody must be pensioned simply because this man was a soldier?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Is not the gentleman assuming a good deal——

Mr. STALLINGS. I think I can clear the gentleman's mind. The trouble is that the wife in New York is barred from getting a pension on account of her misconduct.

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly aware of that fact. But must this other woman be pensioned simply because the true widow is in a position which precludes her obtaining one?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No; and I will give you the reasons. This widow did not know anything about his ever having had a previous wife until she presented herself in 1890 at the Pension Bureau. This widow had no means of investigating whether Mr. Trickey deserted his wife or his wife deserted him; but the fact that his wife immediately joined this other man and has been living with him——

Mr. JONES. Not immediately, according to the record.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. She had a child 21 years of age when this testimony was taken, and this testimony was taken over two years ago.

Mr. JONES. It was some two or three years after the separation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Some two or three years afterwards, and that was before this woman married Mr. Trickey.

Mr. CABANISS. Does not the subsequent misconduct of his first wife naturally raise a presumption that he deserted her or left her on account of her misconduct?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Well, I do not like to draw any inference against her.

Mr. CABANISS. That strikes my mind.

Mr. JONES. On the other hand, may not the fact that this poor woman was shamefully deserted have had some influence on her subsequent life and conduct?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No. I do not wish to try her in any way whatever. The amendment is a new bill, simply to place her on the pension roll at $8 a month.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, if there was any way in which, in this class of cases, we could go on record and have a recorded vote, I should make no objection, except simply to vote my convictions. But we never have a quorum here, and therefore there is no way to have a record vote.

Mr. HAYES. Let it be voted on in the House.

Mr. LANE. We are considering these bills here in the committee.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. We make a record here.

Mr. TATE. We are making a record now. The gentleman can state how he is going to vote. Then he has made his record.

Mr. LANE. That is what I am here for, but I have not quite finished my statement yet.

I say that if there was some way of designating those who voted for those bills which are not meritorious I would make no question at all. I am satisfied myself that this woman is not the widow of this soldier, neither by a lawful marriage nor by a common-law marriage; and I am not willing to pension women who are not widows of soldiers until soldiers' widows are pensioned. After pensioning all the widows of soldiers, then I am willing to consider this question as a member of Congress. These parties were simply living in adultery. I do not care anything about the intention.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman says she was not the wife of this soldier. She was married according to the laws of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LANE. That has nothing to do with the question here. It was neither a common law marriage nor a lawful marriage, but simply adulterous cohabitation so far as she was concerned. Her children were not legitimate.

Mr. BRETZ. You could not convict her in any court in the land.

Mr. LANE. I am not trying to convict her. I am simply stating the legal fact. If the legal widow had died in the meantime, while they were cohabiting, that would have changed the case, and if no change of relations took place, that would have become a common law marriage; but it never could become a legal marriage so long as the obstruction to the marriage existed, and it still exists.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me just one moment?

Mr. LANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If it were a legal marriage, there would have been no necessity for a special bill. It is only because there could be no lawful marriage that a special bill is introduced. When this lady lived in every sense of the word an innocent, pure woman, and bore the soldier children, and took care of him and nursed him when he was suffering from the effects of his wound, I think it is such a case as to warrant me in presenting this bill.

Mr. LANE. I understand exactly the merits of her case; but that does not change the fact that these are not his children.

Mr. TAWNEY. Whose are they?

Mr. LANE. You can pension both these women. These children are not the soldier's in law; they are bastards in law; they are nullius filius. In law they have no father. If she was the widow of this man she would get a pension at the Pension Office. The question I am presenting to you is: Do you want to pension women who are not the widows of soldiers before you pension those who are the widows of soldiers, for there are thousands who are not pensioned?

Mr. CURTIS of New York. Let us come to a vote then.

Mr. LANE. You can come to a vote, and then I will not contend. I am simply making a statement. I am liberal in voting to pension widows and to pension soldiers who are entitled; but I say, gentlemen, there is not money enough in the Treasury to go around and pension this class of women. Having said this much, I will content myself by voting against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment recommended by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There is an amendment to the title recommended.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be reported to the House with the recommendation that the title be changed in accordance with the recommendation of the committee.

MARTHA E. MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2908) restoring the pension of Martha E. Miller.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension roll the name of Martha E. Miller, widow of Alexander N. Miller, late of Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment of Iowa Volunteers, to take effect from and after the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2908) restoring the pension of Martha E. Miller, having examined and considered the same, report it back to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

This same matter was before the Fifty-second Congress and passed this House, and the report, which we adopt, was as follows:

"Martha E. Miller was the wife of Andrew W. Miller, late of Company C, Twenty-sixth Regiment Iowa Infantry, who died at Jeffersonville, Ind., June 17, 1864, from wounds received at the battle of Resaca, Ga., May 14, 1864. She was granted a pension as his widow soon thereafter, which she drew until 1867.

"On January 22, 1867, she married one James E. Irwin, and lived with him until the fall of 1871, when he deserted her, leaving her without any means of support whatever, and upon this she obtained a divorce from him.

"When she married said Irwin she had saved up and had a little property, but it was all used up during her married life with him, and when he left her she had nothing, and has ever since earned her own support by sewing, and now, being of advanced age, she is unable to make a living, and has no one upon whom she can call for aid. The evidence of these facts and a copy of the decree of divorce is now on file in the Pension Office and in the district of Clinton County, Iowa, in June 1881.

"This case is in the line of precedent and your committee recommend the passage of the bill."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the minority report read.

The CHAIRMAN. The views of the minority will be read.

The views of the minority (by Mr. BALDWIN) were read, as follows:

The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions submit the following statement of their views in regard to the bill (H. R. 2908) restoring the pension of Martha E. Miller:

The majority report shows that Andrew W. Miller served in Company C, Twenty-sixth Iowa Infantry, and died in hospital June 17, 1864; his widow, this petitioner, was granted a pension which she continued to draw until January 22, 1867, when she married James E. Irwin, who deserted her in 1871, and in June, 1881, she secured a divorce from him.

Now, the purpose of this bill is to restore her to the pension roll the same as if she were still the widow of the soldier whose name she voluntarily surrendered twenty-seven years ago.

To pass this bill is to nullify for the benefit of this one individual the substantial limitation of the general laws that the pension of soldiers' widows who have remarried shall cease.

The objections to be urged against such bills as this are numerous. In the first place, it makes an exception of a case which is in no wise exceptional. There may be varying degrees of destitution in different cases, but it may be fairly stated that all cases of widows who have remarried and again become husbandless by reason of death or divorce present the same substantial conditions.

If any widow so situated should be restored to pension all widows so situated should be restored, and this by general enactment and not by individual private bills, whereby those who may happen to have a friend to espouse their cause secure a benefit which the modest and the unknown never think of seeking. Special pension acts are justifiable only in cases which are essentially exceptional, and should not be used to grant to one that which is denied to the many, whose situation is precisely the same. But aside from this consideration, however, the soldier's widow who remarries voluntarily relinquishes her pension, because she prefers to do so.

The Government can not become an insurer against an unfortunate termination of this second matrimonial venture either by divorce or death. To restore pension in case of divorce is to encourage remarried widows to seek divorces, and, in any event, it is to give them an ostensible claim upon the soldier's death and memory, which they have long since renounced by preference.

Furthermore, it is not to be assumed that legislation of this character is in the line of justice or of honor to the soldiers themselves, or that it is necessarily desired or favored by the soldier classes. A contribution from the the public Treasury to the support of the widow of the soldier, so long as she remains his widow, every soldier, perhaps, desires, and the common consent of the nation for thirty years has sanctioned this, but that each soldier looks forward to and desires that his services and his memory shall be the basis of a pension to his wife at some remote day, beyond an intervening period of matrimonial alliance with some other husband, is by no means self-evident or fairly to be presumed.

M. R. BALDWIN.
C. J. ERDMAN.
JOHN J. McDANNOLD.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, this is one of three or four bills to which objection has been made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], and I think also by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STALLINGS]. At last Friday night session, I think the vote was about 3 to 1 in favor of this class of bills. The objection was made that the Committee on Invalid Pensions had not reported a general bill on this subject, and that a general bill could be made that could cover most cases of this class.

Now, I suggest, and I ask unanimous consent, that the action of the House be taken on them, that the committee to-night pass two or three of these bills, and let them be reported to the House with an order that a yea-and-nay vote be taken thereon, because a general bill could come up at the same time if necessary, and then we could get the action of the House on this class of legislation, and not simply throw out this kind of legislation by the act of a single man, or two or three men, out of the whole House. Refer it to the whole House, where a quorum could vote upon it, and have a yea-and-nay vote. I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. JONES. What was the request?

Mr. LACEY. The request was this: That this bill and the other three or four bills of the same character that have already been voted on and have not passed through the Committee of the Whole for the reason that the question of no quorum has been raised——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had better confine the request to this bill.

Mr. LACEY. I was suggesting this in reference to the other bills in order that we could get these out of the way. I make the suggestion as to this particular bill and will make a similar request as to the others—that this bill be passed through the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that it pass, and with the agreement that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken in the House.

Mr. HAYES. That has been frequently done with pension bills, but in such cases there has always been a certain amount of debate.

Mr. BAILEY. Before the request of the gentleman from Iowa is put, I desire to ask him whether he believes that the Committee of the Whole can bind the House to take a yea-and-nay vote?

Mr. LACEY. Any gentleman can compel a yea-and-nay vote, or the vote of a quorum.

Mr. BAILEY. But if a quorum votes without a call of the yeas and nays, then you can not have a yea-and-nay vote, and if there is no quorum your bill does not pass.

Mr. LACEY. Well, if there is a quorum a yea-and-nay vote may not be insisted upon. If the expression of the will of the House can be fully ascertained without such a vote, then the yeas and nays may not be demanded.

Mr. BAILEY. I made the suggestion merely to the gentleman so that it might be comprehended in the agreement, if any agreement was to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is correct Of course the Committee of the Whole can not bind the House; but agreements are often made informally in Committee of the Whole which are ratified in the House.

Mr. LACEY. This has been done frequently in previous Congresses.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry: There is nothing to prevent this committee from recommending a yea-and-nay vote in the House, is there?

The CHAIRMAN. That would be in order.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that the difficulty may be obviated if he will simply ask that this bill be reported to the House without any recommendation, and that it be taken up in the House.

Mr. CURTIS of New York. It would lose its place on the Calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not true that in order to obtain action in the House on a bill this Committee of the Whole must take either favorable or unfavorable action upon it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would be competent for the Committee of the Whole to report a bill without recommendation.

Mr. LACEY. I make this suggestion in view of the fact that the committee has already voted on this bill, and that there has been quite a large majority vote in favor of them, although not a quorum. Whether we act for or against a bill here the action of the House will be conclusive in the end, and by adopting my suggestion we shall get rid of this class of bills which are now blocking the way of other bills upon the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please state his request again.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation and with an agreement that a yea-and-nay vote may be had in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. STALLINGS. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. In view of the fact that general legislation upon this subject is about to be enacted, or at least to be brought before the House for action, I would suggest that all these cases pass to the foot of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make that request as to this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I do.

Mr. HAYES. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Then I ask that it be passed over without prejudice. That will leave it just as it is.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a fair subject upon which to test the sense of the House in regard to this class of pensions, for the reason that it is not claimed that there is anything peculiarly against the precedent that has been set so far as the facts in the case are concerned, and the facts in this case are peculiarly strong in favor of granting the pension.

I do not wish to block the way of other cases, but, as a matter of fairness, the House ought to be allowed to take a vote on this bill. I am perfectly content to take the vote here to-night and abide the result, quorum or no quorum; or I am perfectly willing that the bill shall go into the House and let the House determine the question. That is certainly a fair proposition and one that ought to be acceded to; but if that can not be done, as I do not wish to block the way of other pension bills, I will ask that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. HULL. I can not see any object in the world in passing these bills over every Friday night "without prejudice," and then taking them up again and having the same reports read over and over again at every Friday evening session. It is in the line of the precedents since the war for such bills as this to pass where meritorious cases are presented.

During the Fifty-second Congress I had one bill of this character from my own district. It passed the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. HAYES. I will consent that the bill shall go to the House with an adverse report. We will bring it right up and let the House take action on it.

Mr. HULL. Very well; that would dispose of it and get it off the Calendar. I am perfectly willing that any action be taken which will prevent bills of this class from standing at the head of the Calendar, depriving us of the opportunity of reaching other measures in which we are interested. I am interested in some bills farther down on the Calendar which have been held back for three weeks on account of these bills coming up every night and occupying the entire time of the evening session. I am entirely ready to consent to any action that will get them off this Private Calendar. I am not willing to consent to any action that will hold them at the head of the Calendar to obstruct other business every night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAYES] moves that this bill be reported to the House with an adverse recommendation.

Mr. HAYES. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. In the event that the bill should be so reported, and the House should reverse that action of the Committee of the Whole, would the bill have to come back to the Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not.

Mr. HAYES. Then I am perfectly content to have the matter go that way.

Mr. HUDSON. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the bill be reported adversely, does not that kill it?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. HUDSON. Can it go on the Calendar and come up afterwards if it be reported adversely?

Mr. HAYES. I will withdraw the motion to report the bill adversely, although I will not oppose the motion if made by anyone else.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that a motion has been made to report the bill favorably, and a motion is suggested to report it unfavorably. Now, it would seem that a compromise between these two propositions would be to report the bill without recommendation. I ask whether that can be done. I seems to me the Committee of the Whole would have the right to make such a report.

A MEMBER. That can not be done.

Mr. HULL. If the bill be reported adversely, will it not go on the Calendar, or will it come up without being called up specially?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not.

Mr. HULL. It will not take its place along with bills reported favorably?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will come up in its order in the House.

Mr. LACEY. If the Chair will hear me a moment, I wish to read from the rules upon a point which the Chair was asked about. In Rule XXIII, clause 7, I find the following:

> Whenever a bill is reported from a Committee of the Whole with an adverse recommendation, and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to the said committee without further action by the House.

So that under this rule, if we send this bill to the House with an adverse report, and the House should disagree to that report, the bill will simply come back to the Committee of the Whole, and we shall find ourselves in the same hole as when we started in.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] a question. If this bill should be reported to the House with an adverse recommendation, and should then be sent back here, would not the Committee of the Whole take that action of the House as an instruction to reverse its previous action and to make a favorable report upon the bill?

Mr. LACEY. The committee are already in favor of the bill. It is simply one or two individuals who are unwilling that the committee should act.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] be kind enough to cite for the information of the Chair the clause of the rule to which he just referred?

Mr. LACEY. Clause 7 of Rule XXIII.

The CHAIRMAN. [After a pause.] After examining the rule as cited by the gentleman from Iowa, the Chair finds that his impression as stated a few moments ago was incorrect.

Mr. HAYES. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BAKER of New Hampshire. I object.

Mr. HAYES. I move that the bill be passed over and be placed at the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. PICKLER and others objected.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order. The question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 41, noes 14.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. JONES, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HAYES.

Mr. HAYES. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over and go to the foot of the Calendar. I do not want to do anything, Mr. Chairman, to block the way of another class of pensions that the committee may be willing to pass. I am willing to take my chance in some other way in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Pending the count, is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. PICKLER. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

Mr. HAYES. I hope some other member will be appointed in my stead, Mr. Chairman, as a teller.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. MARTIN, to act as one of the tellers.

The committee proceeded to divide.

Mr. PICKLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair hold that it is incompetent for the committee to report this bill without recommendation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so decide.

Mr. PICKLER. If it can be reported without recommendation, I am willing that that shall be done. But I think we ought to have a vote one way or the other on the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not report it adversely?

Mr. PICKLER. That you can not do because the majority of the committee are in favor of the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. They might agree to report it adversely for the purpose of getting it before the House.

Mr. PICKLER. That can not be done when the majority are in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will report.

The tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 15.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

Mr. PICKLER. I withdraw the objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa, that this bill be passed over without prejudice, and take its place at the foot of the Calendar; but it is the last bill, I want to give notice now, so far as I am concerned, that can take that course.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this bill will be passed over without prejudice, and go to the foot of the Calendar.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. MAHON. Before going further, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a motion that any bill on the Calendar, taken up and read, and the report of the committee read and discussed, where the motion is made by the gentleman having charge of it to lay it aside, that it go, without further action, to the bottom of the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not be in order. It could only be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAHON. Well, I ask unanimous consent. The committee, of course, can make such an order.

Mr. LANE. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is equivalent to an objection.

MADISON M. THOMAS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1112) to correct the military record of Madison M. Thomas.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. That bill is not in order. It went to the foot of the Calendar last Friday night.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LOUISA B. HULL.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3693) granting a pension to Louisa B. Hull, widow of James E. Darrow.

Mr. LACEY. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice, in view of the action taken a few moments ago on a similar bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. PICKLER. I object; and pending that I would like to ask a question by consent. Why did the gentleman ask to have this go over?

Mr. LACEY. Because it stands in the way of other bills that will not be objected to.

Mr. HULL. But the other bill went to the foot of the Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let us have the regular order. The Chairman had decided that this bill could be passed over before either of these gentleman got up. I insist that the decision of the Chair shall stand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked if there was objection, and the gentleman from South Dakota promptly rose and objected.

Mr. PICKLER. Do I understand that this committee, when it comes to a certain class of bills which have been favorably reported by the committee, will refuse to consider them?

Mr. LACEY. We either have to do that or adjourn.

Mr. PICKLER. Then I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place upon the invalid pension roll of the United States, subject to the limitations of the general law, the name of Louisa B. Hull, widow of James E. Darrow, late of Company D, Thirty-third Iowa Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. JONES. I would like to have the report of the committee and the views of the minority read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Virginia.

The report (by Mr. LACEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3693) granting a pension to Louisa B. Hull, submit the following report:

This is a bill to grant a pension to Lucinda B. Hull. There is an error in the bill, the name of Mrs. Hull being Louisa. The bill should be corrected in that respect.

Mrs Hull was the widow of James E. Darrow, of Company D, Thirty-third Iowa Infantry, and as such widow was granted a pension under certificate 70080. Her husband died in the United States service. Subsequently she remarried to Benjamin Hull, from whom she was afterwards divorced on her own application on grounds of desertion. Her decree of divorce is filed with the committee. She is now very poor and advanced in years, and her restoration to the pension roll is recommended.

She remarried September 9, 1865. Benjamin Hull, whom she married as her second husband, was also a soldier. Since the said devorce said Hull remarried and died, leaving a widow surviving him. Her first husband died April 28, 1864. Her divorce was granted September 13, 1880, by the district court of Lyon County, Kans.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass after being amended by inserting "Louisa" in place of "Lucinda" in line 5. Also, amend title to read "Granting a pension to Louisa B. Hull."

The views of the minority were read as follows:

The views of the minority (by Mr. MCDANNOLD) were read as follows:

"The minority of the Committee on Invalid Pensions submit the following statement of their views in regard to the bill (H. R. 3693) restoring the pension of Louisa B. Hull:

"The minority have expressed their views in this class of cases in report 601 on the bill 2908, to pension Martha E. Miller. That statement is equally applicable to this case, and is as follows:

The purpose of this bill is to restore her to the pension roll the same as if she were still the widow of the soldier whose name she voluntarily surrendered years ago.

To pass this bill is to nullify for the benefit of this one individual the substantial limitation of the general laws that the pension of soldiers' widows who have remarried shall cease.

The objections to be urged against such bills as this are numerous. In the first place, it makes an exception of a case which is in nowise exceptional. There may be varying degrees of destitution in different cases, but it may be fairly stated that all cases of widows who have remarried and again become husbandless, by reason of death or divorce, present the same substantial conditions.

If any widow so situated should be restored to pension, all widows so situated should be restored, and this by general enactment and not by individual private bills, whereby those who may happen to have a friend to espouse their cause secure a benefit which the modest and the unknown never think of seeking. Special pension acts are justifiable only in cases which are essentially exceptional, and should not be used to grant to one that which is denied to the many, whose situation is precisely the same. But aside from this consideration, however, the soldier's widow who remarries voluntarily relinquishes her pension, because she prefers to do so.

The Government can not become an insurer against an unfortunate termination of this second matrimonial venture either by divorce or death. To restore pension in case of divorce is to encourage remarried widows to seek divorces, and, in any event, it is to give them an ostensible claim upon the soldier's death and memory, which they have long since renounced by preference.

Furthermore, it is not to be assumed that legislation of this character is in the line of justice or of honor to the soldiers themselves, or that it is necessarily desired or favored by the soldier classes. A contribution from the public Treasury to the support of the widow of the soldier, so long as she remains his widow, every soldier, perhaps, desires, and the common consent of the nation for thirty years has sanctioned this; but that each soldier looks forward to and desires that his services and his memory shall be the basis of a pension to his wife at some remote day, beyond an intervening period of matrimonial alliance with some other husband, is by no means self-evident or fairly to be presumed.

M. R. BALDWIN,
C. J. ERDMAN,
JOHN J. McDANNOLD.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana (pending the reading of the minority report). Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this bill comes up for consideration at the point where we left off considering it at the last Friday night session. It had been fully discussed, and we were voting on the question of laying it aside when the point of no quorum was raised. It seems to me that the reading of these reports is an unnecessary waste of time.

The CHAIRMAN. But there was no order to close debate, was there?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. None. I again renew the request for unanimous consent that this bill be passed by on the Calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PICKLER. I object; and pending that, if I can have a word——

The CHAIRMAN. Only by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor, and the report is being read in his time.

Mr. PICKLER. The bill is before the House then?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. The Clerk will continue the reading.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the minority report.

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to appear obstinate, because I am never obstinate.

Mr. BRETZ. Withdraw your objection, then.

Mr. PICKLER. I believe I have the floor. I have no criticism upon any gentleman upon this floor for any action he takes upon the pension question. I suppose he is representing his constituents. I am seriously opposed to the position of some gentlemen here in regard to pensions, but I have no personal criticism of those gentlemen; but, Mr. Chairman, it is evident to me, it is evident to every man who has been attending these Friday night sessions during this session of Congress, that there are a few gentlemen here who are determined that no pension legislation shall pass if they can help it. That is their prerogative, and I have no difference with them as members of the House. It is their business.

Now, I have objected to this bill going to the foot of the Calendar. I objected to the bill of the gentleman from Iowa, on the other side of the House, going to the foot of the Calendar. The gentleman has as much right to have his bill considered as any other member of this House. He is a constant attendant here, and a faithful member. He brings up a bill, and yet he can not have consideration of it. I am a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. We have carefully considered these bills. These widows of soldiers have the right to the voice of this committee as to whether they shall have relief or not. But it seems that a few gentlemen here are determined to make this a stumbling-block for all pension legislation.

Now, my opinion is that these gentlemen are opposed not only to these bills, but to all bills to pension anybody, and if there can be any excuse mustered up they make use of it. I have no fault to find. That is your business. If that is all the Union soldiers are entitled to, if you believe the Government owes soldiers and their widows no more than that, that is your prerogative, and I have no quarrel with you personally, as you well know; but it does seem to me that it is poor treatment of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, after they have considered these bills, for any gentlemen to dictate and say that only certain bills which they select shall be considered, and that bills to which they object shall have no consideration. That is unfair to this House, it is unfair to the committee, and gentlemen are unfair to themselves when they take that position. It is too arbitrary, it seems to me, for any gentleman to assume any such a position.

Now, I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions a question. Two or three gentlemen have lately said to me that it is the intention of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MARTIN of Indiana] to try to get a day in the House for the consideration of these bills for the pensioning of widows. I should like to ask the gentleman about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions—probably the gentleman was not at the meeting—I introduced a resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Rules, asking them to give to the Committee on Invalid Pensions two days for the consideration of bills favorably reported by this committee. I have no doubt that within the next thirty days, and probably within two weeks, time will be given for the consideration of these different bills.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; I was at that meeting, but I have not heard whether the gentleman succeeded in getting the days or not.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Not yet.

Mr. PICKLER. Are these bills to have consideration if you get those days?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, I should like to know if the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has consulted these gentlemen who select these bills, and the gentlemen who are giving us a calendar of their own rather than the one that is printed; and I should like to know whether there is any other class of bills that we shall not be allowed to consider?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have not consulted with any gentleman upon this question except thus far: As I explained to the Committee on Invalid Pensions to-day, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] came to me on Tuesday with a proposition. I told him I did not like the idea of a few members objecting to a class of cases and taking them away from the consideration of the House. I felt opposed to it. The more I thought of it, however, the more I felt it my duty to lay his proposition before the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, which I did to-day.

I laid before them the proposition, as coming from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], a gentleman who has never raised the point of no quorum. I had no consultation prior to the request I made this evening with anybody else except the gentleman from Missouri, and with our committee to-day. Now, if you will pardon me for taking another moment, there are, besides the nine bills which are objected to, twenty-five other bills. There are bills for insane children, helpless children, for widows who have been trying for twenty-five years to get some relief, widows whose husbands died years and years ago.

I feel, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, under all the circumstances, that it would be the best thing to do if we would lay these other bills aside temporarily, without any thought of abandoning them. They would come up when the Committee on Rules would give us a day, and I think that it would be better for all concerned to lay these bills aside temporarily and take up bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. BRETZ (to Mr. PICKLER). You can not make any objection to that?

Mr. PICKLER. There are widows and insane children and old men dying every day, that these men have sent to the poor house by their objections. It is these gentlemen who have made the point of no quorum who are keeping these bills back.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement, and then I would like to ask the gentleman two or three questions; and then maybe we can get at the facts. I have never made the point of no quorum, and I do not make any factious opposition against pension bills.

Mr. PICKLER. I believe that.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I believe I have the right to fight every pension bill that I think is bogus, and I am going to do it. Now, I want to ask you two or three questions. We have these three classes of pensions that have been suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MARTIN]. If they were taken out of the way we would be ready and have an opportunity to discuss pension bills on their individual merits. Each one of these three classes of pension claims which have been referred to present a principle different from the ordinary principle contained in individual cases. Is not that true?

Mr. PICKLER. I do not know about any other. We are talking of these widows' cases.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am coming to the three classes.

Mr. PICKLER. What are the other classes?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The first class is the widow of a soldier who has remarried and then become a widow again.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is one class. The second class is that of paying large pensions to men simply because they held rank above that of a private soldier. I am teetotally opposed to pensions of that kind.

Mr. PICKLER. Well, most of us are opposed to such cases.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well. And the other class is the indiscriminate removal of charges of desertion against men who did desert during the war. Now, I want to ask you this question: Has not your committee reported a general bill to pension these women who have become widows a second time—is not that true?

Mr. PICKLER. We have reported a bill that will pension some of them.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You have prepared a bill, and you are going to report it.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes; it is ready. It is agreed to in the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, there are 20,000 or 30,000 or 50,000 widows in the United States who are just as much entitled to a pension on any principle you can present as either one of these women. Is not that true?

Mr. PICKLER. Not so many.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why do you want to single out one here and there because she simply happens to have an energetic member of Congress to take care of her interest? Why not wait until you can get to consider a general pension bill on this question?

Mr. PICKLER. Because you can not keep ten thousand from dying then you are willing that five thousand should starve. That is your proposition.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You have already wasted enough time at these Friday night sessions to have passed many pension bills.

Mr. PICKLER. Who has?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. You have.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, wait a moment. I am the friend of all of you, and I like you all. I am friend of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] and the gentleman from Alabama and you; and one is just as bad as the other about raising objections here. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. PICKLER. No, indeed. This side never raises the question of no quorum.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to finish my statement. The very minute we get the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Alabama pacified, you or somebody else bobs up with one objection or another. [Laughter and applause.] Now, I want to say this, and then quit on the subject: I have come here every one of these Friday evening sessions. I would rather be at home reading even a cheap novel, or history, or the Bible, or going to the theater, or doing whatever else I please, than come here and hear men rehashing the same arguments night after night. Now, if you will get out of the way, and two or three other people, the committee will agree that these bills be laid aside, and we can discuss fifteen or twenty meritorious measures to-night.

Mr. PICKLER. How many will you insure to pass?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will insure that every bill will pass that we consider genuine.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, what is the argument of the gentleman from Missouri? It is simply this: The rules of the House gave us a Calendar, and that Calendar is made under the rules of the House; and the gentleman from Missouri says now that the whole committee shall surrender to two or three gentlemen who have prevented this legislation. That is the proposition—that this House shall actually get down upon its marrow-bones and desert the rules of the House, desert the Calendar, and surrender to their domination. That is what you ask, Brother CLARK.

You talk about this class of widows and others that ought to be pensioned. There is no such number of them as you name, but where is the justice in saying, when you have a meritorious widow's bill on the Calendar, that you will not give that widow a pension because there are a thousand others who ought to have pensions? Again, the very gentlemen who have been objecting to these bills to pension widows, when interrogated, have stated that they will not vote for a general measure. That is as inconsistent as anything can be.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, no; it is not.

Mr. PICKLER. Yes it is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me suggest this to the gentleman. A man has a perfect right to insist that a bill which involves a principle, as this one does, shall have fair discussion, not by half a dozen or a dozen members at these evening sessions, but in a full House. While I have not made up my mind as to whether that kind of a general bill ought to be passed or not, because there are good arguments against it and good arguments in favor of it, still I say there is all the difference in the world between voting a pension to one widow while you leave thousands of others who are on the same footing without pensions, and taking up and discussing a general bill to pension widows of that class; and a man who says that he will object to every one of these bills and will vote against a general law is not inconsistent when he says that he wants that general law discussed here.

Mr. PICKLER. These gentlemen who are making these objections have rolled these cases as a sweet morsel under their tongues, and I have no doubt they thank God that they can have the excuse of a widow's claim of this character to cut out other pensions.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Well, if you get out of the way we will demonstrate whether that is so or not.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WEADOCK). The committee will be in order. Gentlemen must not interrupt the gentleman from South Dakota without his consent.

Mr. PICKLER. I rather enjoy it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from South Dakota to one fact. The very next bill on the Calendar succeeding this one, which the gentleman in charge of has asked to have laid aside, is a bill to pension a woman 71 years of age and very poor. It is intended to remove a technical difficulty. Her husband has been gone for years and years and she can not make proof of his death, although he has been gone long enough to presume death. Now, the next bill, I say, brings up this question——

Mr. PICKLER. The reason that old woman has not been pensioned and has not been drawing her pension for six months past is because two or three gentlemen on this floor have made the point of no quorum on these bills night after night, and the blame is upon their heads and not upon mine.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PICKLER. I decline to yield.

Mr. LANE. I raise a point of order, Mr. Chairman. What is the question before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] will proceed in order.

Mr. LANE. I call the gentleman to order. He has not the floor on any question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The gentleman from South Dakota will proceed in order.

Mr. LANE. What is the question that is before the committee?

Mr. BRETZ. This widow's bill.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word now in reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], because I have a great respect for his opinion in these matters. He talks about bills being reported here for the "indiscriminate" removal of the charges of desertion. There is no such class of cases here. There are no indiscriminate bills of that character reported to this House. The fact is that many of us here are very hard upon men who technically "deserted" when the war was over, but who really were not deserters at all.

We have forgiven every other class of men who sinned against the Government during that war except some poor boy who had not seen his mother for months or years, or some poor husband who had not seen his wife and children for months or for years and who left the army after the war was over without a technical formal discharge. That is the kind of "deserters" that we are relieving and that is the kind of charges of desertion that ought to be removed. Thirty years have passed since the war, and in cases of that kind, where the men have wives and families, that technical disgrace of such a charge ought to be wiped out in all cases where the men were not really deserters in the true sense of the word. We have tried it here night after night and we can not pass that kind of a case.

Now, so far as officers are concerned, I think nobody here wants an officer to have any advantage over a private. I am sure I do not. I was two years and more in the ranks; I know what the privates and the noncommissioned officers had to bear, and my sympathies are with them all the time. So far as that matter is concerned, gentlemen undertake to raise a bugbear which has no real existence. We are not reporting bills on that line at all. I know that our committee is not.

Having said this much, and having detained the committee thus long, I will only add that if it is the will of the majority that two or three men are to dictate our legislation here; if two or three men are to say that the rules of the House are to go for naught and that we must obey their behests; if the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions desires to acquiesce in that position and surrender to those men; if we are to desert this Calendar and let those gentlemen select the sort of legislation we are to consider, and if the gentleman from Iowa, whose bill is now pending, desires to lay it aside under such circumstances, I shall not object further.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say just a word before renewing my proposition. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there have been 991 pension bills referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions in this House. Two weeks ago I called the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that only two pension bills had become laws during the present Congress—one of them granting a pension on account of service in the war of 1812, the other on account of service in the Revolutionary war.

I wish to say to-night that since that statement was made, one more pension bill has gone through—a bill granting a pension on account of service in the Seminole war. So that up to the present date, nine months of the session having passed, just three private pension bills have gone through, and not one of them granting pension on account of service in the war of the rebellion—not one out of 991. Now, I would like to see one such bill get through; I should like to see some soldier of the late war pensioned by this Fifty-third Congress before the election.

Therefore I will withdraw my motion that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation, and in the hope that we may meet some bill which will be satisfactory to gentlemen who have been interposing objections I will ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without losing its place, and that the next bill be taken up.

Mr. JONES. I object. Mr. Chairman—— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WEADOCK). The gentleman having objected, the question is on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. JONES. I rise to speak to the question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs leave to remind the gentleman that—

No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case——

Mr. JONES. How many times have I spoken on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Three times, to the Chairman's knowledge.

Mr. JONES. I beg leave to differ with the Chairman. I have not done any such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The RECORD shows how often the gentleman has spoken.

Mr. JONES. I have not spoken three times on this bill, or twice. The report was read in my time, and I did not say one word. After that the gentleman from South Dakota got the floor in my time; and I have not addressed the Chair or the House since.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true as to this evening; but the gentleman spoke on this bill a week ago and two weeks ago.

Mr. JONES. Does the Chair mean to hold that because I spoke on this bill a week ago and two weeks ago, I can not speak on it again to-night?

The CHAIRMAN. Most certainly.

Mr. JONES. Then I understand that, as I have heretofore spoken on this bill twice—once a week ago and once two weeks ago—I can not speak on it at all to-night?

The CHAIRMAN. That is my understanding of the rule.

Mr. JONES. I desire to have the ruling of the Chair on that point, because I will appeal from any such decision as that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the sixth clause of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows.

No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I understand that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] desires only five minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to speak for that time. I think this is the quickest way to get rid of this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. McKEIGHAN. I object.

Mr. JONES. I would like to have a ruling of the Chair on the question of my right to the floor to discuss this bill.

Mr. McKEIGHAN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Nebraska to withdraw the objection?

Mr. McKEIGHAN. I refuse to withdraw the objection.

Mr. JONES. I ask a ruling of the Chair on the question of my right to address the committee. The gentleman from South Dakota has addressed the House on this question more frequently than I have, and he has been permitted to speak without limit. He has spoken five, or perhaps ten times on this very bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman had previously spoken on the bill. But the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Virginia in his own right.

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to say a word in reply to some remarks that have fallen from the lips of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY]. In the first place, I will remind the committee that the reason no more pension bills have been passed by this Congress——

Mr. McKEIGHAN. Mr. Chairman, I object to this debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is admonished that the practice has been to recognize members even if they have spoken more than once, and therefore the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia, who is talking in his own time.

Mr. JONES. I will first call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to a statement made by him, that only three pension bills have been passed at this session of Congress. I want to direct his attention to the fact that many more than that number of bills have passed this branch of Congress.

Mr. HULL. How many more?

Mr. LACEY. Forty-one have passed the House.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Iowa admits that forty-one have passed the House; and the only reason, I can tell the gentleman, why they have not passed Congress is because they have not been able to secure consideration at the other end of the Capitol. In that branch of Congress there is pending to-day a measure involving the interests of thousands upon thousands of people throughout the length and breadth of this land, and the passage of which is being blocked by the political associates of the gentleman from Iowa.

I want to say to the gentleman that the reason why those forty-one pension bills, of which he spoke, have not become laws at this Congress is because his party associates at the other end of the Capitol are preventing and blockading all legislation by their obstructive tactics, and in order to prevent the passage of a measure for which the people of the country are clamoring, and on account of the delay in the passage of which every interest in the land is suffering.

And I want to say to the gentleman from South Dakota, who has been kind enough to say to those of us on this side of the House who have sometimes objected to the passage of these bills and sometimes been guilty of demanding that a quorum shall be present when bills of the character of this one are passed—I want to say to him that I am very much obliged to him for stating that he does not find any fault with us personally for our conduct in regard to these matters, which he nevertheless seems to consider very reprehensible.

But the gentleman does some of us on this side of the House very great injustice when he says our object is to defeat all pension legislation, and when he says that we roll these particular classes of cases under our tongues as sweet morsels, because we find in them excuses to block pension legislation.

Mr. PICKLER. I did not mention the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. JONES. As I believe there has been some sort of an understanding on this side of the House that if bills which did not come within the classes mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] were taken up and considered on their merits there would be no quorum demanded; and the only objection that has come to that proposition has come from the gentleman from South Dakota and other gentleman on his side of the House.

Now, the only reason that these bills, which the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions speaks of as pending here, have not been considered, is because of the persistency and the obstinacy of gentlemen on the other side, who insist on blocking all legislation on the subject of pensions by keeping before this body bills that they know there will be objection to and that they know can never be passed by this body without the presence of a quorum.

The gentleman from South Dakota said, in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, that the bills that have been before the committee for the purpose of removing charges of desertion have been to correct the military records of poor boys who technically deserted after the close of the war in order to join their mothers, or husbands who left the Army for the purpose of seeing their wives and children. I want to say to the gentleman that the only bill I now recall to remove the charge of desertion which has given rise to long discussion, was one where the facts showed the man had twice deserted, and both times to go to Mexico to continue his fighting under another flag and for another country. That was the case that excited the admiration of my friend from Alabama [Gen. WHEELER], simply because the fellow deserted in order to satisfy further his desire for war.

These are the character of bills we are opposed to—bills correcting military records of desertion to put the deserters on the pension rolls; bills intended—and the gentleman himself admits he is not so much in favor of that class of bills—to increase the pensions of the widows of officers (and I understand the committee, of which he is a member, is not very favorably disposed to that class of cases either), and bills to pension widows who have remarried, but who have since lost their second husbands.

Those are the three classes of cases that have been blocking legislation. Those are the cases that I and those who have acted with me have objected to, and those are the cases that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] persists in keeping before this body, if not for the purpose, certainly with the result, of preventing all legislation on the numerous bills now awaiting action, and many of which may be meritorious.

I have heard no gentleman on this side object to considering cases not embraced in the enumerated classes. Certainly I have never objected to them, and I came here to-night with the hope that gentlemen on the other side of the House would see the futility of trying further to force through this body this objectionable class of cases, and that they would leave those cases and take up individual cases not open to the objection so often urged upon this floor.

So far as I am personally concerned, I never expect to support any bill to pension anybody unless I am persuaded that it is a meritorious bill. Every bill should be discussed, or, at least, the report should be read in each case, and when that has been done I shall be prepared to vote upon all cases not embraced in the classes which have been named.

If there are cases here that are meritorious, there will be nobody in this House more willing than myself to have the committee pass upon them. If I can not support them, I will vote against them, and unless they are more than ordinarily objectionable, I will not raise the question of a quorum against them. Now, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection to passing this bill by without prejudice.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I beg the gentleman's pardon for asking to occupy the floor for a few minutes.

Mr. RAY. Very well.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. It is a matter that is somewhat personal to myself. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] made a remark a little while ago, perhaps inadvertently, to which I desire to call his attention and the attention of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I have felt somewhat of a responsibility resting upon myself to insist, whenever a Tuesday morning came, on a meeting of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and whenever a Friday morning came to insist on having a meeting of the committee, and on every Friday night that we should have a meeting here. I have felt all the time that it was my duty to insist on carrying out the rule of the House requiring a Friday night session.

I think I have been as attentive as any other member of the House in coming here and, with deference to the feelings of every other member on this floor, undertaking to secure the passage of some of the bills which have required the work, the care, and the study of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I am sure that every member of the Committee of the Whole now present will bear me out in this, that I have persistently, night after night, insisted upon the passage of the bills favorably reported by our committee in the order in which they have stood upon the Calendar.

I have insisted week after week, by my personal intercourse with members, and in every way that I know of have tried to induce members of this House on both sides to come here for the purpose of making a quorum. No member of this House has felt so keenly as I have the fact that, after discussion on bills had taken place, after members had occupied the floor for fifteen or twenty minutes, or maybe an hour, that when a bill came to passage and an overwhelming majority sustained the views of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that then the point of no quorum should be insisted upon.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is a thing that I can not help. The consience of each member is in his own keeping. I feel that I have done my duty when I have insisted, in a gentlemanly and earnest way, upon the consideration and passage of these bills by this committee.

But, Mr. Chairman, I recognize this fact. Night after night we have failed to secure the passage of these bills because the point of no quorum has been made. Thirty-five bills are now on the Calendar, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. LACEY. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. In a moment. Of these, nine are of a kind to which objection has been made. Twenty-five others of these bills are of a class to which I think there can be no objection, embracing in some instances relief in cases of destitution which appeal to the sympathy of every member of this committee.

In view of that fact, can the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] afford to say, because I wish that human distress shall be relieved, because I ask this committee to pass over bills which every member present here knows can not be passed on account of the absence of a quorum, in order that we may pass to the consideration of other bills for the relief of want, for the relief of people in the poor house, for the relief of the imbecile and insane, for the relief of people lying upon sick beds—can the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] afford to say here to-night that I have surrendered, in the matter of the consideration of these bills, when I ask that they be passed over?

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions knows very well that I never reflect on him. I believe the soldiers have as good a friend in him as can be found. My suggestion was that it was humiliating that any two or three members could compel the gentleman to surrender. Another thing. Some of these widows are in poorhouses and are just as poorly situated as the class of people whom the gentleman describes. These widows have the right to have their cases considered.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. Let me say in regard to that, that in the Fifty-second Congress I had the honor to report a bill for the relief of the whole class of remarried widows whose second husbands had died.

It is not violating the secrets of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to say that a general bill has been agreed upon, though not yet reported, to reach cases presented by this bill, and also in regard to remarried women whose second husbands have died. That report, Mr. Chairman, will soon be before the House for its action. I will not consent under any circumstances to abandon a case, because I believe they are right; I believe that we should not because they are objected to; but when we can not help ourselves we should not refuse to pass to the consideration of other bills.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I appeal to members of this committee on both sides of the House, as to whether I have ever asked of you to do that which is dishonorable, or asked any gentleman who believed in the justness of a bill to retreat from his own position on that subject. But we are confronted with this condition. What shall we do? Had the request I preferred this evening, before a bill had been taken up for consideration, been agreed to—and I say this not to criticise the objection made by any gentleman—but had that been agreed to we would have tested that which the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. PICKLER] seems to question, the good faith of all the members of this House; and if they had acted in good faith—and I have no reason to doubt their words and their declarations—I think they would have done as they said, instead of being now at ten minutes to 10 o'clock, within forty minutes of the time when we must adjourn, engaged in this debate, we would have considered and I believe that this committee would have been ready to report favorably to the House a dozen or twenty bills to relieve the sufferings of some distressed people. [Applause.]

Mr. PICKLER. There is plenty of time if they will repent.

Mr. RAY. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that the gentlemen on the other side of this House, who have occupied two hours in constant talk, are now, just as the hands of the clock approach the hour when we must adjourn, very, very anxious that gentlemen on this side say nothing and that we go ahead, as the gentleman remarks, and pass a few bills——

Mr. MARSH. Twenty of them.

Mr. RAY (continuing). When they know that not one pension bill can be discussed or voted upon, and when they know that it is not desired that a pension bill shall be discussed or voted upon, how suddenly virtuous after a long career of dissipation!

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Does the gentleman refer to me?

Mr. RAY. Now, if the gentleman will kindly obey the rules of the House for a few minutes I have a few words that I desire to utter, and my only excuse for speaking is that the hours of this session are gone by and that we have reached that hour when it is impossible to do any business. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. OUTHWAITE. If you will stop talking we can.

Mr. RAY. Oh, yes; the gentleman from Ohio is now very anxious, having got his bill through——

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Yes, that others shall get theirs through.

Mr. RAY (continuing). And the hours of this session having been wasted by gentlemen on his side of the House, that we should keep silent on this side; but we shall not keep silent. I have the floor, and I propose to occupy it until I am through with my remarks.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Break away.

Mr. RAY. The gentleman from Ohio has been heard, and I voted for his bill, because it was a pension bill and would assist a poor woman who thought she was a soldier's wife, against my better judgment. [Laughter and applause.] Because—yes, I did it—because I was voting, as was said here by some of our friends, to pension a woman who never was the widow of a soldier; and the gentleman from Ohio knows that his associates—he has not done it—who voted for his bill to-night, have come here time and time again and done everything they could to prevent the granting of a pension to honest, poor, and destitute widows of a Union soldier. But they stand by the gentleman from Ohio out of Democratic courtesy, I suppose.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. What is there before the committee that is open to debate now? There was a request for unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all. There is a bill pending before the committee.

Mr. COX. Unanimous consent was asked that that bill be sent to the heels of the Calendar. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] objected, and then withdrew his objection, and I do not know what is before the House. The gentleman from South Dakota also objected, and withdrew his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. That request has not been submitted to the House.

Mr. COX. It was submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has not been formally submitted again.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not take the gentleman off the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. RAY. I believe I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor. The bill is before the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. I rise to a point of order, then.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The request was made from the Chair that the bill before the committee be laid aside without prejudice. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] objected, but afterwards withdrew his objection. Was it not, then, the duty of the Chair to have declared the bill laid aside without prejudice, or at least to have asked whether there was further objection?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). The present occupant of the chair was not presiding at the time, but his recollection is——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] can answer for himself as to having withdrawn his objection.

The CHAIRMAN. In the case stated by the gentleman from Illinois it would have been the duty, or at least the privilege, of the Chair to have again submitted the question and asked whether there was further objection; but that was not done, so the bill is still pending, and the gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not wonder that some of the gentlemen on the other side are mighty anxious to raise a point of order as a means of preventing any member on this side of the House from being heard.

In the first place, I desire to call the attention of this committee to the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, presented here repeatedly, to abandon all of these bills on the Private Calendar except one certain class, and to take up and consider those. What assurance has he that if we do abandon three classes of cases the same gentlemen on his side who now object will not raise objections to the remaining class? When we have surrendered three points and only one is left, then we shall be at the mercy of these same gentlemen as to the other bills, and if they raise the point of no quorum they will have made these Friday night sessions absolutely futile and fruitless.

It seems to me that the correct rule by which the members of this committee should be guided is to regard the principle upon which bills are reported from the various committees of this House, and when those committees have found certain bills and measures to be meritorious and proper to come in here, into the House, then we, like good citizens, faithful representatives of the people, and I may say like good soldiers, should stand by our guns, and if any gentleman throws in objections of any kind, let us fight it out on the line of justice to the Union soldiers, even if it takes all of these Friday night sessions, even, in the words of Grant, "if it takes all summer."

I do not believe in yielding the principle upon which these bills are reported because of the factious opposition of any one, or two, or of half a dozen men. If the bill is just and proper and meritorious, and ought to become a law, we fail in our duty if we yield to the groundless objections of any Representative here. Let us stand by the right, and if we go down let us go with colors flying.

If a quorum is not present there is a way to produce a quorum. Let us exert the powers that abide in this House and a quorum can be produced here on Friday evenings the same as it can be produced on any day that Congress is in session. The suggestion has been made that we set aside one day or two days in the House for the consideration of these pension bills.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I will ask the gentleman whether it is not a fact that within the two hours and a half to which these Friday evening sessions are confined, the attempt to procure a quorum in the way he suggests would simply result in the expenditure of whatever amount of money was necessary and finally in an adjournment without a quorum? That has been my experience.

Mr. RAY. Well, that may have been the gentleman's experience, but during this session of the Fifty-third Congress I have not seen the experiment tried.

Mr. BRETZ. It has been tried.

Mr. RAY. No effort, so far as I know, has been made to produce a quorum on any Friday evening here. Now, it rather strikes me that if the officers of this House should set themselves busily to work they could produce a quorum. If you will do me the honor to make me your Sergeant-at-Arms, and give me the power to appoint deputies, I will go into all the saloons——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. Of course you will. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAY. I will go into all the saloons and hotels and parlors, and in the very first saloon I strike I shall probably find anywhere from twenty-five to fifty Democratic objectors to pensions. [Laughter.] Now come again if you want to. Mr. Chairmain, what I was saying is that we could produce a quorum here if we desired to do it. The suggestion has been made that we should have the Committee on Rules set aside a day or two for the consideration of pension bills, and some of my Republican friends are so green as to think that that is a bona fide proposition, or that the Committee on Rules would seriously consider it.

Why, sir, the Committee on the Judiciary which has charge of the most important legislation, except the appropriation bills, affecting the people of this great country, has been clamoring for a week or even for a day or two for the consideration of the many important measures that are reported from that committee, and thus far it has been absolutely impossible to get an hour's time; yet gentlemen think that the Committee on Rules, after our rules have set apart every Friday evening for the consideration of pension bills, would step in and assign a day or two days to this particular business!

The idea is ridiculous upon its face, and it hardly seems to me that the proposition can have been advanced in good faith. But suppose that were done by the Committee on Rules, what would be the result? Why is it that our Democratic friends, with their majority of 80 or 90, are not here at these Friday evening sessions? Is it because they are busy elsewhere saving the country? Not at all. It is because they are not disposed to come here. It is because they do not want to come here. It is because they do not intend to come here to help pass these pension bills. It is because they think that enough pension legislation has passed the Congress of the United States, and therefore they remain away from these Friday evening sessions.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia and Mr. CAPEHART rose.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. RAY. I can not accommodate you all at once.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Just one question: Why is it that the Republicans are not here? There are only about twenty Republican members here.

Mr. RAY. I will answer that question in a minute. Now, what is the other gentleman's question?

Mr. CAPEHART. I merely wanted to make a similar suggestion. There are three times as many Democrats here as Republicans.

Mr. RAY. Very good. Two gentlemen have made the same point, or asked the same question. Now, it will be a saving of time to answer both at once.

Mr. CAPEHART. How many nights have you been here?

Mr. RAY. I have been here every Friday night, with two exceptions. I never have made a speech before to-night at any one of these Friday night sessions. I have come here and seated myself, and behaved myself like a gentleman. [Laughter.] I have listened to rant and declamation, principally from your side of the House, all of you proclaiming your love for the Union soldier, all of you telling how much you would do for the Union soldier if we would only give you a chance. And then just as we had a bill well under way—when every man in the House, Republican or Democrat (it made no difference which), rose up in favor of the bill—some particular member on your side of the House who had kept silent as a mouse, quiet as "pigs in thunder" down to that particular moment, would rise up with all the dignity of an American legislator and raise the point of "no quorum;" and so all the work previously done would be fruitless.

Now, you ask me a question which I have not answered and which I desire now to answer without interruption. You ask me——

Mr. LIVINGSTON rose.

Mr. RAY. Let me answer this question first, and then I will listen to you.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I wanted to suggest that with the number of Democrats we have here to-night, if you had the entire representation of your party here, we would have a quorum.

Mr. RAY. Oh, yes; the blame is all on the Republicans! I have two points to make on that before I get through, because the gentleman from South Carolina has brought that up already. Now, I want to answer why the Republicans do not come here. In the first place, the Democratic party holds control of this House by about 90 majority. We have come here—the Republicans I refer to now—we have come here night after night——

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. When?

Mr. RAY. Early in the session—all there were of us.

A MEMBER. How many?

Mr. RAY. Every one of us. We would muster every man and come here. But we could not muster a quorum. We have not enough Republican members in this House to muster a quorum. But, thank God, Mr. Chairman, in the next Congress we are going to have enough, a great abundance, so that we can muster a quorum on this side of the House; and we will not ask any odds of you on that. [Applause on the Republican side.] That is one reason why we do not come here any more. We have got sick and tired of it. Every time we come here, our feelings are so stirred up——

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I would like to ask you another question.

Mr. RAY. Let me answer this one.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I thought you had got through.

Mr. RAY. We are so stirred up; we are made so indignant through and through by the kind of talk that we hear from such gentlemen on your side as the gentleman from South Carolina, to whom I desire to address a few remarks before I get through, that many keep away. We found it useless to come.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Are you not mistaken in referring to me? I will be on hand if you want to talk to me.

Mr. RAY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not refer to him.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Was the gentleman a member of the Fifty-first Congress; and does he not know that never during that Congress was there a Republican quorum in this House on any Friday night, at any time in the history of the American Congress?

Mr. RAY. Oh, my dear, lovable, generous, eloquent friend from West Virginia, do not travel so far back in history! [Laughter.]

Mr. WAUGH. Allow me to say that the Fifty-first Congress passed more than 1,300 private pension bills; the Fifty-second Congress passed but 200; and this Congress has passed only 3 up to date.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Of course, there must be fewer pension bills from year to year. You do not expect these bills to increase in number as time goes on.

Mr. RAY. My colleagues have presented very truthfully the work that was done by these past Congresses; but if the Fifty-first, or the Fiftieth, or the Forty-ninth Congress committed sins, that is no reason why we should commit sins. If they were guilty of errors of omission or commission, it is no reason why we should follow their pattern. We should take warning from them and do better ourselves.

But it seems to me sometimes that you gentlemen on the other side are trailing along in the halls of progress anywhere from two hundred to five hundred years behind the times; and when you talk on these subjects you insist on talking about something that is dead and gone and buried.

Mr. TALBERT of South Carolina. Like the Republican party.

Mr. RAY (continuing). Let the dead past bury its dead. Let us act like men in the living present. Let us do what we ought to do. Let us take hold of this pension legislation and consider these matters on their merits; and, if deserving of a favorable recommendation at the hands of this committee, let us say so and report the bills to the House for its action.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I am ready to report one before we go to-night if you will give us a chance.

Mr. RAY. I desire to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that no Republican on a pension bill has ever made the point of no quorum. If you can find one noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD who has done it, I will give you a premium of $25. That ought to satisfy the fastidious taste of my esteemed friend from West Virginia. And, Mr. Chairman, no Republican ever voted, it is suggested to me, against a general pension law for the Union soldiers.

And I want to say to gentlemen on that side of the House that I have seen bill after bill presented to this House for the pensioning of men who served in the Indian wars and served in the Mexican war, and after that time went into the war of the rebellion and fought against the Union; I have seen bill after bill in their behalf. There were men on this side who voted against the pensioning of that class of men. I was not one of that class. I do not care how many years a man fought or how well he fought in the armies of the Confederacy.

I believe that the rank and file of that army were as sincere and honest in their convictions as were the boys who wore the blue; and while I would not give them a pension for that service, yet, if previous to making that mistake, they fought under the Stars and Stripes to maintain the dignity, the character, and the honor of the old flag and the honor of the country, I would give them a pension; and the fact that they fought in the Confederacy makes no difference to me when called on to act on such a question. We have wiped that score out. We have extended to them the right hand of fellowship.

Whenever an old soldier of the Confederacy comes up loyally to the support of the Union under the Star Spangled Banner, he will find the hand of fellowship extended to him, the fraternal hand extended in a warm and friendly grasp; we will treat him the same as we treat one of the boys who wore the blue, just so long as he behaves himself, obeys the laws of the country, and adheres to the principles of the Constitution. I do not know how you can ask any man to go farther or to take broader ground than that.

I trust you will not look upon me as a partisan in this matter, but I do feel that if any class of American citizens are deserving of recognition at the hands of this Government it is that class of men who now, when their hairs are growing gray, are going with trembling feet towards the grave, conscious of duty nobly done—it is that class of men who fought for the Union in its days of trial and peril and gave their all, and became diseased or maimed on the field of battle and in the service of the country. I assert if there is any class of men deserving consideration, these are the men.

They and their orphan children and their widows are deserving of recognition at the hands of this Government, and I hope no man in this Congress or out of it will ever sneer at the idea of giving a pension to one of that class of our citizens. True and devoted when we needed true men, let us be true to them now.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one other thing and I have done. A few moments ago the gentleman from Virginia over yonder somewhere taunted my friend from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] in reference to a certain matter pending in the Senate. He said the reason that more pension bills had not passed the Fifty-third Congress was because his political associates on this side—referring to the Republicans—had blocked legislation in the other branch of Congress. I desire to resent that imputation.

Some months ago—so long indeed that it is almost past the memory of the members of this body—a bill known as the Wilson tariff bill, under whip and spur did pass this House and went over to the Senate. It went into the Finance Committee, into the hands of a Democratic committee, and there it slept for weeks and weeks. The sugar trust of New York City had fastened on it its long and bony fingers; and that sugar trust decreed that that tariff bill should not come out of the Finance Committee of the Senate of the United States until the proposed legislation had been made agreeable to it.

For weeks, perhaps I may honestly and truthfully say months, the bill, shorn of all its ornaments, so much changed and torn and riddled that its own father in this House would not and could not have recognized it, emerged into the full light of the Senate and of the country, and then the Democrats of that body commenced to quarrel over it, and that quarrel has been in progress ever since, waxing hotter and hotter all the time, and you know it. Finally, after some weeks of quarreling, it was recommitted, or in some way or other it went back into the Finance Committee, and finally there was something like 425 or 430 amendments proposed to that bill. By whom? By the Republicans? No; by the Democrats.

A MEMBER. And by the sugar trust.

Mr. RAY. Yes, and it is suggested by the sugar trust, which is probably true. I do not know; I would have to inquire of my Democratic friends, not having associated with the sugar trust myself. No sugar has fallen on my plate. Well, with these amendments, the bill again came before the Senate, and there it has dragged its slow length along. Who has opposed it most bitterly? Who are the known enemies of that bill? Is it the Republicans? Why, you come now with a bill in many of its features so near the McKinley tariff bill which you denounced so bitterly in days gone by, you come so near to it in many features that you can only distinguish the difference with a magnifying glass.

It is full of the protection you once so bitterly denounced, although the protective features are entirely sectional. Rice is protected; the sugar trust is tenderly cared for, but the Northern farmer is forgotten, and his sheep bleat in vain for mercy. Republicans oppose the bill surely, honestly, and conscientiously, for it is unfair and sectional, not broad and comprehensive.

You approach the McKinley bill in some respects——

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. Including the sugar trust.

Mr. RAY. Oh, no; there is one of the great differences. The Republican party, when it had control of legislation, took the duty off sugar and gave free sugar to every citizen of the United States; but our Democratic friends, after claiming for months and years upon every stump in the country that they would lessen taxes for the poor man, have turned squarely around and at the beck and nod of the sugar trust are proposing to tax every poor man who uses a single grain of sugar

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAY. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Did I understand you to say that the McKinley bill made sugar free to everybody?

Mr. RAY. Well, I said that in substance and effect.

Mr. JONES. Is that true?

Mr. RAY. Well, I so understand it. I am not going to stop here to discuss all the details of the tariff bill, for I have not got time. I must get through now. But the Democratic party over in the Senate, after holding meeting after meeting behind closed doors, has at last bowed down to the god of sugar.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. RAY. Yes.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. We only have about ten minutes remaining, and there is an old widow, about 71 years of age, who is waiting to get her pension, and if the gentleman will quit right now we will pass it. It will be the best thing he has ever done yet for the widows.

Mr. RAY. All right. You have made your suggestion, now let me make mine. I know of hundreds of poor widows——

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Well, this one is waiting.

Mr. RAY (continuing). Who have been waiting for their pensions for themselves and their orphan children for thirty long years. They have appealed again and again to the Democratic party for what is their due without avail, and I want to say to the gentleman that if this old widow, whom he now has his eye on——

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I want her bill to get through to-night.

Mr. RAY (continuing). Waits until the gentleman from West Virginia champions her cause, she will wait until a thousand and one years after doomsday.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. Is the gentleman ready to let us have a vote now?

Mr. RAY. Now, I will say——

Mr. CABANISS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAY. Yes.

Mr. CABANISS. You state that the present tariff bill is in the interest of the sugar trust. Under the McKinley bill was there not a tax of one-fourth of 1 cent upon sugar above a certain standard, and was not that tax in favor of the sugar trust and the sugar trust alone?

Mr. RAY. There was something of the kind, but not in favor of a sugar trust; but I just told the gentleman that I was not going to stop here to discuss the cents and the half cents in the McKinley tariff bill.

Mr. CABANISS. What is the duty proposed in the present tariff bill? Is it not one-eighth of a cent a pound on refined sugar?

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. It is less than the McKinley bill.

Mr. RAY. I want to say to the distinguished gentleman that he knows more about the sugar trust, more about its operations, more about its true inwardness, than I do, because he is in it, and his party is in it away up to the chin, and it is going to bother you mightily to get out. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I will make another suggestion to my friend——

Mr. CABANISS. I want to thank the gentleman for the information he has given me about the sugar trust.

Mr. RAY. We are not in the sugar trust at all.

Mr. CABANISS. I do not know a single man connected with the sugar trust, or anyone who has any interest in it.

Mr. RAY. One other suggestion——

Mr. CABANISS. What the gentleman has said is not true, and he knows it.

Mr. RAY. Who was it that led the war in the Senate of the United States against the Wilson tariff bill as it came forth from the hand of the Finance Committee? Who was it that led the war against it even after the four hundred amendments had been proposed? Why, it was that man who two years ago was looked up to and worshipped by the Democratic party all over this land as the one only great "I am a Democrat." Do you know who it was? Do you love him to-day? Who obstructs tariff legislation in the Senate? Is it the senior Senator from the great State of New York, or is it the Republican party in the Senate?

Take that proposition into your innermost consciousness and solve it to your own satisfaction, if you can.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. I would like to tell the gentleman from New York that the widow has only six minutes in which to get her pension to-night.

Mr. RAY. I have already said that there are too few Republicans to grant any relief to the widows and orphans of the old soldiers, and they long ago gave up all hopes of receiving any support from such gentlemen as the one who addressed me from the State of West Virginia [Mr. PENDLETON]. You are a good man, you are a good Democrat, you mean all right, but you have no sympathy——

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. The widow has only five minutes now.

Mr. RAY (continuing). In your heart for the old Union soldier, nor for the widow, nor the orphans of the Union soldier.

Mr. PENDLETON of West Virginia. We will have one widow on the rolls in five minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I desire to ask the gentleman if he has concluded?

Mr. RAY. We have a pension bill under consideration, and I think it is a bill for the relief of the widow of an old soldier. Am I not correct?

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. You are.

Mr. RAY. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, I now, in conclusion, and in order to test the good faith of my Democratic friends, who for the last hour have been clamoring with their mouths, but objecting in their hearts, for an opportunity to do something for the widow of an old soldier, ask unanimous consent that this pending bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Indiana. I am glad you stated the time and the hour you occupied.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. I beg the attention of the committee for a moment. There is a proposition before the House to pass some bill. A bill is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill, which was reported two hours since.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3693) granting a pension to Louisa B. Hull, widow of James E. Darrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STALLINGS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. MARTIN of Indiana. The request was, that it be laid aside without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAY] submitted a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Illinois. There was a request made previous to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection was made on the right.

Mr. LACEY. I call for a vote on the bill.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying aside the bill with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. STALLINGS. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 35, noes 19.

Mr. JONES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia makes the point of no quorum. The hour having arrived for the adjournment, under the rule of the House, the committee will rise, the point of no quorum being pending.

The committee rose; and Mr. BROOKSHIRE having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that that committee had had under consideration bills on the Private Calendar and finding itself without a quorum the committee rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The hour of 10 o'clock and 30 minutes having arrived, the Chair declares the House adjourned.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, June 16, 1894.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. TELLER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with his approval, the draft of a bill submitted by the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, requiring the agents of steam and sailing vessels to deliver to the customs officers at the port of sailing lists of passengers or emigrants embarking therefrom; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Immigration, and ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill received yesterday from the House of Representatives.

The bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed from the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west 40 miles of the present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians June 15, 1880, was read twice by its title.

Mr TELLER. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill and put it on its passage.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is its purport?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is in charge of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. In 1880 we made a treaty with the Ute Indians and gave them a tract of land 110 miles long by 15 miles wide on the border of New Mexico, in Southern Colorado. Later, while the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] was Secretary of the Interior, a treaty was made with these Indians, by which they were to be removed to Utah. A great deal of opposition was developed against that treaty. The other House has declined at different times to allow a bill to pass to ratify that agreement.

The pending bill simply carries out the treaty of 1880, with modifications. It provides that the Indians may select land anywhere within the reservation as established by the treaty of 1880, and that those who do not choose to make selections shall go 40 miles to the west of the present reservation—which is the best part of it—and make their selections there, or make no selection, just as they see fit.

Mr. LODGE. The bill does not propose the removal of the Southern Utes?

Mr. TELLER. It does not propose to remove them at all. It leaves them on their reservation, but opens the eastern end of the reservation to settlement, and provides that they may select their land in it if they choose, anywhere on the reservation, but if they do not choose to select their land there, they must go to the west end.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that it is a compromise.

Mr. TELLER. The bill passed the other House unanimously on the unanimous report of the House committee, and while not satisfactory to the people of Colorado, it is the best measure they thought they could get.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the bill. I merely desired to have it explained.

Mr. TELLER. No one objected to it in the other House.

Mr. VILAS. Mr. President, I am not willing against the urgent desire and very strong opinion of the Senator from Colorado to interpose an objection to the consideration of the bill, and yet I am not very well satisfied with it.

A commission was raised under an act of Congress some years ago to treat with the Southern Ute Indians for the surrender of their reservation, which certainly ought to be opened in the interests of the people of Colorado, for it lies like a barrier between that State and New Mexico. Under that act of Congress the commission negotiated with the Southern Ute Indians a treaty which was satisfactory to them and which they have always been pressing to have carried into execution. That treaty was opposed by people who had the impression that the exchange was to put the Southern Ute Indians into the possession of lands less beneficial to them than the lands they already occupy in their present reservation; and in consequence of that opposition, which, in my belief, originated in and was fomented chiefly by a cattle-grazing company, the execution of the treaty has been deferred for a number of years.

Now, Congress is interposing here by this proposed act arbitrarily to overrule that treaty and to take from the Southern Ute Indians about two-thirds of their reservation without any bargain whatever and without seeking their consent, and add in place of it a tract of country much less in extent. The Senator from Colorado can give the exact area lying below the western part of their present reservation in New Mexico. Without having carefully examined the treaty, I merely wish to enter by these observations my dubitatur.

Mr. TELLER. This proposed act carries out the treaty of 1880, which provided that after the Indians had taken their allotments of land the remainder should be sold and the money should go into the Treasury for the benefit of the Indians. This bill provides that they may do just what the act of 1880 said they should do; that is, to select their lands in severalty anywhere they choose on the reservation. A large number of the Indians decline to select lands and will not select them. Those who do not care to select lands are allowed to go on the west 40 miles of the reservation or on the additional land in New Mexico.

If after the bill passes the Senator from Wisconsin shall, after looking it over, think it ought to be further considered, I shall not offer any objection to a motion to reconsider. The bill is not satisfactory, of course, to our people. I agree with the Senator it would have been better for the Indians and better for us to have had the other bill passed, but we made up our minds that it would not pass, the controversy being so sharp. Many people thought it would be a hardship to remove the Indians from the reservation, and it was determined to leave them on the land. It is not proposed to remove them at all. The additional land in New Mexico was added before the passage of the bill in the other House, with the approval of the Delegate from New Mexico, I understand.

Mr. VILAS. I should like to ask the Senator in what respect this bill executes the treaty of June 15, 1880?

Mr. TELLER. That treaty provides that they shall take land in severalty, and after that the excess shall be sold for their benefit. The bill modifies it by saying that those who will not take land in severalty shall go upon the west end of the reservation, which I assure the Senator is really the most valuable for the Indians, because it is accessible to water, and the climate is a little better than the eastern end, although the eastern end is more valuable undoubtedly for minerals, which is not of any value to the Indians. There is some land in the east end which will become valuable, and of course they will get the benefit of it.

Mr. VILAS. I always understood that the treaty of June 15, 1880, was executed by the creation of the present reservation and the establishment of the Southern Utes upon it.

Mr. TELLER. The treaty of 1880, the Senator will see, required that they should take land in severalty. The Indians have refused to take land in severalty. There is a small number of them who will, but the great majority of them will not take land in severalty, and if it is set apart for them they will not occupy it.

Mr. WHITE. Let me ask the Senator from Colorado a question. As I understand the Senator, when this proposed act goes into effect the Indians will be removed to a place other than that which they now occupy; that is, those who do not take land in severalty.

Mr. TELLER. They will be removed from their present agency a distance probably of 40 miles, but on the same reservation.

Mr. WHITE. They have occupied by choice, of course, the land where they now are; that is, they have preferred it.

Mr. TELLER. They have occupied it because the agency was put there on account of the railroad, not because it was the best land or the best place for them, but because it was contiguous to a railroad which crosses the reservation.

Mr. WHITE. Is it the understanding of the Senator that the Indians will be forced upon this new land? They will not go there of their own volition, I presume.

Mr. TELLER. They will not be forced on it. Those who choose to remain under this proposed act can take their lands in severalty and remain where they are.

Mr. WHITE. But assuming that they decline to accept land in severalty, they will then be removed by the United States.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose then the agency will be moved down to the western part of the reservation, and of course with the removal of the agency, it is immaterial to them where they go if they remain on the reservation. They do not cultivate the soil in any shape except in a few cases.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think it ought to be stated that very many of these Indians have already practically taken land and made improvements on it.

Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will excuse me, I understood the Senator from Colorado to say that but few of them have accepted land in severalty.

Mr. MANDERSON. Not taken in severalty, but quite a number of them have selected certain pieces of land and have improved it. Of course those Indians would take the land that they have thus improved.

Mr. TELLER. They can take the lands now occupied, and they will undoubtedly do so.

Mr. VILAS. I wish to observe that if the treaty of 1880 was executed there would be no land for the United States to take and sell.

Mr. TELLER. Why?

Mr. VILAS. I will read the clause of that treaty.

Mr. ALLEN. I desire to interpose an objection to this measure. It has now consumed twenty minutes of the morning hour.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill may go over until Monday morning. In the meantime the Senator from Wisconsin can look at it.

Mr. VILAS. Very well; but I merely wanted to call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the treaty. I suppose the bill is regularly before the Senate, no objection having been made to its consideration and the Senate having deliberately agreed to consider it, it is, I think, too late to interpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the objection does not come too late under the rule. An objection can be interposed at any time.

Mr. HARRIS. That is certainly the rule.

Mr. VILAS. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will at least not interfere for a moment; and I do not exactly see how he can take the floor from me to make an objection.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Wisconsin will observe that we have but ten minutes left for the transaction of morning business.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that the bill be allowed to lie on the table just as it is until Monday morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1852) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Oteri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that petitions and memorials are in order.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Very well.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR STEAMER S. OTERI.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1852) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Oteri.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATIVES OF DANIEL C. RODMAN AND OTHERS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 814) for the relief of the representatives of Daniel C. Rodman, deceased, and others. I will state that this bill passed the Senate two years ago and four years ago, but failed to receive consideration in the House of Representatives. It has been always unanimously reported.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment in line 3, to strike out the name "Slazer" and insert "Seager."

Be it enacted, etc., That Daniel C. Rodman, Ossian B. Hart, Charles Seager, Calvin L. Robinson, Ozias Buddington, and Joseph R. Richard, sureties upon the bond of Ozias Morgan, given as security for the faithful performance by said Ozias Morgan of his duties as receiver of public moneys and disbursing agent of the United States land office at Tallahassee, Fla., from 1866 to 1870, and their heirs and legal representatives be, and they are hereby, released and discharged of and from all and every obligation and liability whatsoever on account of said bond.

Mr. HAWLEY. The amendment is incorrectly printed. The name should be "Slager."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be so corrected. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as corrected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRICE OF LANDS UNDER DESERT-LAND LAWS.

Mr. CAREY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 160) to fix the price of lands entered under the desert-land laws.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CALL. I should like to hear the Senator from Wyoming make some explanation of the bill.

Mr. CAREY. A similar bill passed the Senate in the last Congress. For about a year a ruling prevailed in the Interior Department that the price of desert lands within railroad grants should be $2.50 per acre. This ruling was afterwards changed by the law of 1891, and the Secretary of the Interior ruled he had no right to pay back the money. Since then the Court of Claims have decided that the ruling was in violation of the law. The universal ruling for ten years after the desert-land law was passed fixed the price of such lands at $1.25 an acre. The bill only covers a very short period and a very small quantity of land.

Mr. CALL. I understand that this is simply to refund the excess of the purchase money?

Mr. CAREY. That is all. It places those who entered under the desert land law in the same position as those who entered land under the laws of the United States where the payment was erroneous, which can be paid out of a fund for that purpose.

Mr. CALL. It does not authorize any new purchase of land?

Mr. CAREY. Not at all.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OCCUPATION OF COURT-HOUSE IN BALTIMORE.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 172) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts within the city of Baltimore to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

LOUIS A. YORKE.

Mr. CALL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. 1438) for the relief of Louis A. Yorke, which was reported adversely and is now on the Calendar, be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I am authorized to say that there is no objection to this order on the part of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER], who reported the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. 499) to provide for the adjustment and payment of the claim of Thomas Rhys Smith for work done and materials furnished for the breakwater at Bar Harbor, Me.;

A bill (H. R. 6576) to provide for the closing of part of an alley in square 622 in the city of Washington, D. C., and for the relief of the president and directors of Gonzaga College; and

A bill (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], which will be stated.

The Secretary read as follows:

All articles of manufacture, composed wholly or in part of wool, or hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, shall be admitted free of duty.

Mr. PEFFER. I ask that the vote on that amendment may be taken by yeas and nays. I hope the Senate will consent to that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEWART. I should like the Senator from Kansas to explain the amendment.

Mr. PEFFER. The amendment is to put all manufactures of wool on the free list, and the reason for it is that unmanufactured wool has been placed on the free list. That is the only reason. It is not an attack on my part upon manufacturers at all, but inasmuch as the producers of wool are to be put in competition with foreign producers, I insist that fairness dictates that the manufacturers ought to be put upon the same basis. That is all.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I would remind the Senator from Kansas that two wrongs never make a right. The Senator from Kansas himself, I think, hardly believes that all woolen goods should be placed upon the free list. He knows, as we all know, that that would result in the entire destruction of the woolen industry in the United States.

Nobody feels more strongly than I do the injustice which has been done in putting wool upon the free list, but surely the Senator can not repair that injustice by putting woolen goods upon the free list. He feels, and justly and properly feels, that the action of the majority of the Senate in putting wool upon the free list is to lead to the destruction of a great industry among the agricultural people of the United States; but surely he can not desire on that account to put woolen manufactures on the free list, and thus lead to the destruction of another great industry in the United States. He is simply helping the free trader to destroy all our industries by his amendment; and it seems to me that the Senator is too just a man to desire to inflict injury upon others because injury has been inflicted upon the people whom he represents.

Mr. PEFFER. Only a word, Mr. President, in addition. The Senator from Connecticut expresses my views quite accurately. I do not want to destroy anybody. Personally I am willing to give anything that I have in this world to anyone in need, but when you come to strike my friend I will defend him. I am here charged to represent the interests of the men who sent me here. They are, 75 per cent of them, farmers, and I shall stand by those men no matter who else falls. Individually, I am willing to go down, but I am not willing to go down unless the other men go with me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER].

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON], with the reservation of the right to vote to make a quorum. If my vote be not necessary to make a quorum, I withhold it.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "nay."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], but, after consulting with his colleague [Mr. SMITH], and considering the nature of the vote, I feel free to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is detained from the Chamber by illness; but as he and I on this question would vote the same way, I take the liberty of voting. I vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL. I have a general pair with the Senator from Washington [Mr. SQUIRE], but I have taken the liberty to vote in this case, being satisfied if he were present he would vote in the same way I do.

Mr. GORDON. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to my colleague [Mr. WALSH], and vote "nay."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], but I understand from his colleague [Mr. PATTON] that if he were present he would vote "nay." I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I withhold my vote, as I am paired with that Senator.

Mr. MILLS. I inquire if the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. MILLS. Then I withhold my vote. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. PEFFER. I think I can safely say to the Senator from Texas that if the Senator from New Hampshire were present he would vote "nay." I assume the responsibility of saying that.

Mr. MILLS. As I am paired with that Senator in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the negative). I inquire if the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is advised that the junior Senator from North Dakota has not voted.

Mr. PERKINS. I am paired with that Senator, and in his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. QUAY. I omitted to mention, when the name of my colleague [Mr. CAMERON] was called, that he is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. I make this announcement to cover all votes during the day.

The result was announced—yeas 3, nays 46; as follows:

YEAS—3.

Allen,	Kyle,	Peffer.

NAYS—46.

Allison,	Davis,	Hoar,	Pugh,
Bate,	Dubois,	Hunton,	Ransom,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Jarvis,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Jones, Ark.	Shoup,
Blanchard,	Gibson,	Lodge,	Smith.
Call,	Gordon,	Manderson,	Teller.
Carey.	Gray,	Mitchell, Wis.	Turpie,
Chandler,	Hale,	Morrill,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hawley,	Pasco,	White.
Cullom,	Higgins,	Patton,
Daniel,	Hill,	Proctor,

NOTVOTING—34.

Aldrich,	George,	Martin,	Quay,
Brice,	Gorman,	Mills,	Roach,
Butler,	Hansbrough,	Mitchell, Oregon	Squire,
Caffery,	Irby,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Camden,	Jones, Nev.	Murphy,	Vilas.
Cameron,	Lindsay,	Perkins,	Walsh,
Dixon,	McLaurin,	Pettigrew,	Washburn,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Platt,	Wilson,
Gallinger,	McPherson,	Power,	Wolcott.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUBOIS. I was requested by the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], before he left, to see that his pair was properly observed and announced. It does not appear by the RECORD that his pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] was announced yesterday. I wish to state that all through the voting of yesterday the Senator from South Dakota was paired with the Senator from West Virginia. The pair will also stand for to-day.

Mr. GRAY. The pair was observed, but not announced, the Senator means?

Mr. DUBOIS. It was observed, but not announced. It does not appear in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

278. Wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals in the form of slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, mungo, shoddies, garnetted or carded waste, carbonized noils or other waste product, any of which is composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, which has been improved or advanced beyond its original condition as waste by the use of machinery or the application of labor, or both, and carbonized wool, shall be subject to a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALLISON. From the print of the bill which I have it appears that the committee recommend that paragraph 278 be stricken out. Is there any amendment pending to the paragraph?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No amendment has been proposed, the Chair will state to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. PLATT. I ought to know, but I should like to inquire what the present duty is. Will the Senator from Iowa tell me?

Mr. ALLISON. My impression is that it is a varying duty. The duty is 30 cents a pound, I think, upon some of these articles.

Mr. QUAY. Has the committee amendment, striking out paragraph 278, been adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Paragraph 278 has been read by the Secretary, but no action has been taken, the Chair will state.

Mr. PLATT. We on this side of the Chamber are quite in the dark as to what the committee propose to do.

Mr. ALLISON. I find that the duty on most of the articles described in this paragraph is now 30 cents a pound.

Mr. VEST. The paragraph has been put in the free list on page 119. I think I have a wrong copy of the bill. Some one has misplaced my copy. I had one that is marked correctly.

Mr. PLATT. I think we ought to understand it.

Mr. ALLISON. Paragraph 685, I think, puts the whole of paragraph 278 on the free list.

Mr. VEST. That is right. It is on page 119. I now have a correct copy of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Then the Senator from Missouri proposes an amendment to strike out paragraph 278?

Mr. VEST. Yes; that is to be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. That is the reason why I called the attention of the Chair to the matter. It appeared to me that there was some amendment to be proposed.

Mr. VEST. My attention was diverted at the moment. I move that paragraph 278 be stricken out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, to strike out paragraph 278.

Mr. PLATT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the roll is called I should be glad to have the Senator in charge of the bill explain why it is that all these various articles are to be put on the free list. Is it because wool is on the free list? I suppose that is the idea.

Mr. VEST. Of course that is the reason of it. The paragraph embraces "wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals in the form of slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, mungo, shoddies, garnetted or carded waste, carbonized noils or other waste product, any of which is composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel," etc.

On page 119 of the bill will be found the provision which places these articles upon the free list:

All wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and all wool and hair on the skin, noils, yarn waste, card waste, bur waste.

Mr. FRYE. But the Senator does not in that paragraph put shoddy on the free list. In paragraph 279 I see there is another provision. There is a proposed amendment in paragraph 279.

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. FRYE. Does the committee still adhere to that amendment?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. What I want to understand is this: I know that wool has been put on the free list, but if this paragraph is stricken out are "roving waste, ring waste, mungo, shoddies, and carbonized noils," etc., "any of which has been improved or advanced beyond its original condition as waste by the use of machinery or the application of labor, or both," put on the free list? That is what I wish to ascertain.

I do not think that "any wool which has been advanced at all from its original condition by the use of machinery or the application of labor should go on the free list. If raw wool is to go on the free list, that is one thing, but if the manufactures of wool in the early processes are to go on the free list that is another thing. It is possible that the proposed amendment in paragraph 279 answers my objection. I do not quite understand it.

Mr. VEST. Paragraph 279 answers the question of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. SHERMAN. After having denied a duty on wools of the highest price and the greatest value in the pending bill, then to put a duty on shoddy, mungo, ring waste, roving waste, slubbing waste, and all the other wastes, it seems to me, would be rather a singular result. I do not know exactly what the purpose of the committee is. Is the proposition of the Senator from Missouri to strike out paragraph 278?

Mr. MILLS. That is the motion, to strike out paragraph 278.

Mr. VEST. The roving and tops and roping, which are in paragraph 278, as proposed to be stricken out, are put back in paragraph 279 with the same duty, 15 per cent ad valorem. Of course the raw wool, which has not been advanced in any degree by manufacture, is by the bill put on the free list.

Mr. MILLS. As I understand, the distinction between paragraph 278 and paragraph 279 it is that the waste of different kinds and the mungo and shoddy and all those articles are to be on the free list, except when they have been carded and advanced to the form ready for spinning, as stated in paragraph 279. It is to be dutiable at 15 per cent when it is in the form of roving, roping, or tops, and that is when it is carded and cleaned and ready for spinning. But when it is in rags and dirt and unprepared for spinning it is on the free list. I myself think it all ought to go on the free list; but that seems to be the distinction here. I have had some of those tops sent to me. I know they are very fine wool, drawn out to the full length of the fiber, handsomely cleaned and carded, ready for spinning.

Mr. CULLOM. Is there any purpose on the part of the committee to put a duty on shoddy so as to keep it out of the country?

Mr. MILLS. I suppose not at this low rate; but the committee can answer themselves.

Mr. CULLOM. If it is intended to keep it out of the country, they had better increase the duty on it.

Mr. VEST. One of the effects of putting high duties on fine woolens has been to increase the importation of shoddy as used in so-called woolen goods. A process has been adopted largely by the manufacturers of woolen goods in the United States called cropping, by which the backs of almost all the garments we use are principally cotton and other adulterants.

The reports of the Treasury Department which I have before me show a vast increase in the amount of shoddy used in the United States, and of cotton, which is an adulterant used in the manufacture of woolens. If any Senator will call upon any merchant tailor he will find that while he has probably seventy-five or a hundred pieces of mixed or adulterated cloth in his shop, he has not one single piece of pure woolen cloth. This has been caused, as we contend, by the high price of foreign wools by reason of the McKinley act, and the duties imposed by the act of 1867, and even by the act of 1883.

This vast increase in shoddy has taken place, not only in this country but in England, because the same cause which operates upon the American manufacturer operates upon the English manufacturer who wants to obtain a market in this country. In order to compete with these adulterated woolen cloths as they are called, misnamed woolen cloths, these mixtures, the English manufacturer must pay the high rates of the McKinley tariff, and come into this market with mixed goods also. The result is, as is the experience of every man and every woman, that there are no pure woolen cloths in the market. They are all mixed cloths, and they wear out in a very few years, so that the supply has again to be met on the part of the consumer.

Now, we did not propose when we gave to the country free wool to let shoddy in free. Our idea is that when you cheapen the wool to the manufacturer he will use more of it, and that we shall have a better article of woolen cloths, and get rid of the adulteration and the fraud which is perpetrated to-day in the name of wool upon the consumers of the United States. If we had come into the Senate with free shoddy, immediately the bill would have been attacked upon the ground that we admitted a sham and a fraud worse than the enemies of oleomargarine declare it to be. We have therefore put a duty upon shoddy, which is largely imported into the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. A duty of 15 per cent.

Mr. VEST. Yes; a duty of 15 per cent. We did not want to put it on the free list. We put the same duty upon it that we place upon roping and roving and tops; and it is the proper duty to put upon it.

Mr. ALLISON. Roping waste, ring waste, carded waste and, all waste are put upon the free list.

Mr. VEST. Not in paragraph 279. On wool "in the form of roving, roping, or tops" there is a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem. That is the provision I refer to.

Mr. PLATT. I think I have studied out the effect of the proposed striking out of paragraph 278. If that paragraph is stricken out then waste, noils, and all waste products which have not been treated by machinery or advanced in the process of manufacture will go on the free list, and the waste which has been treated by machinery will, under paragraph 279, be dutiable at 15 per cent.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

Mr. PLATT. I can see no inconsistency about that.

Mr. VEST. There is not the slightest inconsistency.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator will read paragraph 279 he will find that there is omitted from it the very clause which he says ought to be preserved.

Mr. VEST. We can not hear the Senator from Ohio on this side.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say paragraph 279 omits the clause in paragraph 278 which puts a duty on wools, etc., advanced beyond the condition of waste, by the use of machinery or the application of labor. I think that provision is not in paragraph 279 at all.

Mr. VEST. It is not.

Mr. PLATT. Let me read paragraph 279 as proposed to be amended.

On flocks, mungo, shoddy, garnetted waste, and carbonized noils, or carbonized wool, and on wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals in the form of roving, roping, or tops, 15 per cent ad valorem.

Roving, roping, and tops, I understand, are forms of wool or waste which have been advanced to what we used to call rolls, or the fine wool which was shown here the other day——

Mr. ALDRICH. Tops.

Mr. PLATT. Under the name of botany top.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. They are not the less waste.

Mr. PLATT. When waste has been advanced to that point, roving, roping, or tops, then it is to have a duty of 15 per cent. So with mungo and shoddy.

Mr. SHERMAN. But if the Senator will look again—I am somewhat familiar with construing the laws on this subject—he will see that the words now referred to by him "in the form of roping, roving, or tops," apply only to the wool of the sheep, camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, and do not apply to flocks, mungo, shoddy, garnetted waste, etc.

Mr. PLATT. I supposed they did.

Mr. SHERMAN. They do not.

Mr. PLATT. I confess the matter is somewhat complicated, and I have had difficulty in understanding it.

Mr. ALLISON. It is certain the committee now propose to put on the free list a large portion of the importations which pay 30 cents a pound. These tops, roping, roving waste, etc., now have a unit of value on their importation of 36 cents a pound. So I think it is a great change to put all these articles on the free list.

I should like to have some Senator who is familiar with the manufacture of woolen goods explain to me why it is, as was just now stated by the Senator from Missouri, that a very large portion of the woolen goods manufactured in the United States is composed of shoddy. I had a different view, and if it be true that the manufacturers of woolen goods in our country used chiefly shoddy, I should be glad to have it explained a little more in detail than the Senator from Missouri has explained it.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a very great mistake. I do not know anything about the proportion of shoddy used, but it is a comparatively small class of coarse goods. I doubt whether there is an ounce of shoddy in all the woolen goods worn by Senators here.

Mr. ALLISON. I observe that there is very little shoddy imported. Of course it must be manufactured here, and I do not quite understand how so much shoddy can get into woolen manufactures.

Mr. HAWLEY. The experts will tell it, and they do not put it in except as I have stated.

Mr. PLATT. With regard to shoddy and the alleged increase of shoddy in this country stated by the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Connecticut deny there has been an increase? He speaks of the "alleged increase." Does he deny that there has been an increase?

Mr. PLATT. There has been an increase in pounds, but not an increase in per cent. In 1880 the amount of shoddy and animal hair consumed in this country was 56,970,682 pounds. In 1890 it was 73,678,066 pounds. But in 1880 the per cent of shoddy to all woolen goods was 22.06 per cent, and in 1890 it was 22.72 per cent. So while there has been an increase in the number of pounds of shoddy used in the woolen manufacture in this country, no larger proportion of the goods manufactured is now composed in part of shoddy than in 1880. Therefore, while the statement of the Senator from Missouri is true in one sense, it is not true in the sense that the proportion of shoddy consumed in this country has been increased in the last ten years.

Mr. VEST. The statistics show that in 1870, according to the census of that year, there were fifty-six shoddy factories in the United States, and their product was $1,768,592. In 1880, ten years afterwards, they had increased to seventy-three establishments, producing $4,989,615 worth of goods. In 1890 there were ninety-four establishments, producing $9,208,011 worth of goods, an increase of double and more. In 1890 there were consumed in the United States 61,626,261 pounds of shoddy. Of wool in the grease the United States produced 276,000,000 pounds in 1890 or 92,000,000 pounds of scoured wool. This shows that of shoddy there was nearly 70 per cent relatively to the wool used in this country.

I argued this question in 1890, and produced here the advertisements of the shoddy establishments in the United States, together with statements of their product. The answer to it has always been that shoddy had also increased in even a larger proportion in Great Britain, our great manufacturing rival. That is true, for the reason which I undertook to give a few minutes ago, that the use of shoddy and cotton, which is a great adulterant in the manufacture of woolen goods in this country, necessitates the same procedure by our rivals across the ocean, because in undertaking to contend with us for the American market they are compelled to adulterate what are called woolen manufactures in order to compete with us.

Now, I do not care anything about the per cent, but here are the figures. The fact remains, without going down to the exact mathematical proposition, that there has been a vast increase in the use of shoddy, and the experience of every consumer of what are called woolen goods will bear out the assertion which I have made.

Mr. PLATT. I took my statement from the publication of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association, and I have always found their statements and statistics correct. That since 1870 there has been an increase in the number of pounds of shoddy used in the manufacture of woolen goods nobody denies. That there has been an increase in the number of factories—small factories they are—which are producing it and putting it into the shape of yarns and tops, there is no question. The question is whether as compared to the whole amount or woolen goods used in this country there has been any increase, and I understand there has been none.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber when the original statement of the Senator from Missouri was made, but I understand that he claims that a large proportion—72 per cent—of the woolen goods made in the United States is composed of shoddy. Of course that statement is very wide of the mark. It would be hard to imagine a statement further removed from the actual truth. The proportion of shoddy as compared with the wool and other substitutes for wool used in the United States has kept pace with the growth of the country and with the consumption of wool and woolen goods. Existing duties upon shoddy being prohibitory, there has been no importation of foreign shoddy; and as shoddy is simply a remanufacture of woolen cloths or of other articles of wool which have been used, the consumption in the United States must necessarily be limited. It has grown simply with the growth of the population of the country and its consumption of woolen goods.

In 1880, according to the census figures, the amount of shoddy and animal hair, not otherwise specified, used in the woolen mills in the United States was nearly 57,000,000 pounds. It is well known that in certain coarse products—heavy, cheap goods—cow's hair and the hair of other animals is used to a very large extent. These figures include shoddy and other substitutes for wool. The amount consumed in the United States in 1880, in the census year, was 56,970,000 pounds, and in 1890 73,678,000 pounds, or an increase in ten years of 17,000,000; while the total consumption of wool and substitutes for wool, taken together, had increased from 252,474,545 pounds in 1880 to 324,259,060 pounds in 1890—a total increase of wool and substitutes for wool of 72,000,000 pounds, and an increase in shoddy of only 17,000,000, conclusively showing the truth of the statement which I have made, that the increase in the use of shoddy in the mills of the United States is only the natural increase.

The Senator from Missouri used the word "shoddy" as if there were some fraud about its use; as though a manufacturer who manufactures goods of shoddy was doing something criminal. The use of shoddy is simply a utilization——

Mr. GRAY. A substitution.

Mr. ALDRICH. No; it is not a substitution. It is simply a utilization of what would otherwise be a waste product.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the contention of those who have looked into this matter and studied the effect of a very high tariff is that there has been a resort to shoddy material in order to make the cheaper grades of clothing which could not be made out of the coarser wool, and that free wool will allow the manufacturer of woolen cloth to utilize it for the cheaper form of clothing where shoddy is now used.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is quite mistaken in that assumption. Shoddy is used more largely in Great Britain and in Germany than in the United States in the production of woolen goods. The processes of manufacturing shoddy have been improved in these countries beyond what has been the case in the United States. There is a greater tendency than formerly in these days to utilize all waste products, and the case of shoddy is not an exception to the general rule. Statistics show that there is four times as much shoddy used in the woolen mills of Great Britain as in the woolen mills of the United States. The statistics which I have just read show that instead of 72 per cent of the cloth made in the United States being made from shoddy but 22.72 per cent is so made.

Mr. VEST. Shoddy and cotton?

Mr. ALDRICH. No. I am talking about shoddy now, not cotton. Of course, cotton is used to a large extent in mixing with woolen goods all over the world, but that fact furnishes no reason for complaint. I certainly trust that the Senators from the Southern States sitting upon the other side of the aisle do not object to the use of cotton wherever it can be used properly in the manufacture of clothing for the people of this or any other country. There is no contention, I suppose, that the sale of a piece of cotton and wool (sold for what it is) is a fraud upon purchasers. There is no suggestion, so far as I can see, that this material is improperly used. The only question is as to the extent of its use.

Let us see what would be the effect of the proposition of the committee in increasing or decreasing the use of shoddy. There is now a prohibitory duty imposed upon foreign shoddy and upon other substitutes for wool except cotton. You now propose to admit those articles free of duty. You propose to give unobstructed admission into the country all the rags and second-hand clothing, all the waste and all the filth and dirt of the whole world.

Now, if the Senator from Missouri believes that the tendency of this action will be to diminish the use of shoddy and increase the use of wool in the United States, I should be very glad to have him state the manner by which this result is to be accomplished.

It seems to me the inevitable result will be to very largely increase the use of shoddy here, because we shall import large quantities of the foreign article, and instead of 22 per cent of the American product being made from shoddy and from substitutes of wool, a very much greater proportion will be made of these articles. The effect of the schedule submitted by the committee, taken together, will undoubtedly be to admit these articles manufactured into cloth; but if that was not the case, if the woolen manufacture in the United States should be preserved, there would certainly be a largely increased proportion of that manufacture produced from shoddy imported from other countries.

Mr. VEST. The great preventive as we understand to the use of shoddy will be free raw wool.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me right there? Free wool for half a century in Great Britain has brought about the result I have alluded to, namely, that they use four times as much shoddy in proportion to their production as is used in the United States.

Mr. VEST. Yes, Mr. President, and that has been caused by the tariffs of the United States. I have repeatedly stated here that the British manufacturers were compelled to use shoddy in order to compete with the manufacturers of the United States who also use it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me another interruption? Those goods are not sent to the United States at all. Our tariff is not only prohibitory upon shoddy, but it is absolutely prohibitory upon goods made from shoddy, owing to the high specific rates on the lower class of goods. Those goods are sent to Russia and to the semibarbarous countries in cold climates. They are heavy goods, and are sold in those countries in competition with their domestic manufactures.

Mr. VEST. Out of the $40,000,000 worth of woolen goods, so called, that come to the United States, does the Senator mean to say that they are all pure wool? What lady wears to-day a woolen dress made out of pure wool? What man to-day wears a suit of clothes made out of pure wool?

Mr. ALDRICH. Shoddy never enters into the manufacture of dress goods.

Mr. VEST. It goes into the manufacture of all these goods.

Mr. ALDRICH. Not at all.

Mr. VEST. And the trouble with the consumers is that it is impossible for them to tell how much wool they are buying in their goods. They are purchased as pure wool, but they are not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Shoddy is never used in the manufacture of dress goods in this or any other country. Shoddy is only used in the manufacture of heavy goods for men's wear, and these do not come to the United States. They are, as I have said, sent to Russia and other cold and semibarbarous countries.

Mr. VEST. I can produce better authority than the Senator from Rhode Island to show that in these heavy dress goods used by ladies both cotton and shoddy are used as component parts.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should be very glad if the Senator could furnish any such testimony. Dress goods are made from combed yarns, and it is physically impossible to comb shoddy.

Mr. VEST. The Senator admits that shoddy goes into men's goods. We know it as a matter of actual observation and experience. Let any gentleman go to a merchant tailor and undertake to buy a dress suit, or any other suit made out of wool, and he will find that it is not for sale. There was a time in this country when a gentleman thought he was not dressed even for everyday life unless he had all-wool garments upon his back. But now they are "cropped," to use the manufacturing expression, and cotton and shoddy are put into them. So it is impossible to get an all-wool dress suit or any kind of an all-wool suit from a merchant tailor.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me further?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator never saw a piece of goods in this country or anywhere else fit to make a dress suit of containing one particle of shoddy.

Mr. VEST. I know that you can go to any merchant tailor in this city, or New York, or Baltimore, or Philadelphia, and ask him in regard to the use of all-wool goods for men's wear and he will tell you that they have gone out of fashion. There is not a Senator here who has upon his back a coat made of all wool. With the finish the manufacturers give it is impossible to tell what are the component materials.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. It is impossible to tell it. They will sell you a coat like the one I have on, which they call vicuna woolen, and when examined by an expert he will find cotton in it and shoddy in it; it is not all wool. Does the Senator from Connecticut want to ask a question?

Mr. HAWLEY. I was simply going to make a general contradiction. I said a while ago that there is not an ounce of real shoddy in this Chamber. I do not know what the Senator has on, but I tell him——

Mr. VEST. I do not know, either.

Mr. FRYE. He has not on any shoddy.

Mr. HAWLEY. I know that a merchant tailor can go up to his coat and tell him in a moment whether it contains any shoddy or not.

Mr. VEST. I know that this coat was sold to me for vicuna wool, but I know it is not. Vicuna is the finest South American wool, but it is adulterated, and every man wears such goods to-day. You can go to a merchant tailor in this city. I have taken pains to inquire if they deal in all-wool goods for gentlemen's wear here. I found one who said he had one piece out of one hundred and seventy-odd pieces that he knew to be all wool. But let me show how much shoddy is used in this country. I see on the floor here, to-day, the secretary of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association, who is assisting our friends in regard to this bill. He has been here ever since the commencement of the debate. The Senator from Rhode Island tells us that by putting only 15 per cent upon shoddy we invite this material into the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. You put it on the free list.

Mr. VEST. Under the McKinley act the duty is prohibitory.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have said you put it on the free list. That is what I have understood is the practical effect of the proposition of the committee.

Mr. VEST. No; 15 per cent is the rate in paragraph 279.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understood that was to be stricken out.

Mr. VEST. No, it is not stricken out. But let me go on, if the Senator pleases.

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. The Senator says they put on prohibitory duties in the McKinley act and kept out shoddy from this country. What has been the result? I will read the testimony of the secretary of the Wool Manufacturers' Association before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. Mr. TURNER said:

And, coming to the secretary of the Wool Manufacturers' Association—

Which this Mr. North testified he was—who is undoubtedly a graduate of this business, I want to read the following statement of this book of Mr. Lewis, which, I suppose, he would not insert if it was not true, and you can correct it if he is to blame for it. I read from page 44 of the book called Our Sheep and the Tariff: "The secretary of the Wool Manufacturers' Association estimates that there is now one pound of cotton and shoddy used in so-called woolen goods for every pound of wool." Is that correct?

Mr. NORTH. I think that is pretty nearly correct, sir.

So here we have the very highest possible expert authority to the effect that for every pound of wool which goes into goods manufactured in the United States there is a pound of shoddy and cotton.

Now, the Senator asks me if I object to the use of cotton. I do object to it if it is put in as wool. When I buy woolen goods I want woolen goods, because I want the warmth that is given to protect my body during the inclement season of our country. I do not want goods half cotton and half woolen sold to me as woolen goods. I voted against the oleomargarine bill when it was brought in, and I did it upon the ground that if a man wanted oleomargarine and knew it was oleomargarine he had a right to have it. If it was properly stamped and there was no fraud, I was willing for him to put into his mouth whatever he pleased as a substitute for butter; but I was as much opposed as anyone to half oleo and half butter. And so I am in regard to this matter.

If a man sells me woolen goods I want woolen goods. If he sells me half cotton and half woolen and I know it, then it is my fault if I get a bad article, and I have no right to complain.

But what is the difference between shoddy and cotton? One is clean, pure woolen goods and a valuable article. The other is the refuse of hospitals, old clothes that have been worn out. Shoddy is still used in the United States. We have tried, by putting a prohibitory duty, to stop its use, the Senator says, but he has failed in doing it, for the consumption has gone on increasing until, according to the secretary of the Woolen Manufacturers' Association, there is one pound of cotton and shoddy to-day used for every pound of wool.

I recollect that in 1890 I quoted on this floor the statement, which I have here somewhere, that the governor of Maine had sent abroad to buy uniforms for his staff and himself, because they could not get the pure woolen goods in this country. The Senator from Ohio answered me in that debate in regard to that article, and said there was not a Senator present probably who did not buy foreign goods. That is true; and those goods come into this country made up partly of shoddy, partly of cotton, and partly of wool. They are the same with the American goods, and the prohibitory duty of the McKinley act increased the consumption of shoddy. Therefore my answer to the Senator from Rhode Island is that to continue prohibitory duties does not remove this evil. It is impossible to deny statistics that are furnished by the protectionists themselves.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is true that a prohibition upon the importation of shoddy will not prevent its use in the United States. It will not prevent the use and consumption of the American product, whatever it may be. But what does the Senator expect to accomplish by opening the doors of the custom-houses of the United States to the free importation of shoddy from all parts of the world if its use is such an undesirable thing?

Now, the Senator made two or three astonishing statements in the course of his remarks.

Mr. VEST. We make wool free and tax the shoddy.

Mr. ALDRICH. You tax it in one form, but let it in without limit and without duty in other forms. You admit woolen rags, etc., free, and this will only allow shoddy come in under another name.

The Senator tells us he has a tailor who has informed him that he had no all-wool goods in his shop. I do not know what tailor the Senator from Missouri patronizes, but I will venture the statement that there is not a man in this Senate Chamber at this moment who has on a coat or a suit of clothing that contains any cotton whatever in the cloth from which it is made, and I venture——

Mr. VEST. And no shoddy?

Mr. ALDRICH. I feel equally sure about shoddy. Shoddy only goes into heavier goods; and there is probably not a man in the Chamber who is wearing goods heavy enough to contain any admixture of shoddy.

Mr. VEST. Or in winter either?

Mr. ALDRICH. In winter I would not feel so sure. But my assertion is that there is not a first-class tailor in the United States, nor a second-class tailor, whose stock is not made up very largely of all-wool cloths. At the present price of all-wool cloths there is no excuse for the use of anything else.

I do not think, however, that a mixture of cotton in woolen goods is such an undesirable thing as the Senator from Missouri seems to think it is. Cotton is used for this purpose to a very great extent all over the world, and to an increasing extent perhaps. The movement in this direction may be retarded somewhat by the decline that has taken place in the price of wool, bringing the prices of cotton and wool nearer together.

If it were not for this fact there would be a constantly increasing use of cotton for mixing with wool in cloths used for clothing, and I do not think that that is altogether an undesirable result. There are some classes of cotton and woolen mixed goods that are stronger and more durable than those made of all wool. To revert, however, to the question which we were discussing as to the extent which shoddy and other substitutes for wool are used in this country.

In justice to Mr. North I think I ought to put into the RECORD a letter which he wrote to the Ways and Means Committee in explanation of the testimony to which the Senator from Missouri has referred. The letter is as follows:

DEAR SIR: With reference to the statements made before the Ways and Means Committee, on September 12 last, in reply to certain questions of Judge TURNER, with reference to the increased use of shoddy, cotton, and other adulterants of wool, between 1880 and 1890, it is now possible to furnish the exact statistics from the census of 1890. Inasmuch as a distinctly wrong impression is conveyed in the testimony, it seems desirable to accompany its publication by the exact figures. These are as follows:

Quantities of scoured wool, and of cotton, shoddy, and other so-called adulterants, used in wool manufactures, 1880–1890.

Materials.	1890.	1880.	1890.	1880.
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Per cent.	Per cent.
Total	324,250,060	252,474,545	100.00	100.00
Scoured wool, including camel's hair and mohair	207,5[illegible]	167,634,157	64.02	66.4
Cotton	42,996,248	27,869,706	13.26	11.0
Shoddy and animal hair not specified	73,678,066	56,970,682	22.72	22.6

It will be seen that the proportion of shoddy, cotton, etc., to wool in both 1880 and 1890 was very nearly as 1 pound of the former to 2 pounds of wool.

Instead of 1 pound, as the Senator from Missouri has said—and that the increase in the use of the adulterants was relatively small—

The increase being from 22.6 in 1880 to 22.7 in 1890, the change being only one-tenth of 1 per cent.

The erroneous statement that 1 pound of substitutes was used for each pound of wool, in 1880, was due to the fact that the statistics of hosiery and knit goods were included as a part of the statistics of wool manufactures, in making the calculation—

Hosiery and knit goods being made almost entirely of cotton.

Inasmuch as a great part of the hosiery and knit-goods industry is distinctively a cotton industry, its statistics should obviously be excluded from such a computation.

Very respectfully,

S. N. D. NORTH, Secretary.

With modern processes and modern machinery shoddy can be cleansed, treated, and by a judicious use in connection with wool or wool and cotton made into cloth, that will have as good an appearance as if it were made of all wool; and for clothing purposes, so far as keeping out cold in a rigorous climate, it would be as good as though it were made entirely of wool. It will not wear as long. There is not as much tensile strength in the yarn made from wool after it has been worn and remanufactured in this way, but it would lead to a criminal waste of material if we should prevent by legislation, if this were possible, the remanufacture of wool which had once been used.

Mr. QUAY addressed the Senate in continuation of the speech heretofore begun by him. After having spoken for half an hour——

Mr. HANSBROUGH said: Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a few moments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLANCHARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. QUAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Mr. President, in the debate yesterday the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] challenged this side of the Chamber to show that a duty on wheat benefits the American wheat-grower. I do not hope to convince the Senator from Missouri that he is wrong in his view of the case, but I think the facts, as they present themselves to one who comes from a leading wheat State, should be given to the Senate and to the country. It has been a favorite pastime of those entertaining the free trade idea to ridicule the claim that protection is of any service to the wheat farmer. They have pointed out that the price of our entire wheat output is regulated by the price we receive for the surplus we send abroad, and that a duty can have nothing whatever to do with it. It is true that the foreign price does fix the domestic price, and it will be so as long as we have a surplus to sell in the world's markets.

I stated in the course of some remarks offered here a few days ago that I believed it to be the duty of Congress to guard against the enactment of legislation which would make our wheat surplus any greater than it now is. Indeed, good policy dictates that we should not have a surplus of wheat. Then the domestic demand and the ability of our own people to buy would fix the price, and with our per capita of domestic money, about ten times greater than the world's per capita, our wheat-raisers would reap larger rewards for their labors. The way to avoid having a surplus, which we all know must find a market abroad, is to encourage other lines for the farmer. Assist him to raise all the wool we need for home consumption. Encourage him to produce his own sugar. Take him out of the business of wheat-raising. Open the silver mines and coin the product into money, to stand as the basis of our currency. This would give employment to thousands who are now eking out a mere existence raising wheat.

By the policy which underlies this bill you propose to lower the wages of our working people and compel many of them to go into the business of farming. You propose also that a large share of the two millions of people now engaged in wool-raising shall cease raising wool; consequently, they must raise wheat. You strike a blow at beet-sugar making, and as the people engaged in this work are mostly farmers, they will be driven back to the wheat field. Wheat-raising is the last resort of all classes of men when they are deprived of other work to do.

So, instead of diminishing the surplus of wheat, you propose to increase it. More than this. You intend to open the door to the foreign grain-raiser from every quarter of the globe. You invite the Canadian farmer, for instance, to bring his fifty or one hundred millions of surplus wheat into this country, free of duty, and place it on top of our surplus. You invite the Canadian farmer to add his surplus to ours, thereby increasing the amount of wheat for which we must find a market abroad. You give him not only the markets of Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago, but make it possible for him to crowd our own wheat-raisers out of those markets to a large extent, because in the Northwest there is always, during the marketing season, a scarcity of elevator room, and grain cars are in great demand for moving our own crop.

I believe that the surplus from the wheat regions of Western Canada which, under the operation of a duty upon wheat exports to this country has been and is now being sent east to and through the Gulf of the St. Lawrence and over the ocean to Liverpool, will, if this bill becomes a law in its present form, be marketed at Minneapolis, Duluth, and Chicago. I would like to know what the American farmer gets in exchange for this. With a duty upon wheat in this country the Canadian farmer must send his surplus abroad; with free trade in wheat he will send it here.

Nor is this all. Russia, India, and the Argentine, if they have free access to our markets, will ship wheat to us. It costs about 25 cents per hundred pounds to ship wheat from the State of North Dakota to New York and other seaboard cities. The foreign wheat countries, all of which are highly favored with water transportation, can lay their grain in New York at a freight charge of 8 to 10 cents per hundred. India can send wheat from Bombay through the Suez Canal and the Mediterranean at a less rate than the North Dakota farmer is required to pay to send his wheat to Chicago. If you do not change the grain schedule in this bill the Boston bread-eater will buy his flour or the wheat to make it in South America. What follows? The flour-maker in Minneapolis and the wheat-raiser in the Dakotas must reduce their prices so as to compete with foreign wheat.

Mr. SQUIRE. Will the Senator from North Dakota permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. I would ask whether it is not true that the American prefers flour made from American wheat to flour made from foreign wheat? Is there not a decided difference in the quality of much of the wheat raised abroad and that raised in the United States? Is not the American wheat relatively more valuable? Does it not in many instances bring a higher price abroad?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. There is some difference, the best grades of wheat produced in this country being superior to the wheat produced in most of the foreign grain-raising countries. The lower grades of our wheat are about on a par with the best grades raised abroad. Nevertheless the price at which wheat can be produced and transshipped to this country from India, Russia, and Argentina is so far below the price at which it can be produced and freighted in this country that foreign wheat will come into active competition with our wheat.

Prices here are now below the profit line. South America is shipping wheat to Europe to-day in competition with North American wheat. Remove the duty, and it will be shipped more easily to Galveston, New Orleans, Charleston, Norfolk, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston than to Liverpool, because the distance to our ports is not so great. So in this respect the bill is a double calamity. It increases our surplus and narrows our markets at the same moment.

Mr. President, the more we study this proposed tariff bill, the closer we analyze its provisions, the nearer we seem to approach a great sea of commercial uncertainty. No, it is not an uncertain sea. It is a treacherous gulf of swirling, seething waters; a dark expanse of shoals, eddies, and uncompassed currents.

Mr. QUAY resumed his speech. After having spoken nearly an hour.

Mr. GALLINGER said: Will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me a few minutes?

Mr. QUAY. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I wish to occupy a few minutes in calling attention to some remarkable statements made by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] in his speech of yesterday on the wool schedule. I regret exceedingly that I do not find his speech in the RECORD this morning, as otherwise I should have reviewed it at greater length than I propose now to do. Before calling attention to the statements of the Senator from South Dakota, I desire in a single word to repeat what I have already said, and to reiterate what other New England Senators have said over and over again, as to the attitude of the manufacturers of New England toward the wool-growers of the United States.

I have said, and I repeat, that so far as my knowledge extends (and I have lived for thirty-four years among people who manufacture largely), I have known of but one instance of a woolen manufacturer who has openly advocated placing wool on the free list, and I have information that that man has changed his opinion and is now an advocate of retaining a proper duty upon raw wool. Why, in the face of such facts, the stale charge should be repeated and reiterated by Senators on the other side that manufacturers are in favor of free wool surpasses my comprehension.

But what I desire to call attention to more particularly was the statement made by the Senator from South Dakota, that he has traveled over New England towns; that he has gone past block after block of residences, and has not heard a word of English spoken. Mr. President, I can not for the life of me understand what towns in New England the Senator from South Dakota has visited. They certainly are unknown to me; and I venture to say they are unknown to every New England Senator on this floor.

That we have to some extent introduced into our factories Canadian Frenchmen, many of whom do not speak English, is true. That they have taken the places voluntarily relinquished by Americans is likewise true. But that our population is so largely made up of foreigners that the English language is not spoken from one end of a block to another, or through several blocks, is an absurdity so patent that I need hardly call attention to the statement.

A further statement made by the Senator from South Dakota was that he has been in the hotels of New England, and at the tables he has heard nothing but the jabber of French. I am pleased to stand here to say a good word for the Canadian Frenchmen who come to New England. They are industrious, intelligent, honest people. They perform good work; they receive good pay. They pay their bills and they observe our laws, and so far as I know the people of New England are very glad to employ them in their factories in the absence of American help. As I have said, I have lived in New England thirty-four years. I have associated with her people very intimately. I have been in a great many of the hotels of New England, and so far as I can now recall I never heard a word of French, Parisian or Canadian, spoken at a hotel table during those thirty-four years. So the wonder came to my mind yesterday, as it does to-day, as to what class of hotels the Senator from South Dakota has patronized in New England.

Mr. President, this is all I care to say. Daniel Webster, a great many years ago, on a very notable occasion, spoke for New England. New England has held her place among her sister States ever since. She is inhabited by an industrious, law-abiding, God-fearing, prosperous people, striving to do their full part in the industrial progress and prosperity of this great nation; and I submit that it is not becoming the Senator from South Dakota, or any other Senator, for the purpose of making a point against the manufacturers of this country, to utter libels upon the people whom I in part represent. Every New England Senator has voted for a duty on wool; every New England Senator has steadily voted to protect the farm products of the great Northwestern States, and it is a poor return for our action to be misrepresented and reviled by a Senator from that section of the country.

In every part of the Union New England men can be found, among the most intelligent, industrious, and progressive in every community where they reside; but while they have contributed so much to the prosperity and progress of other Commonwealths, the interests of our own little States have not been overlooked or neglected. The same principles of freedom, equality, justice, and liberty of conscience that characterized and distinguished the early settlers are still found in New England, making her people the champions of the school, the church, and of every benevolent and charitable movement of the age; and equally so in this great contest for industrial freedom, New England stands unflinchingly in support of the industries and labor of the people of our own country against those of any other nation on the face of the earth.

Mr. QUAY resumed his speech. After having spoken altogether about one hour and three-quarters, he said:

I will print the statement by Maj. Hanson without reading it, and as it seems to be the disposition of the Senate to proceed to a vote upon the pending paragraph, I will cut short my remarks at this point, and unless there is objection on the part of the Senate will print much of the documentary matter which I proposed to read.

[Mr. QUAY'S speech will be published entire after it shall have been concluded. See Appendix.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] on behalf of the Committee on Finance to strike out paragraph 278.

Mr. PLATT. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 278 in the following words:

278. Wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals in the form of slubbing waste, roving waste, ring waste, mungo, shoddies, garnetted, or carded waste, carbonized noils or other waste product, any of which is composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, and other like animals, which has been improved or advanced beyond its original condition as waste by the use of machinery or the application of labor, or both, and carbonized wool, shall be subject to a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon agreeing to the amendment, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN]. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], but by consent of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY], who is paired with my colleague [Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin], my colleague being detained from the Chamber by the sickness of a child, we will transfer our pairs, so that the Senator from Oregon will stand paired with my colleague, and the Senator from Wyoming and myself will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PEFFER. I was requested to state that if the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. PATTON. I was requested to announce that my colleague [Mr. MCMILLAN] is absent from the city and is paired with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (after having voted in the affirmative). The Chair desires to withdraw his vote, as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN], with whom he has a general pair, is absent.

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], and voted inadvertently. I withdraw my vote. If the Senator from Oregon were present he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. CALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. CALL. Then I withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. PALMER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not voted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Then I withdraw my vote, being paired with that Senator.

Mr. GORDON. By an arrangement with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. PATTON], I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON], which enables the Senator from Michigan and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PATTON. I vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HIGGINS] is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. I am willing to transfer pairs so that the Senator from Delaware and I can vote.

Mr. HIGGINS. I am content with that arrangement.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] will stand paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS. I vote "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH. Perhaps I ought to state for the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], that he left the Chamber understanding that there would be no vote reached upon this question in the course of the afternoon, a suggestion for which I am myself responsible. If the Senator from Oregon were present he would vote "nay" upon this question.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator's pair has been taken care of by transfer.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand.

Mr. QUAY. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] left the Chamber understanding, or rather the assurance conveyed by me, that there would be no vote taken this afternoon. I presume he is paired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By a transfer just made the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON] stands paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. BRICE. I am paired with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT], but transfer my pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Kyle,	Ransom,
Berry,	George,	Lindsay,	Roach,
Blackburn,	Gordon,	Mills,	Smith,
Brice,	Gray,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Caffery,	Harris,	Murphy,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hunton,	Pasco,	Vilas,
Coke,	Jarvis,	Peffer,	Voorhees,
Daniel,	Jones, Ark.	Pugh,	White.

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Gallinger	Manderson,	Quay,
Allison,	Hale,	Patton,	Sherman,
Carey,	Hawley,	Perkins,	Shoup,

Dixon,	Irby,	Palmer,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

279. On wool of the sheep, hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other like animals, in the form of roving, roping, or tops, valued at not more than 35 cents per pound, the duty shall be 25 per cent ad valorem; valued at over 35 cents per pound, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment, in line 6, after the word "tops," to strike out "valued at not more than 35 cents per pound, the duty shall be;" and in line 8, after the words "ad valorem," to strike out "valued at over 35 cents per pound, the duty shall be 30 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move a further amendment to the paragraph, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, after the word "on," it is proposed to insert "flocks, shoddy, garnetted waste, and carded waste, and carbonizeds noils, or carbonized wool, and on."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 7, before the words "per cent," I move to strike out "twenty-five," and insert "fifteen;" so as to read "15 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope the Senator from Arkansas will not insist upon this amendment, for its adoption would be absolutely destructive to the wool-spinning industry of the United States. If we can import the articles named in this paragraph, wool tops, for instance, at 15 per cent ad valorem, there is no possibility that they can be made in the United States; and instead of importing raw wool, we shall import all wool in the form of tops. That will be the certain result of this amendment, and I hope the Senator will allow the original House proposition to stand.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not think this amendment ought to be adopted without a protest on the part of those who desire to preserve that portion of the woolen industry in this country which is engaged in transforming the fleece into yarn. All the preliminary processes of the manufacture of wool up to the stage of yarn is involved in this paragraph. Roving, if I understand it, is the carrying along of the wool upon the cloth, and is practically ready for spinning; roping is like our old carded wool, and tops is the last process prior to the spinning.

As I said the other day in some remarks that I made about the duty on wool, there is a great difference in the way wool is treated in this country and in foreign countries. In foreign countries the treatment which produces the roving, roping, or tops, is a separate manufacture by itself, and the man who weaves cloth either takes the wool in the form of roving, roping, or tops from the factories in which it has been prepared or in the further advanced stage of yarn. The manufacturer of woolen cloth abroad does not take the fleece and sort it, and wash it, and scour it, and put it through the preliminary processes which form roving, roping, tops, and yarn; but the American manufacturer does. I doubt if there is a single woolen-cloth factory in the United States which has not now the machinery for these preliminary processes. If there are any, they are very few in number. There may be a few cloth factories which buy yarn and manuacture the cloth but if so they are the exception.

It will be observed that there is a very low duty placed upon the manufacture of wool when it is advanced to this stage when only 15 per cent ad valorem is allowed, and it is one of those articles to ascertain the value of which for importing purposes is extremely difficult, or certainly somewhat difficult; in other words, there will be undervaluations even with this duty of 15 per cent ad valorem. It is to be seen, and it can not be otherwise, that all the machinery which is now employed in this country in these preliminary stages of manufacture will have to be abandoned. That will result in failure and bankruptcy to a great many concerns.

The very strong concerns will be, perhaps, able to stand the loss and will go on by the importation of the roving, roping, tops, or yarn from abroad, but the effect of so low a duty upon this process of manufacture will be that it can not be carried on in this country. Do Senators on the other side desire such rates of duty as shall either drive the business out of the country or force the combination of capital and of establishments? It is only possible for this business to survive in this country by adopting the English and the German method of doing the business, having certain factories which prepare the roving, the roping, the tops, or the yarns, as the case may be, and confine themselves to that particular business, which will require great capital. It will not be immediately done, but when the little concerns have been broken up and destroyed, then probably the large manufacturers will combine together and establish manufactories for this class of woolen manufacturing upon a large scale.

The inevitable tendency of low duties, as I have already had occasion to remark, is the formation of trusts and combinations for self-defense and self-protection, not for the purpose of making money, but to be able to compete with the foreign manufacturers, who have utilized all possible economies in the manufacture of wool up to this point. That will be the inevitable result of it—loss to all woolen establishments and destruction to many, and a final combination and aggregation of concerns to endeavor to meet the foreign manufacturers.

I am sure if Senators on the other side understood this matter as do the Senators from the woolen manufacturing States, they would not insist on reducing this duty 10 per cent below the duty which was fixed in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives. That was bad enough, Mr. President; that was ruinous in itself almost; but it is possible that it would not have been absolutely destructive of the industry in this country. Wool was on the free list as the bill came from the House of Representatives. The Ways and Means Committee and the House itself thought that 25 per cent ad valorem was a fair duty upon wool advanced to this stage of manufacture, and I should like to know what representations have been made to the committee which have induced them to reduce it almost one-half from the rate at which the House left it, the House having made a serious reduction from the present law.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of some Senator who is familiar with manufacturing in New England as to the probable extent to which shoddy is used in the manufacture of cloth known as woolen cloth.

I have a letter here from a gentleman residing in Vermont, in which he incloses some samples of shoddy and of the goods manufactured from it. He shows that the material which is used in the manufacture of a certain grade of cloth is made up of 7,000 pounds of rags to 350 pounds of wool.

Then he shows certain samples which I have here [exhibiting], and which Senators can see if they wish to. No. 1 is material made up of shoddy rags and wool ready for carding; No. 2 is the same, and shows the materials carded; No. 3 shows the same material partly twisted; No. 4 shows the fabric pressed and finished; No. 5 shows the fabric not finished; and No. 6 shows the fabric after it has been worn.

The letter is as follows:

APRIL 16, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR AND BROTHER: As the far-famed fizzle is now before the Senate (the Wilson bill), I thought some ideas from a Vermont woolgrower might not be out of place.

The inclosed samples are the product of one of our Vermont woolen mills. Every woolen mill (to my knowledge) in the State, save one, and that is idle, manufactures a similar fabric and is now doing from a fair to a rushing business.

The raw material used is cotton warp filled with shoddy made from rags 7,000 pounds to wool 350 pounds. I get these figures from the manufacturers themselves, and they claim to sell the fabric for what it is bringing there—about 25 cents per yard, jobbers' price. Sample No. 1 is shoddy, of rags and wool, ready to card. No. 2 is same carded. No. 3 is partly twisted. No. 4 is fabric pressed and printed. No. 5 is fabric not printed. No. 6 is fabric after being worn.

If any sane person thinks the woolgrower can compete with this oleowoolen, tariff or no tariff, they had better try it. Before the McKinley bill became a law, wool sold here for 30 cents. It is a drug on the market to-day at 15 cents.

I have the honor to be, sir, fraternally,

C. S. LOUIS,
Secretary Vermont Executive Committee People's Party and Acting Chairman of same.

Senator PEFFER, Washington, D. C.

Senators can see from these samples that the nap or the woolen portion of the cloth which has been used has been worn off, leaving the cotton warp exposed. It certainly is a very inferior grade of cloth; and what I should like to find out from Senators who are familiar with the business is, to what extent probably this kind of manufacture is now going on in the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Kansas had been present this morning and listened to the discussion which took place, he would have had the information fresh in his mind.

Mr. PEFFER. I was necessarily absent in attendance upon a committee of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. About 22 per cent of the material used in 1890 in the manufacture of wool and woolen products was shoddy and other substitutes for wool, including hair.

Mr. PEFFER. Do I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to answer that about 20 per cent of the importations——

Mr. ALDRICH. No; 22 per cent of the domestic manufactured product.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, there is one other thing which ought to be said, and I think it was said this morning by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. The 15 per cent which is to be placed by this tariff upon shoddy applies to the shoddy when it has been advanced to the condition of roving, roping, or tops, and not to the shoddy in its original state.

Shoddy, as I understand, is woolen cloth which has been picked up, and shoddy like that in the sample which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] exhibited, and which I hold in my hand, comes in free by the pending bill. The next process is that by which it has been advanced from a condition somewhat resembling wool to a condition resembling carded wool, on which a duty of 15 per cent is imposed, but shoddy by the pending bill, before it has been advanced to the condition of roving, roping, or tops, is to come in free with wool, and there is not any question in my mind about it; but it will very materially increase the proportion of shoddy goods in the country.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no doubt about it whatever.

Mr. PLATT. As I said this morning, if wool is to be placed upon the free list, it is consistent that shoddy should go on the free list; but it is not right that it should go on the free list any more than it is right that wool should go on the free list. If, however, it is determined that wool shall go on the free list, then I suppose consistency requires that shoddy in its original condition should also be placed upon the free list. It will be a damage to the people in this country; it will increase the proportion of shoddy goods which will be made and worn in this country, for the proportion of shoddy goods is much greater abroad than it is here. There is no question about that. It will come right home to the man who buys a cheap suit of ready-made clothing. Whereas he now gets a fair article, an article which wears well for a low price, he will get, with shoddy on the free list, the article which the English workingman wears at the same price, which is not half as good. That is to be the result of putting shoddy on the free list.

I do not know that I need say anything more about this matter; but, in answer to the question which the Senator from Kansas asked, I will state that the whole quantity of wool and similar materials used in the production of woolen goods in this country in 1880 was 252,474,545 pounds; in 1890, 324,259,060 pounds. That included all the materials used in the nature of wool in the manufacture of woolen cloth. Of those 56,970,682 pounds were used in 1880 and 53,678,066 pounds in 1890, being 22.6 of the entire material used in 1880 and 22.72 per cent of the entire material used in 1890. So, although the number of pounds of shoddy used had increased between 1880 and 1890, the percentage remained the same.

During the last ten years there has been no increase in the proportional amount of shoddy goods made in this country; but let shoddy in free and, first, it will come in free in its original condition, or under this very low duty, as it will be, when advanced to the condition of roving, roping, or tops; and I have no doubt you will find that the proportion of shoddy goods will be very greatly increased in this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I feel obliged to utter another word of protest in regard to the provisions of this paragraph.

If the duty upon wool tops is placed at 15 per cent ad valorem, three-quarters of the woolen-spinning machinery of the United States will be rendered valueless. There are twelve different processes from the wool to the finished yarn, and nine of those take place before the top is produced. I shall insert in the RECORD a statement of what these processes are in order that Senators may understand what I mean.

The statement is as follows:

Memorandum of the processes of making worsted yarns.

First. Sorting the wool.
Second. Washing the wool.
Third. Drying the wool.
Fourth. Preparing through five machines. (Some use carding machinery here.)
Fifth. Gilling for the winder.
Sixth. Winding for the comb.
Seventh. Combing. (The wool is here divided into top and noil.)
Eighth. Gilling after combing. (This is improving the top.)
Ninth. Drawing through five machines. (This makes tops into roving.)
Tenth. Spinning on one machine.
Eleventh. Twisting on one machine.
Twelfth. Reeling and packing.
On some kinds of yarn redoubling after twisting is done.
Tops are the product of the first nine processes.
Rovings are the product of the first nine processes, and three-quarters of the manufacture is then completed.

In this paragraph the duty on wool tops, a highly advanced manufactured product, is placed at the same rate as that imposed upon mungo, flocks, and shoddy. The inequality of this action must be apparent to any Senator at all familiar with the processes of woolen manufacture. There is no one paragraph in the bill which is quite so unequal in its operation, or quite so inconsistent as the paragraph now under consideration.

I think it not an unreasonable estimate to say that one-half of the entire amount invested in woolen manufacturing plants in the United States at the present moment will be destroyed if this action should receive the assent of the Senate, and if the bill with this provision incorporated in it should be come a law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PLATT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). With the consent of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], I transfer my pair with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VILAS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to the Senator from Kansas [Mr. MARTIN], and vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. MURPHY], and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

280. On woolen and worsted yarns made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 40 cents per pound, 30 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph in line 12, after the word "animals," to strike out "valued at not more than 40 cents per pound;" and in line 13, after the words "ad valorem," to strike out "valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment, and move to substitute for it the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 280, line 14, after the word "pound," it is proposed to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to read, "40 per cent ad valorem."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. Mr. President, the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas leaves the duty on woolen and worsted yarns "valued at not more than 40 cents per pound," 30 per cent ad valorem; and those "valued at more than 40 cents per pound," 40 per cent ad valorem.

I am very glad to see that increase in the duty on woolen and worsted yarns worth over 40 cents per pound; but it seems to me that in fairness to this industry the committee has hardly gone far enough. I think it will be conceded that the line as to price between those low grades of yarn which go to the manufacture of carpets and those of better grades which enter into the manufacture of dress goods and men's apparel, is 30 cents per pound rather than 40 cents.

I have had occasion, because of an interest which I can not ignore, to look somewhat into this matter, and I hold in my hand a letter which presents the matter very carefully and fully, from worsted yarn makers in the city of Philadelphia, who say that they make a grade of yarn which enters into the coarser fabrics of men's and women's wear, which is worth over 30 cents a pound; that they can exist and can conduct their business if there shall be granted to them on wools worth over 30 cents per pound, a duty of 35 cents.

The decrease in the ad valorem rate upon these yarns is enormous, even if the amendment which I suggest should obtain. Of course, there is included in the equivalent average ad valorem under the present law that compensation which comes from the duty upon wool; but looking at the rates under the present law, I find that upon the yarns, woolens, and worsteds valued at not more than 30 cents per pound in 1893, taking the current prices, there was a duty of 278.66 per cent, and that duty it is proposed to reduce now to 30 per cent on yarns, wools, and worsteds valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound.

The duty was 118.79 per cent, which it is proposed to reduce to 30 per cent, and on yarns, woolens, and worsteds valued at above 40 and not exceeding 60 cents per pound, the equivalent average ad valorem under the present law, in 1891, was 66.87 per cent; on yarns valued at above 60 cents and not exceeding 80 cents per pound, the equivalent in 1891 was 71.23 per cent.

So it will be seen that here is a very radical, sweeping, and, I fear, destructive lowering of the rate of duty. I hope the committee will be able to see its way to making some increase in this rate, and that which is asked is one which is very modest.

I propose an amendment to strike out the word "forty," in line 12, and insert "thirty;" to strike out the word "thirty," in line 13, and insert "thirty-five;" and to strike out the word "forty," in line 13, and insert "thirty;" so that the duty would be on woolens worth not more than 30 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem, as against 278.66 per cent ad valorem under the present law; and on wools worth more than 40 cents per pound, 40 per cent ad valorem, as suggested by the committee.

I earnestly hope that this very modest limited demand for the protection of this great industry will be granted. Under it we may continue in a sort of lame and halting way the manufacture of woolen fabrics in this country. It certainly would be a most disastrous condition if we should not only import wools, but the woolen yarns which go into the fabrics made in America.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 12 strike out "forty" and insert "thirty;" in line 13 strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five," and in the same line strike out "forty" and insert "thirty;" so as to read:

280. On woolen and worsted yarns made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 30 cents per pound, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MANDERSON. I shall not ask for the yeas and nays, but I will ask for a division.

Mr. HARRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays, which will develop a quorum. A division will not.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, I think we shall have a quorum on a division.

Mr. PLATT. Let us try a division.

Mr. FRYE. It will easily develop a quorum.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

The amendment was rejected; there being, on a division—ayes 19, noes 27.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

281. On woolen or worsted cloths, shawls, knit fabrics, and all fabrics made on knitting machines or frames, and all manufactures of every description made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, and any of the above having India rubber as a component material, not specially provided for in this act, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph in line 22, page 71, by striking out "forty" and inserting "thirty-five;" so as to read, "35 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out, in line 15, the words in brackets, "woolen or worsted cloths, shawls." All the different amendments I propose to the paragraph constitute really one amendment, and I think it would be better to state them all at one time, and let us have a single vote. In line 16, after the word "frames," I move to strike out the words inclosed in brackets and insert the words printed in small type; and also in line 19, after the word "animals," I move to strike out the words inclosed in brackets and insert the words printed in small type; and to insert the small type in lines 22 and 23.

Mr. ALLISON. What is to be done with the amendment in line 22, striking out "forty" and inserting "thirty-five"?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Let that be considered also as a part of the amendment. I move to strike out the word "forty" and insert "thirty-five," the committee amendment, in line 22.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 281, page 71, line 15, strike out the words "woolen or worsted cloths, shawls;" in line 16 strike out "and all manufactures of every description" and insert "not including wearing apparel, and on shawls;" in line 19 strike out "and any of the above having India rubber as a component material, not specially provided for in this act," and insert "valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound;" in line 22 strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-five," and after the word "ad valorem," in line 22, insert "valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 40 per cent ad valorem," so as to make the paragraph read:

281. On knit fabrics, and all fabrics made on knitting machines or frames, not including wearing apparel, and on shawls made wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not exceeding 40 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in relation to the general woolen schedule. It is not satisfactory at all to the woolen manufacturers of my State. We have a large number of them. They are mostly what would be called small manufacturers, running from four sets of cards up to twelve, with a very large majority below ten sets.

As a rule, in the small mills the men who run them own nearly the whole stock. I know all of those woolen manufacturers personally. My father was one for over fifty years in Maine. These men have commenced with the picker and gone through the entire manufacture of woolen cloths.

They are familiar with everything connected with the manufacture of wool. A great many of them are of Scotch descent. I do not believe that in the world there can be found more skillful, more sagacious, more economical manufacturers than those of woolen goods in the State of Maine. They have had a hard struggle. For the last three years, excluding the latter part of last year, they had been reasonably successful, but ten years before the industry was seriously crippled, and they had hard work to live.

I have received letters from, I think, every one of those manufacturers, and the opinion expressed by those experienced men and honest men, and I have no doubt honestly expressed, is that this schedule will ruin their industry or compel them to reduce wages at least 40 per cent. That, they believe, is beyond question. They complain, and I think with great cause, too, that the duty now imposed in this bill is entirely an ad valorem duty. They say, and they say truly, that it is an invitation for fraud, an invitation that is always accepted. No regrets are ever sent back. It has been the experience of the last fifty years that a 50 per cent ad valorem duty will not produce really over 35 per cent of money collected by the custom-house officers on the value of the goods, and that a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem will not produce more than 20 per cent to the Treasury of the United States from the goods imported. I do not believe that anybody can successfully question that experience of the past.

I alluded the other day to some of the frauds which are practiced, and I desire to call attention to them again. The world has not changed, and resorts will be made to the same kind of expedients by foreigners to avail themselves of a low duty on the goods that they export to this country. I hold in my hand a consular certificate prepared in a foreign country, which I will not name, and the Reporter will be obliged to take it as I read it, because I shall not surrender the certificate to him when I am through. It is from a manufacturing city abroad, and it reads in two different languages. I read the English:

I, ——— ———, do solemnly and truly declare that ——— ——— and shipper of the goods, wares, or merchandise in the annexed invoice mentioned and described; that the said invoice is in all respects true; that it contains a true and full statement of the time when and the place where the goods, wares, and merchandise therein mentioned, and which are subject to duty, etc., regulated or directed by law to be estimated or based upon the value of the square yard, or of any specified quantity or parcel purchased, and the actual cost and quantity thereof, and of all charges thereon; that no discounts, bounties, or drawbacks are contained in said invoice but such as have been actually allowed thereon; that the currency in which said invoice is made out is the currency which was actually paid, or is to be paid, for said goods, wares, and merchandise, and that no different invoice thereof has been or will be furnished to anyone.

I further declare that it is intended to make entry of the goods, wares, and merchandise mentioned in said invoice at the port of ——— in bond to ———, in the United States of America, dated at ———, this —— day of ———, 1888.

On the back is the following certificate:

I, the understand, do certify that at ——— on this —— day of ———, A. D. 1888, the within invoice numbered —— in which are mentioned and described certain ——— amounting with the charges thereon to the gross sum of ——— was produced to me in person by ——— ——— for ——— ——— of ———, and shipper of the goods, wares, and merchandise therein mentioned, who thereupon declared in writing that it was intended to make entry of said goods, wares, and merchandise at the port of ——— in bond to ——— in the United States of America.

I do further certify that I am satisfied that the person making the declaration hereto annexed is the person he represents himself to be, and that the actual market values or wholesale prices of the goods, wares and merchandise described in the said invoice in the principal markets of the country at the time of exportation are correct and true, excepting as changed by me and set forth in the column of consular corrections and estimates.

On the inside is the seal of the United States. On the back of the last certificate which I have read is the name of the American consul. Notwithstanding this particular description of the manufacturer or merchant who supplied the invoice, or who was to supply the invoice, he never appeared before the American consul at all.

Notwithstanding the certificate refers to the "annexed invoice," it was not annexed when the certificate was signed. Notwithstanding the signature of the American consul with the last declaration which I read, no manufacturer or merchant exporting goods to the United States ever appeared before the American consul. Here is a receipt: "Fee $2.50; received." It was received, but the American consul, as I am informed from perfectly good authority, sold these certificates, signed by him in blank, with the seal of the United States annexed, to the attorneys for the manufacturers and merchants abroad, and they were at entire liberty to fill up the blanks and put in their invoices when they sent the goods.

Now, is there any escape from a fraud and a cheat there. Is this the only American consul who ever did it?

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if he feels justified in suppressing the name of an American consul guilty of a fraud such as he has just described.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Maine does suppress it, for the present at any rate.

Mr. HARRIS. I regret that the Senator does. The consul deserves thorough exposure and punishment.

Mr. FRYE I wish to say further in relation to this matter that that is not an isolated case by any manner of means. I am informed that hundreds of those certificates were sold by this American consul, and that the goods exported to the United States came in under any declaration that the manufacturer or merchant exporting the goods was pleased to make.

Now, let me go further. When Mr. Cleveland was President in his former term, he appointed as consul at Stuttgart, Germany, a large manufacturing city, Hon. Charles P. Kimball, of Maine, who had been three times the Democratic candidate for governor of my State. I knew him well—a thoroughly honest and upright gentleman—but born a Democrat, he never knew anything else, and he was a free trader, as much so as the Senator from Texas.

Mr. MILLS. A good man!

Mr. FRYE. He was a good man undoubtedly, but with awfully bad theories. Mr. Charles P. Kimball went over to Stuttgart. About a year afterwards I saw him. I said to him, "Well, Mr. Kimball, how is it? Is your Democracy as pure as formerly and your free-trade theory persisted in by you as much as formerly?" Said he, "It is all blown to the wind." I asked, "Why, what is the trouble, Mr. Kimball?" He said, "I pay my coachman 40 cents a day and he boards himself. I pay my cook in the kitchen 35 cents a day. I can hire all the men and women I want here at from 30 to 50 cents a day to do anything I wish them to do; and when Germany is manufacturing and using the same machinery you are in the United States how on earth you can compete with Germany without a protective tariff I can not see." "Well," said I——

Mr. MILLS. If my friend from Maine will permit me, I do not doubt what the Senator is saying is accurate and true of Mr. Kimball; but a very distinguished gentleman in the United States who was once Secretary of the Treasury wrote a letter to me in which he said that he had lived abroad in England and got servants at the same rate my friend is now speaking of, but he said he and his wife both agreed that one American servant is worth three or four such servants as the Senator is speaking of.

Mr. FRYE. As nearly all our servants recently come from abroad, I do not see where the difference would come in—at least up in our part of the country.

Now, I want to go a step further in relation to this Charles P. Kimball history. The largest corset mill in the world was at Stuttgart. Mr. Kimball told me that he had spent three months in investigating the corset factory in that city. He said he found to his utter amazement that the women employed there received on the average 30 cents a day. He said he found that the entire product of the corset factory, not even excepting one, was exported to the United States of America, to the city of New York, to an agent of the Stuttgart manufacturing company, and invoiced at just exactly one-half the cost, and that up to Mr. Kimball's investigation that invoice had been accepted by the customs-house officers in New York as the true value of the corsets. He made a complete and thorough investigation, as I said, and called the attention of the collector in New York to the fact, and it was stopped, but for years that had been going on.

Now, let us call the attention of the Senate to another thing. In the first place, take the returns which have been made in reply to the inquiries of the committee—forty or fifty of them. I ran them over as they came out. On the matter of fabrics I doubt if there is a single return which does not declare that an ad valorem duty will not do; that there will be frauds and undervaluation under it; that it affords no reasonable protection, and that specific duties are required wherever they can be had. I admit that on all fabrics, so far as I know, you can not have entirely a specific duty, but you can have a compound duty which shall be perfectly fair.

Here are two or three statements from consuls which I desire to read. Mr. George H. Murphy, United States consular agent at Hanover, in a report to the Department of State, dated January 15, 1893, says:

The fault lies * * * in the provision of the law which causes the duty on consigned wares to be based, not on the price paid by the purchaser in America (as with other wares), but upon a foreign market value, which, in many cases, does not exist.

Mr. Evans Blake, United States consul at Crefeldt, in a letter to the Department of State, dated May 29, 1893, states that he had submitted to a manufacturer twenty-five samples of goods made by Hermann Schott, of Rheydt, which goods had previously been invoiced by Schott to Louis C. Wagner & Co., of New York, and asked the manufacturer what would be his wholesale price for such goods. The result shows that, averaging the twenty-five samples, his wholesale price was 26 per cent higher than as invoiced by Schott; twelve of the items averaged 37.7 per cent higher, and only one of the twenty-five was invoiced at the same price.

Consul-General Edwards, of Berlin, stated to Mr. R. M. Donaldson, of New York, that—

In no line of goods is there a market price in Germany where the consignment of goods to the United States is the practice, and the consignment of free or specific goods is unknown.

These statements are conclusive as to the fact that no foreign market value exists on consigned goods (and a large proportion of them are consigned goods), and that it is practically impossible to ascertain their value. Comparison shows that the manufacturer quoted by Mr. Evans Blake patriotically made his price extremely low, the real difference in price being from 50 to 63¾ per cent.

Mr. President, the nations of Europe are wise, as wise as we are. They have been trying every conceivable scheme of fraud upon our custom-houses ever since we have had what is called a protective tariff. If there has been an unbaptized spot anywhere they have found it. For years they have been enjoying this experience, and for years they have been undervaluing their goods and sending them into the United States to escape taxation.

Every one of those European governments has made a tariff—a tariff for protection, too. Taking the paragraphs and items, they will number by thousands.

Now, do you suppose after an experience of thirty or forty years in cheating us that they have the folly to expose themselves to being cheated in turn by us? As a matter of course, they have availed themselves of that experience. You may take to-day the tariffs of all Europe, with their thousands and tens of thousands of paragraphs and items, examine them carefully and you will find but ten ad valorem duties in the whole, and those in cases where it was an absolute necessity. I will state that again. I say you may examine all the European tariffs and you will find only ten cases of an ad valorem duty; they are all specific; and it comes from their experience of the last thirty years in undertaking to defraud the revenues of the United States and take away from us the protection which the law has given us. And here we are exposing ourselves once more. Does anyone suppose that those countries will not take advantage of us?

I know perfectly well what the Senator from Texas thinks. I have served with him upon the Committee on Ways and Means. He thinks nothing on earth is decent but an ad valorem duty, and the only thing more decent than that is no duty at all. That is the Senator's view. But, Mr. President, it is apparent to everyone who has anything to do with these industries—I do not believe an exception can be found—that under an ad valorem duty on fabrics (and I go no further than that, for I know nothing about the others) cheating by undervaluation is inevitable. There is no escape from it. When Senators say they have made an adequate duty for the protection of woolen manufacturers they are stating the duty at the face of it, when as a matter of fact you must inevitably cut it down from 15 to 20 per cent.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. President, I dislike very much to take up the time of the Senate when it is very precious, but I wish to say a few things in reply to my friend from Maine.

He has spoken of the fact that in recent years a large amount of goods have been imported into the United States that have escaped the taxation imposed by the Government. I do not question it. I have been wondering for a number of years how it was possible that our exports have so largely exceeded our imports in value as returned to our Government, and I am satisfied that it is occasioned, not exclusively but in a great measure, by frauds on our revenue laws.

But, Mr. President, the frauds are not confined to the duties imposed by value. They have been equally as great in those goods that are imported and charged with specific duties. My friend remembers—I alluded to that some time ago—when he and I were on the committee together in the other House, the sugar schedule was the one in which the largest frauds were being perpetrated. The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], now a member of this body, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, came before us and told us of the enormous frauds being perpetrated on the Treasury, not under ad valorem duties, but under specific taxes. The country is still listening to the frauds being perpetrated by specific duties in the importation of opium.

Mr. President, what is the cause? There is a cause for all this thing. The cause does not arise in the form of duty, whether it is ad valorem or specific. The frauds arise from the amount of duty that is imposed. It is a struggle by the importer or trader to get into the market and sell his goods, and make a profit. When you have a large ad valorem duty he will beat it if he can. If you put on a large specific duty, he will beat that if he can.

The only question before us is whether the ad valorem duty furnishes better opportunities for fraud than the specific duties. I can not see where it does. A low duty, whether it is by specific quantities or by the value of the article, will always let the goods come into the market, because then it does not prohibit the importer from entering; he simply enters and transfers his charges to the consumer, and he puts the profits in his pocket.

My friend speaks again of the low wages that the foreigners receive; and he replies to the statement which I made, and which was given to me by a distinguished ex-Secretary of the Treasury, by saying that the same foreigners are coming over here and doing our work. My friend forgets that he is trying to protect them against competition with the foreigners who are staying over yonder. There is something in this country, whether it is the genius of our institutions or whether it is our climate, whatever it is, which causes the man who labors in this country to produce more for his employer, and if the employer be himself to produce more for himself than the laborer in any other part of the world, civilized or savage. That is a fact. It can not be disputed by any well-informed man who has studied the question of wages and the product of labor. Yet my friend speaks of these goods coming over here as though they were the product of cheap labor to displace the goods made by our dearer labor in this country.

Mr. President, with all our genius and all our productive power there are some things we can not do. There are some things other people can do better than we can do. We have not a monopoly of all the genius and all the skill of the world. Other people excel us in some branches. I made a speech on the same line with this one in the city of Providence, the city in which my distinguished friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] lives. I was talking along on this line. The next day I was invited by a generous and kind people to a club dinner. I was never treated better anywhere in my life than in that city. I fell in love with the people. At the club dinner they took up the cudgel with me again. I still contended that I was right; that while we pay the highest rate of wages by the day, week, month, or year, still we produce the things that come in competition with the market cheaper than they are produced in other countries. That is the general rule. Of course, there are exceptions to it.

One gentleman, whom my friend knows, whose name I will give to him but not to the public, was sitting at the table with me at the time, and he said, "Gentlemen, Mr. MILLS'S statement is true in many respects, as I know." He said, "You all know that I am paying as high if not the highest wages paid in the city of Providence;" and there they pay as high wages as are paid anywhere in the United States; "and yet," he says, "I import steel from France and pay 45 import duty on every hundred dollars worth of steel. I manufacture that steel into edged tools, and I send those edged tools right back to France again. I take the market from everybody in France who competes with me. I have now a contract on my hands in France for some fifty or sixty thousand dollars"—I forget what amount it was that he stated; it was a large one—"to manufacture edged tools out of steel imported from France."

There was a man paying the highest wages in the world, competing with those who paid the lowest rate of wages. But what is the fact that remains? It is that a certain firm in France at some point could make and temper steel in such a way as adapted it to the manufacture of these tools, when nobody could do that in the United States; and, on the other hand, that the American with his skill, could take that steel and make an edged tool out of it that defied the skill of France. Then this gentleman propounded the question: "Why should not I have that steel free of duty; and if I had, could I not manufacture more of these tools and give employment to more people?"

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator must be mistaken as to the article which the gentleman was manufacturing. I do not think it was edged tools, because there is no manufacture of edged tools in Rhode Island.

Mr. MILLS. He was manufacturing tools from steel imported from France.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the gentleman referred to manufactures fine tools.

Mr. MILLS. I may be mistaken about edged tools, but he imported steel from France and manufactured tools and sent them back to France and sold them there.

That is not all of it. I went into the town of my friend from the State of Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. I found a man making watches and clocks. I was very much interested in it. He was making watches to send all over the whole world, and sell them cheaper than anybody else, too. It was the finest timepiece I ever saw. He gave me one of them, worth three or four dollars, as good a timepiece as I ever had in my life. He was fixing the springs for the watches, and I asked him, "Where do you get this metal?" He got it from France. I said, "My friend, you are a Republican." Of course they badgered me a little, and I did them sometimes. We had a little fun at each other's expense. I said, "Why do you not get your steel for the watch-springs in the United States? Why do you go to France for it? You contend for a tariff to protect and build up American industries, and here you are importing steel springs from France." He laughed and said he could not get that kind of steel in the United States; he could not get steel with the constant textile strength of that steel to the inch, however long it was; that his business required him to make the very best product for the market; and he could not afford to use a spring in watches where it was constantly breaking; that the character of his watches would go down and his business would suffer.

I went into another factory in Connecticut, owned by an old friend of mine. I had served in Congress with him. He was making horseshoe nails. I said to him, "Where do you get these coils of iron from that you have piled up here in your factory?" "From Norway," he said. I said, "Why do you not buy American iron?" He said "Nobody in the United States can make this charcoal iron, on which I pay $22 a ton. I must have the best iron in order to carry on my business and sustain the reputation of my business. I can not afford to have inferior iron. Nobody can make the iron from which I make the nails except the house from which I obtain it." He gave me some of the nails. He was shipping me some things and sending them to my home.

He understood that I was a farmer, like some of the rest who claim to be farmers. I do not do much at it except to sink a little money perhaps. He fixed up a box of braces and bits and some tools and sent them to me. He put in a pound of these nails and said: "Give them to your blacksmith and let him try them and see whether they are good or not." I did so. When I got home I took them to my blacksmith, who was an old-fashioned Illinois Democrat in my town, a strong friend of mine. I got up on the weak side of him. I said: "Here is an old Connecticut Democrat who is making horseshoe nails. I think you ought to buy some, and I brought you a pound so that you could sample them." He said to me, "Business is business. I am a friend of yours. I should like to do anything to gratify any of your friends; but," he said, "if I were to buy nails simply because they came from a Democratic manufacturer and they were inferior nails, and a horse should cast his shoe when he struck a hard, rocky road, my reputation as a blacksmith would be gone. I can only make the best of nails myself to keep up my business."

He said to me, "Do you know a good nail when you see it?" I said, "No; of course I do not." He said, "I did not think you did. I will tell you what is a good nail. Let me try this one. I am going to double the nail up on this anvil and hammer it. If it breaks to pieces and the fibers part, it is of no account; it is not the sort of nail I want. If you double it all up and hammer it down and the fibers do not part, and I can hammer it down like a wafer, then it is a good nail." So he told me then, before he touched it, and he did double it and hammer it down until it was as fine as a wafer, and not a fiber parted on it. He said, "That is a good nail."

I mention these facts to show that there are certain things we must import from foreign countries, and you find them in almost every manufacturing establishment in New England. In manufacturing in this country we have the most skillful and enterprising people on the continent in that branch of industry, and yet, as I remember, I did not go into a single factory where there was not something brought from foreign countries that had to be used. I remember in New Haven one of the largest manufacturing establishments in the United States, where a gentleman was importing Scotch pig iron and paying a duty of $6.72 a ton. He said he had to have it to make a certain kind of article that he was making, and he was making a variety of things. My friend Senator HAWLEY doubtless knows him very well. I refer to Mr. Sargent. That manufactory makes a number of things. He bought largely Pennsylvania pig iron and pig iron manufactured perhaps in other parts of the United States, but he said his business required him to have some Scotch pig iron to make certain things. I went into a woolen manufacturing establishment in Massachusetts where wool was brought from other countries.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to help him out a little with the story in reference to the Norwalk gentleman, who is a well-known citizen of Connecticut? He would like very much to have a good deal of raw material, because much of his work is a very simple process and he can easily transform it, throwing it into the molds. He used to be a Republican. He joined the Democrats in order to get Scotch pig free, and now the other side put a duty of 50 per cent on it.

Mr. MILLS. To get it free is a very good thing, I reckon. I wish some Republicans would take that view of the question and get their pig iron free.

As I was going on to say, I went into a woolen establishment, one of the largest establishments in the United States. They had wool from everywhere in the United States, and wool from foreign countries, and the same thing was told to me. We must have wool from foreign countries, wool of all kinds, and there is almost as much difference in wool as there are in the features of man. The tastes of people differ. One man wants one kind and another man wants another kind. It takes different varieties to meet the differences in the tastes of the people.

Now, why should we keep these things out of the country when their introduction would give employment to the labor of this country and meet the wants, not only of people here, but people in foreign countries? It should be our policy to reduce the cost of production so as to increase the amount of product and increase the consumption, and thereby increase the employment of our people, for the vast body of them depend upon constant employment for a livelihood.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the rates which the majority of the committee have proposed, certainly not with those which they may propose, upon the various articles in the woolen schedule of the bill. I trust that they may be high enough to allow the industry to survive, but I am afraid they are not. I believe that the rates which are now contained in the bill, or which may be there when the bill becomes a law, will be destructive of many forms of woolen industry in this country. I hope that some Senator upon the committee on this side of the Chamber will take occasion, before we proceed much further with the woolen schedule, to inform the Senate what reduction of rates is effected by the bill and to what extent it will prove to be injurious to the woolen industry.

For my own part, I now desire to enter a protest against any considerable reduction in the duties imposed by the McKinley act. The industries which are to be affected by the reduction in the duties on woolen goods are very important in this country. They are large in amount; they are far-reaching, and they need the fostering care of the Government.

I hope that in this work of securing adequate duties upon woolen manufactures we shall have the assistance of the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who I regret to say has just left the Chamber, but who I presume will return before I finish my remarks.

The industries of New Jersey and the similar industries of other States are deprived substantially of the benefit of the labors and efforts in committee and in this Chamber of the senior Senator from that State [Mr. MCPHERSON]. The condition of his health has prevented him from rendering as much service and as continuous service for the protection of the industries of New Jersey as I have no doubt he would have been glad to have rendered. But he is absent, and has been absent most of the time.

The junior Senator from New Jersey has occupied a peculiar position. He has spoken honestly against the incorporation in the bill of the Populist measure known as an income tax, and the Senator has not spoken upon any other feature of the bill. He has, however, I have no doubt, been endeavoring to secure protective duties upon the manufactures of New Jersey. I trust the Senator will continue his efforts, because I call his attention to the fact that not only are all the schedules in the bill open to discussion, as in Committee of the Whole, but they will be again open to consideration when the bill shall be reported to the Senate for final action.

I trust, I say, Mr. President, as I see the junior Senator from New Jersey has returned to the Chamber, that he will not confine his efforts to an endeavor to eliminate the income tax from the bill, but will continue his exertions to secure such rates of duty as will protect the industries of New Jersey, because in protecting those industries he will protect the many similar industries in my own State, all over New England, and in all the Eastern States.

Some twenty years ago I visited a fair in the city of Newark, N. J. I was amazed at the extent and variety of that exhibit. I saw in the building of the Newark fair specimens of almost every manufactured product which man can produce either by hand or machinery: I came away from Newark amazed at the wonderful variety of its industries, and I felt that that State produced within its own borders almost everything necessary to the sustenance and the comfort of mankind. That was more than twenty years ago; and the industries of New Jersey have advanced with the increasing prosperity of this country. I have taken the pains to prepare some statistics upon this subject, to which I invite the attention of the Senator from New Jersey, if he will do me the honor to listen to me.

I have here a statement of the New Jersey wool industry from Census Bulletin No. 242, which I will insert in the RECORD. It gives the capital invested, the workers employed, the wages paid, the wages per capita, and the value of the product. There was an increase in the capital invested between 1880 and 1890 of 106 per cent, of the workers employed of 41 per cent, of the wages paid of 73 per cent, of the wages per capita of 23.3 per cent, and of the value of the product of 46.2 per cent.

NEW JERSEY INDUSTRIES, FROM CENSUS BULLETIN NO. 242, COMPARED.

The wool industry.

FOR NEW JERSEY.

	Capital invested.	Workers employed.	Wages paid.	Wages per capita.	Value of product.
1880	$3,795,695	5,142	$1,302,515	$270.80	$6,829,074
1890	7,793,714	7,248	2,416,371	333.72	9,984,640
Increase	3,998,019	2,106	1,023,856	62.92	3,155,566
Per cent increase	106	41	73	23.3	46.2

FOR THE UNITED STATES.

1880	$159,091,869	161,557	$47,389,087	$293.35	$267,252,913
1890	296,494,481	219,132	76,660,742	350.00	337,768,524
Increase	137,402,612	57,575	29,271,755	56.65	70,515,611
Per cent increase	84	38	61.7	20	26.4

I now compare these percentages with the similar percentages throughout the United States upon all these woolen industries. The table is a table of woolen industries. In the United States the increase in capital invested between 1880 and 1890 was only 84 per cent against 106 in New Jersey; in the workers employed, only 38 per cent in the United States, as against 41 in New Jersey; in the wages paid in the United States 61.7 per cent, as against 73 per cent in New Jersey; in the wages per capita, 20 per cent in the United States, as against 23.3 per cent in New Jersey, and 26.4 per cent the value of the product in the United States, as against 46 per cent in New Jersey.

I also insert in my remarks a table of the wool, cotton, and silk industry in New Jersey, as compared with the wool, cotton, and silk industries of the whole United States.

Wool, cotton, and silk.

FOR NEW JERSEY.

	Capital invested.	Hands employed.	Wages paid.	Wages per capita.	Value of product.
1880	$14,555,770	21,913	$5,727,231	$307.17	$28,490,579
1890	38,123,613	30,848	11,646,843	378.20	46,647,626
Increase	23,567,843	8,935	4,819,612	71.03	18,147,047
Increase, per cent	153	41	72	23	63.5

FOR THE UNITED STATES.

1880	$386,497,515	367,553	$98,576,302	$268.10	$500,376,068
1890	701,532,861	491,630	165,830,332	337.35	693,048,702
Increase	315,025,346	124,077	67,254,030	69.25	192,672,634
Increase, per cent	81.5	33.5	68	32.5	38.5

These tables show that in the tissue fabrics, wool, cotton, and silk, the capital employed in the United States increased 81.5 per cent. In New Jersey it increased 155 per cent. Employés increased in the United States 33.5 per cent; in New Jersey, 41 per cent. The amount of wages paid in the United States increased 68 per cent; in New Jersey, 72 per cent; and the value of the product increased in the United States 38.5 per cent, while it increased in New Jersey 63.5.

Mr. President, these figures show the marvelous growth of the Senator's State. They show that New Jersey has been perhaps preëminent in the advances which have been made in the United States within the last decade in the woolen, the cotton, and the silk industry; and therefore the Senators from that State, the Senators upon this floor, the Congress of the United States should see to it when they fix the schedules of duties upon wool, upon cotton, and upon silk, that no risk shall be run of the destruction of those industries either in New Jersey or anywhere else in the United States.

Let us look at the wages paid in these industries in the United States, as compared with the wages paid in other parts of the world. I have here a statement of the wages paid in the silk industry. Col. Carroll D. Wright, Commissioner of Labor, in his eleventh annual report, part 1, upon labor and wages, gives the amounts paid to a few workers in silk textiles in Europe. They are given below with reference to the page of the report where they can be found:

Occupation.	Daily wages.	Page.
Engineers	$0.96½	640
Fishers	.37½	652
Laborers	.52	652
Overseers	.94½	658
Piercers	.53½	674

It will be observed that these wages vary from 37 cents a day, the lowest, to 96 cents a day, the highest. The average daily wages paid to all employés in the silk industry in New Jersey, as shown by Census Bulletin No. 242, is $1.33½ a day.

It must be evident to the Senator from New Jersey, it must be evident to every common-sense man who studies the subject, that if the workers in the silk industry in foreign countries are to be paid as wages on an average from 37 cents up to 96 cents a day, while the average for the New Jersey workers in the silk industry is $1.33, high tariff duties are necessary to equalize those conditions.

The industries of which I have spoken, especially the cotton and woolen industries, have made great strides, not only in New Jersey, but all over the United States during the period from 1860 to 1890. I have a table showing the conditions in the wool, cotton, and silk manufactures, taken from the Census Reports for those two periods, 1860 and 1890, and I can not refrain from saying that the first period was when the Republican party came into power, and the second thirty years after. I insert the table:

Census report for 1860 and 1890 in wool, cotton, and silk.

	Capital invested.	Hands employed.	Wages paid.	Wages per capita.	Value of product.
1860	$141,068,286	185,466	$37,580,181	$202.50	$198,436,114
1890	701,522,861	491,630	165,830,332	357.35	693,048,702
Increase	560,454,575	306,164	128,254,154	154.85	494,612,680
Increase, per cent	397.5	165	344	76.4	250

In thirty years of Republican rule, under its protective policy, the amount of capital invested in the manufacture of wool, cotton, and silk increased 397.5 per cent; that is to say, it nearly quadrupled. The number of persons employed increased 165 per cent. The money paid for wages went up from $37,000,000 to $165,000,000, or 344 per cent. The average pay of the employés in 1860 was $202.50 per year. The wages went up under Republican protection to $357.35, an increase of $154.85. The value of the product increased 250 per cent.

One noticeable feature of this table is that in 1860 the total value of the annual product was greater than the capital invested, showing 140 per cent of production to capital, while in 1890 the total gross product amounted only to 98 per cent of the capital. In 1890 the value of the product of the wool, cotton, and silk industry of the United States was $693,048,702.

Mr. President, can we afford to tamper with these industries? Can we afford to take any risk in dealing with these industries? Shall we allow a supposed party exigency to induce us to go through this tariff bill and cut down the rate of protection from 25 to 50 per cent in order to fulfill some supposed party promise which very few people know anything about, or can explain, and which still less, when the principles of the platform are stated, do they seem to care anything about? I trust that this great woolen industry will not be made to suffer, as I fear it will if the proposed schedule in this bill is adopted.

I called attention the other day to the condition of my State, and I repeat that New Hampshire, with 376,000 people, has 63,000 actually employed in manufacturing. There is a product of $85,000,000 annually, and the wages paid reached $24,000,000. Whilst New Hampshire is also an agricultural State, and agriculture goes hand in hand with manufacturing, yet it is of the utmost importance that the manufacturing cities and villages of our State shall remain prosperous; that there shall be an end of the silence and the gloom and the despondency which now prevail in many of the mills and the mill towns of New Hampshire. It is of the utmost importance to us that those towns shall be made prosperous; that they shall continue to consume the agricultural products of our State, and, Mr. President, it is impossible that that prosperity shall remain to us, unless not only the cotton industry, but the woolen industry of New Hampshire is protected, as the manufacturing industries of New Jersey and all the other manufacturing industries of the United States ought to be protected.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not wish to delay action upon this schedule, yet I feel compelled to say a word in reply to what was said by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] yesterday, relating to the character of the people employed in the mills of New England. There is no place where I shall be able to say it so appropriately as upon this woolen schedule.

The remarks of the Senator from South Dakota have not yet been published in the RECORD, and therefore I can not quote him exactly in what he said with reference to the French Canadian population; but the whole tenor of his remarks was to the effect that they were an undesirable people to have in our midst, and I remember that he spoke, either in tones of sadness or derision, of the fact that in some of the manufacturing cities and towns of New England he could go from one end of a street to the other "and hear nothing but the jabber of French Canadians."

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Connecticut that I wish him to quote me accurately in the matter. I said I could go a distance of five or ten blocks. I did not say from one end of a street to the other. I have counted those blocks myself in the limits of certain towns.

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean by "blocks"?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know what distinction the Senator makes between "streets" and "blocks".

Mr. KYLE. A street may be a mile long.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the Senator's speech been printed?

Mr. PLATT. It has not, and therefore, as I said, I can not quote him accurately.

I desire to say, however, with regard to the French-Canadian population, and the Canadian population in general, which has to some extent immigrated to New England, that when the time comes that we are ready to say that we will have nobody come to the United States, that we will have no immigrants landed on our shores or crossing our lines, it will be quite soon enough to object to the presence amongst us of people who have come from Canada. I have been unable to see any consistency in the people who advocate the annexation, but are unwilling that Canadians as individuals shall now find a home with us. They are not an undesirable class of our population. They are not to be compared, as I understood the Senator yesterday to compare them, with the Hungarians or the Poles or the Slavs.

I have known these people for forty years in the city where I reside, and I am proud to number among them very many valued acquaintances, social acquaintances, with whom I am as glad to associate as with any of the citizens of my town. They are, as a rule, intelligent, industrious, thrifty, and conservative; they make good citizens; they accumulate property, they are mechanics, agriculturists, and merchants, and among them are many scholars, authors, and men representing the different professions; they assimilate with our native population; their children intermarry with ours; they are quiet and unostentatious; they make no trouble, and after a period of residence here they can scarcely be distinguished from our own native population.

Their children attend our schools, take prizes in competition with the children of the old inhabitants of Connecticut, and in no respect can they be taunted with being an inferior or undesirable people. Usually they accumulate property, and they do not return to Canada carrying away the money which they have earned here. They do not supplant our American workmen by accepting lower wages. They work for the same wages that the native workman receives; they work beside him at the same bench or on the same machine. There is no prejudice against them. They are a church-going and a religious people, moral as well as industrious. They do not appear in our police courts, but they do take part, as they should, in our town meetings.

Mr. President, why should they be held up to disparagement, not to say ridicule, here? If, as I said in the beginning, we are to adopt the principle that no foreigner shall come to this country, then shut them out; but if America is still to be a land to which the oppressed and the lowly may come, desiring to become a part of us, to live with us, and to accept all the responsibility of American citizenship, why this continual taunting of New England with having French Canadians among its population?

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to say a single word in addition to what the Senator from Connecticut has said upon this subject. The conditions which he has described as applicable to his State are equally applicable to mine. There is no better class of people in the United States, in my opinion, than the French Canadians who come to live and work with us.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire to say but a word in relation to this matter for the information of my friend from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE].

I live in a city of about 25,000 inhabitants, 10,000 of whom are French Canadians. They are excellent citizens; they are temperate; they are hard-working; they are economical. They buy lands and build houses. They are citizens of my city; and the only thing under the sun I know against them is that a majority of them agree in politics with my friend from South Dakota. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, there is a very large French Canadian population in the State which I represent, and in the county and city where I dwell.

There is a very close tie between the people of New England and the French Canadians. It is very well known that it was among the dearest desires and hopes of the statesmen of the Revolution, especially Dr. Franklin, that the Canadians should join with us and should be a part of our country. There was a special and earnest appeal made by the Continental Congress to the people of Canada. In fact, one of the very greatest of those great State papers, which Lord Chatham said were equal to anything in Thucydides, set forth the desire of our fathers to that effect.

It is well known that the expedition under Montgomery and Arnold was designed with the hope and expectation of a Canadian rising against the British Government, but the priesthood, who are on terms of great affection and confidence with that people, probably more than any other priesthood are anywhere with their flocks, did not look favorably upon the scheme. Very likely they were repelled a good deal by the puritanism of their New England neighbors; but, at at any rate, whatever may have been the cause, the French Canadians have been in Canada among the most obedient and docile and orderly subjects of Great Britain. They took very little part, comparatively, in the Canadian rebellion before the Dominion of Canada was formed.

They have retained, very curiously, their French attachments. In spite of their loyalty to the British Crown, they feel that they are Frenchmen, and a Canadian orator of great fame said in a famous speech a few years ago that if anybody doubted whether the people of Canada were still Frenchmen, he had but to go to one of the humblest peasants on his farm in the interior of Canada and tell him that Germany had beaten France, and then put his hand on the man's heart or his pulse and feel it beat.

Mr. President, these people, though they have held aloof from our invitation to a political union, probably having, a good many of them, the dream of establishing another France in this country, to be independent of Great Britain and separated from the Western Canadian provinces, where they should have a great French Catholic power, still are among the best neighbors we have. Our troubles with Canada do not come from the men of French origin. The Frenchmen in the Canadian Parliament have never been in favor of the measures which have excited complaint with us.

Many of them come down to New England in the winter and chop wood in the forests, some of them come in the summer to labor on the farms, and those persons return, just as the Highlanders of Scotland used to do the harvesting in the northern shires of England, and return with their wages. But for the last twenty or twenty-five years in Massachusetts, in Connecticut, in Rhode Island, in Maine, and in New Hampshire——

Mr. MORRILL. And in Vermont.

Mr. HOAR. And in Vermont, those men have been attracted by our institutions and have come to stay. I am speaking more particularly now of the manufacturing towns. They come, they like our institutions, and they are among the most quiet, orderly, law-abiding citizens.

My friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] says that they agree politically with the Senator from South Dakota. I do not think they do.

Mr. KYLE. I am glad to hear that they are getting their eyes opened in New England.

Mr. FRYE. I was not counting the Senator from South Dakota as a Populist, but as a Democrat. We have, I think, but two Populists in Maine, one is a candidate for governor and the other is a candidate for Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. KYLE. The Senator will find a good many more of them in his State.

Mr. ALDRICH. The French Canadians in my State are more enlightened than that. They are nearly all Republicans.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to spend any time about their politics. If the Senator from South Dakota entertains, or if any other Senator entertains—I do not wish to make any personal application to him—any disorganizing sentiments, any disloyal sentiments, any sentiments which are opposed to honest gain, to frugality, to industry, to the rights of property to a moderate extent and degree, he will get no sympathy whatever from that class of men. They are law-abiding, conservative, industrious, frugal, temperate, and religious. They are under the influence of their religious instructors more than is the fashion of men of Saxon origin.

If nothing else, gratitude ought to keep any American statesman from saying anything unkind or disrespectful of the people of French origin. They were the early discoverers of the Northwest——

Mr. KYLE. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HOAR. In a moment.

They were the early discoverers of the Northwest. They set an example of heroism, courage, fortitude, and religious faith, which the annals of mankind and all history can scarcely parallel. In our New England States are found many geographical names of French origin. The beautiful Lake Champlain, which is the glory and ornament of the State of our honored and beloved associate from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], is one; and in the State of Maine, in the State of Rhode Island, are found names which are memorials of the kindly relations which existed between our fathers and the French people.

Mr. President, I have no sympathy with the bringing into this country of vice or ignorance; of men who are to bring foreign fashions and keep foreign fashions here; of an element which is opposed to a true Americanism; but I have also no sympathy with that sentiment which would strike at any class of our citizens or at any class of mankind because of their nationality.

These men are to furnish a valuable, important, and permanent element in our national life. Our children and theirs are to mingle in this great strain which is to be made up of so many nationalities. Our national motto, E pluribus unum, is as applicable to men of different nationality, to men of different faith, as it is to the men of the different States which make up the Union. Our national motto, E pluribus unum, of many one, of many States one nation, of many races one people, of many creeds one faith, of many bended knees one family of God, is the one distinguishing American fact which this nation has contributed to history.

Mr. KYLE. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts does not mean to misrepresent me in any way. It was far from my purpose yesterday to cast any reproach or to say any unkind word in regard to the people of New England, amongst whom I have many very warm friends, and what I said yesterday would not apply to a very large number of the towns of New England.

I recognize that in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut there are many small towns where industries are carried on, where there are manufactories, and where the sons and daughters of American people are treated as liberally as they were in days gone by. I did not mean to cast any reproach whatever upon the Canadian people or upon the Canadian French. What I did say was that the people of New England in the larger cities, the larger manufactories, were crowding out the American workmen and were introducing French Canadian labor because it was cheaper.

Mr. HOAR. They are receiving the same wages as the American workmen, and they are receiving higher and better wages than they got in Canada.

Mr. KYLE. Canadian labor is being imported because it is cheaper.

I do not mean to say that the Canadian people are going to remain as they were perhaps across the border in Canada. The American spirit is dominant always; and by and by the New England people—certainly I hope so—will be able to bring those people up to the average intelligence of their own class.

I hope also that there will be liberality shown by the people and the manufacturers of New England in paying these Canadians by and by as good wages as they ought to pay to the sons and daughters of the American people.

I corroborate what the Senator from Massachusetts has said in regard to the people of foreign nationalities coming upon American soil. We welcome people from all nations and from all climes, from Russia, and from Scandinavia, and from Germany, and from England, but I believe the Senator will also agree with me that the undesirable classes of their population should not be allowed to land upon our shores. We know also that it is the custom of those nations to get rid of their undesirable population, if possible, by sending them to America. There is no use of disguising that fact.

Mr. HOAR. From Canada?

Mr. KYLE. I am not speaking of Canada. I am speaking of the nationalities of Germany, England, Russia, and other countries.

I did make some reflection upon the class of population we find in certain mining districts of Pennsylvania, and I believe every word I spoke yesterday about that class was absolutely just.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, when the remarks of the Senator from South Dakota are printed we shall see exactly what he did say.

I suppose it is no reproach to good immigrants that they retain an attachment to their native language; and so far as streets, and neighborhoods, and communities retaining the use of their native language, that happens quite as frequently, much more frequently indeed, in the Western States than it does in the French communities in New England. I have been told—the Senator from South Dakota can correct me if I am wrong—that now and then there is a Western village which has been peopled by immigrants from Europe which retains to a large extent, perhaps universally, not merely the general customs, but the language, the speech of the country whence they came.

Certainly, therefore, a mere attachment on the part of immigrants to their own language is not to be censured. It is desirable that all immigrants should come in time to speak the English language, that they should mingle with American citizens, and come to understand the English tongue; but there is no great danger, I imagine, of any injury to result to this country in this particular. Certainly there is none as to the French immigration into New England.

The French do mingle with our own people; they do become thoroughly Americanized; and they are coming to constitute a very helpful and important part of our population.

Mr. MORRILL. And they will not work for any less wages than the Yankees.

Mr. CHANDLER. As the Senator from Vermont suggests to me, they also become Americanized in the matter of wages. Whatever their wages may have been in Canada, they receive American wages and the result of American wages in their life in this country.

Mr. President, when the first French Canadian migrations commenced into New Hampshire, Vermont, and Massachusetts, there was some prejudice against that migration because the immigrants were in the habit of coming only for a little while. They would come to work for the summer; would go back in the winter; they did not take root in our soil; and there was some prejudice against that kind of migration. But of recent years large numbers of French Canadians have come, and they have come to stay. They have acquired habitations. Not merely have laboring men come, but there have come their religious teachers; there have come cultivated men, educated men; and now, among some of the most intelligent and eloquent orators in New England, are those who have come from Canada to make their permanent residence in New England.

I can confirm, from my own observation, everything which has been said here to-day in commendation of the French immigrants as a whole. They are industrious, they are economical, they are well behaved, they are patriotic, and I do not agree with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that a majority of them belong to the party to which he said the Senator from South Dakota belonged, meaning the Democratic party. I believe, now that there have come to be so many French Canadians in New England, they have studied our institutions and studied our economic questions, they have studied the tariff, they have mingled in our politics, they have held office to some extent, and beyond all doubt the tendency of the mind of these people is in the direction of joining the Republican party.

I believe to-day that a large majority of the French Canadians who have become voters, not only in New Hampshire, but in Vermont and in Massachusetts, and I am inclined to think also in Maine, are Republicans. But whether they are or not, Mr. President, does not matter. They have come here to enjoy our institutions, our freedom, our right of suffrage, to participate in a larger degree than they did in Canada in the formation of the Government under which they live, and they enjoy that right of political freedom which entitles them to belong to whichever political party they choose to attach themselves. They make good citizens, good politicians; and they are, as a whole, in every way acceptable to the native-born citizens of New England

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I meant to add, before I sat down, one word. I think my colleague [Mr. LODGE] will confirm what say.

Among the French population im Massachusetts are a good many very able lawyers and newspaper editors of both parties. I remember one especially, Mr. Hugo Dubuque, of Fall River, Mass., one of our most eminent lawyers. He was a member of the Massachusetts Legislature for several sessions, and a member of the judiciary committee of that body. I am not sure whether he was chairman or not, but he was a man having the great respect of all the people of the Commonwealth. He was commended to President Harrison for a very high office under the Government, though I believe somebody had already been fixed upon before the recommendation for his appointment was made.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I very gladly, as my colleague refers to me, confirm entirely what he has said. The number of French-Canadian immigrants coming to New England is very large. They are among the very oldest settlers on this continent. They are thorough Americans in feeling, I am sure, and are now assimilating very rapidly in my part of the country with the people there. I think everything which has been said about them here to-day has been well deserved.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

282. On blankets, hats of wool, and flannels for underwear, and felts for paper-maker's use and printing machines, composed wholly or in part of wool, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, valued at not more than 30 cents per pound, 25 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 30 and not more than 40 cents per pound, 30 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem: Provided, That on blankets over three yards in length the same duties shall be paid as on woolen and worsted cloths, and on flannels weighing over four ounces per square yard, the same duties as on dress goods.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph, on page 72, line 4, after the word "thirty," to strike out "and not more than forty;" and in line 5, after the words "ad valorem," to strike out "valued at more than 40 cents per pound, 35 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I withdraw the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

283. On women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloth, bunting, and goods of similar description or character, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, and not specially provided for in this act, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move the amendment to that paragraph which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 13, after the word "bunting," it is proposed to strike out "and" and insert "or;" in line 14, after the word "character," to insert "and on all manufactures;" in line 16, after the word "animals," to insert "including such as have India rubber as a component material;" in line 17, after the word "act," to strike out "40 per cent ad valorem," and insert "valued at not over 50 cents per pound, 40 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 50 cents per pound, 50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. PEFFER. How will the paragraph read as proposed to be amended?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paragraph will be read as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

283. On women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloth, bunting, or goods of similar description or character, and on all manufactures composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, including such as have India rubber as a component material, and not specially prohibited for in this act, valued at not over 50 cents per pound, 40 per cent ad valorem; valued at more than 50 cents per pound, 50 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. COKE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who ordinarly is paired with me, is paired to-day with the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], whom I do not see in his seat, and therefore withhold my vote. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. GORDON (when his name was called). Under the arrangement just announced by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], I am permitted to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCLAURIN (when his name was called). I transfer the pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. DIXON] to my Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and vote "yea."

Mr. PALMER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is temporarily absent from the Senate. If he were present he would vote "yea." I am informed that the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], with whom I am paired, if present would vote "yea," and I therefore cast my vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CAREY. The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MITCHELL], with whom I am paired, is not in his seat. If it be agreeable to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], who is paired with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], I suggest that we transfer our pairs.

Mr. SMITH. That is entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. CAREY. I transfer the pair of the junior Senator from Wisconsin to the Senator from Idaho, and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH. I vote "yea."

Mr. BRICE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT] now and for the day to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], and vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW], with the right to vote if necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator that I stand paired with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], and that we transfer our pairs and both vote.

Mr. CAMDEN. Very well. I vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. MCMILLAN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST. I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WASHBURN], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. IRBY], and vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I notice that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has not voted. I am paired with that Senator, and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 5; as follows:

YEAS—48.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones, Ark.	Proctor,
Bate,	Frye,	Jones, Nev.	Pugh,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I voted for the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] because the rates of duty contained in it were higher than those contained in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives; but I desire to put on record the statement that those rates are entirely inadequate for the protection of the woolen manufacturer of the United States.

No such radical change has been made in any other portion of the bill as those made by the paragraph which has just passed from the consideration of the Senate. The reductions range from 50 to 75 per cent of the existing rates.

For instance, take woolen cloth valued at 40 cents per yard, weighing 16 ounces to the yard, the rates at the present time are 44 cents a pound and 50 per cent ad valorem, or 64 cents a yard. The proposition of the committee is to reduce these rates to 16 cents a yard; from 64 to 16 cents, or a reduction of 75 per cent on existing rates. At 16 cents a yard duty the goods in question can not, I am sure, be made in the United States. I desire to say to the Senate that the enormous and uncalled for reductions in this schedule will be certain to prove disastrous to this important industry.

Of the articles provided for in this paragraph more than $30,000,000 in value were imported last year. It is perhaps the most important single paragraph in this whole bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the reduction made on the manufactures referred to in this paragraph as compared with the McKinley act?

Mr. ALDRICH. From 50 to 75 per cent, and on a large class of goods the reduction of 75 per cent, as in the class which I have just cited, where the reduction is from a duty of 64 cents a yard to 16 cents a yard.

Take goods like the sample I exhibited to the Senate on yestered, valued at 60 cents a yard abroad, the duties under the present law are 44 cents a yard and 50 per cent ad valorem, or a duty of 74 cents per yard, while under the proposition of the committee the rate would be 30 cents a yard, a reduction of from 74 to 30 cents, or about 60 per cent. On all classes of goods in use here is a similar reduction of rates.

I hope the majority of the committee, upon such investigation as they may be able to give to the subject between now and the time action is to be taken in the Senate, will then consent to the imposition of adequate rates upon this large and important class of goods.

The woolen manufacturing industry of the United States is in a peculiar condition. At the present moment the duties upon the goods they make are specific and ad valorem, and amount to equivalent ad valorem of from 100 to 125 per cent. To reduce those duties at one blow to an ad valorem rate of 40 per cent is not in any respect fair treatment for this great industry.

We are now obliged to make limited classes of goods, such goods as can be made from the wools produced in the United States, and of such wools as can be imported under the existing law. These conditions will be changed with free wool; changes in methods, changes in machinery, changes in character of plants will be necessary under the new conditions. The woolen manufacturers of the country, if their interests are to be considered at all, should not have these great reductions forced upon them.

I repeat, I hope the committee, before this question is reached again in the Senate, will take into consideration these conditions and the necessities of the industry, and advance these rates so that they will be reasonably adequate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island spoke for Connecticut in what he has just said concerning these great reductions in woolen goods, and the influence they will have on the employment of our people. It is useless to complain now. The bill which is cursed by all parties will be approved by none in the coming elections.

Something was said this morning about the quantity of shoddy used in the manufacture of cloth. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] observed that there were practically no goods made in this country wholly fine or without shoddy. I told him I presumed there was not an ounce of shoddy in the clothing of this Chamber, though I did not know what peculiar fancy some Senator might indulge.

I telegraphed to what I consider a model, typical New England town, or rather young city. I asked for the sum of their production and the quantity of shoddy. Not a great many years ago this town was a ravine running through rough, unproductive highlands, one or two hundred feet above the tumbling stream. At the head of the valley is a fine lake or a natural reservoir, from which the strong stream runs rapidly down, furnishing a noble water power. Now great mills succeed each other at short distances in what has become a prosperous and altogether comfortable and happy town of fine churches, halls, and homes.

I asked the question: "What are your annual products and what shoddy do you use?"

I wish to say of their goods, that after they get into New York they are frequently put upon the shelves and are sold by tailors for French-made and English-made goods of the highest class.

The reply is as follows:

ROCKVILLE, CONN., June 6, 1894.

To Hon. JOSEPH R. HAWLEY:

Estimated annual production five fine cloth mills in Rockville, $4,000,000—

Remember, that this is a place where was the ravine I described a few years ago—no shoddy; only fine wool and worsted yarns used in these mills. Two other mills here make blankets, knit goods, and lining, giving an estimated annual production of $400,000. One mill makes shoddy to sell to mills outside of Rockville.

H. L. JAMES.

There are $1,000,000 worth of beautiful dress goods of the highest and the finest class made in that town. How this tariff will operate upon these manufactories six months or a year hence, I do not know.

Shoddy is spoken of as if it were altogether a dishonest thing, like the clay the English manufacturers work into the cotton they send to Asia and sell, which adds to the weight, but which does not deceive the Chinaman much, for after one washing he never buys cotton with that mark. He prefers the Eagle stamp.

"Shoddy" is a word derived, I judge, from some local dialect, perhaps a derivative of "shod." There is a recognized word "shode." It represents the waste of woolen mills thrown off in the weaving, finishing, and trimming, and also refuse woolen stuffs that are run through machines that may be said to resemble a cotton gin. I speak from limited technical knowledge.

It is usually worked into the coarser and inferior cloth. It seems to give body and warmth, and has a legitimate place. It is a perfectly honest, useful product save when the manufacturer lies about it. The expert recognizes it at sight.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

284. On clothing, ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, not specially provided for in this act, felts not woven, and not specially provided for in this act, and plushes and other pile fabrics, all the foregoing, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, including those having India rubber as a component material, 45 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph, in line 2, on page 73, after the words "pile fabrics," to insert "and imitations of fur," and in line 5, before the words "per cent." to strike out "forty-five" and insert "forty."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee amendment to that paragraph is withdrawn.

Mr. PEFFER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas how the rate of duty in paragraph 284, which has just been read, will compare on an ad valorem standard with the duties under the present law? Paragraph 396 is the corresponding paragraph in the McKinley law.

Mr. VEST. Under the McKinley act the duties would be on clothing, ready made, and articles of wearing apparel, except knit goods, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, 80.32 per cent, and we make it 45 per cent.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator will understand that the existing law provides for four and one-half times the duty imposed upon a pound of unwashed wool in connection with an ad valorem duty of 60 per cent. It seems to me that if the Senators in charge of this bill want to keep the ad valorem rate of duty where it is now, inasmuch as they have removed the duties from wool, they ought to make the duty 60 per cent on the manufactured article, without anything in addition whatever.

Mr. VEST. If the contention made in 1890 is true, that these specific duties were given as compensatory to the manufacturers on account of the high duties on the foreign wool, we have reduced 15 per cent the 60 per cent ad valorem which was left to the manufacturers to compensate them for the difference between wages paid labor here and abroad.

Mr. PEFFER. Then there would be a reduction of about 10 per cent ad valorem?

Mr. VEST. A reduction of 15 per cent ad valorem upon the highest grade, from 60 to 45 per cent.

Mr. PEFFER. You take all the duty off of wool and only 15 per cent off of the manufacturers of wool.

Mr. VEST. We take off 15 per cent ad valorem, and then we take away the specific duties altogether. It is a simple calculation under the Treasury reports, amounting to 80.32 per cent up to 109.09 per cent. We reduce it to 45 per cent.

Mr. PLATT. That is just what we complain of. You might just as well go and apply the torch to a great many of the factories engaged in this business as to do that.

Mr. PEFFER. We might as well understand while we are upon this point, that the cost of a ten-dollar suit of clothes will be increased just $5, according to the rate of duties proposed by the Senators in charge of this bill.

Mr. FRYE. Under the McKinley act you could buy a suit of ready-made clothing just as cheaply in New York or in Boston as you could buy it in Liverpool or London, of better style and as good quality.

Mr. PEFFER. That may be true, but I am arguing from the standpoint of the Democrats.

Mr. FRYE. Oh!

Mr. VEST. I desire to state to the Senator from Maine that I think the present duty is a great deal better than that of the McKinley act. If the cost of a suit of clothes would be increased $5 under the present bill, it would be increased $10 under the other.

Mr. PEFFER. That may be all true; but we are not called upon now to reënact the McKinley law, which none of us is responsible for, except the Republicans. This is a bill prepared by the Democratic party.

Mr. VEST. If you beat this bill the McKinley bill will be reënacted.

Mr. PEFFER. The Democratic party say to us in their platform, upon the stump, and in the press that every dollar of duty is added to the cost of the article. That being true, why do they take the duty off wool so that the farmers' wool will be brought into competition with the cheap wool from all parts of the world, and make us pay for a $10 suit $5 more than it is worth? That is the point I want to get at.

Mr. PLATT. The Senate is tired and I am tired of talking about these duties; but the truth about the question is that under a 60 per cent ad valorem duty in the McKinley act, in addition to the specific duty, we did not have any particular advantage over the foreigner in this business, or if we did it was very slight. Now, the duty has been taken off wool, and the specific or compensatory duty has been taken off of this branch of manufactures. So far as that is concerned, if the duty remained at 60 per cent ad valorem, we should stand just as we did before, nothing having been gained to the manufacturer, but when the manufacturer's duty is reduced from 60 to 45 per cent the American manufacturer is practically at the mercy of the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand it, Mr. President, the committee in this paragraph have returned to the House rate of 45 per cent. That is a little better than what the committee proposed, but it is bad enough. There is a very large number of persons engaged in this country in making ready-made clothing: they are very poorly paid; and it is among that class of people that has arisen what is known as "the sweating system," which has been a curse to the people of all our large cities. I know that it is useless for me or anyone else to seek to get a proper rate of duty on ready-made clothing, but I desire to at least enter my protest against these insufficient rates, and to say a word in behalf of the large body of people who are engaged in this industry.

There has been sent to me, as showing with what we have to compete, this suit of clothes [exhibiting], which is an English suit of clothes, and the labor in that suit of clothes cost 90 cents. That is the labor with which our people in our cities are called upon to compete. That suit was sent to me by a member of a large clothing house in Boston, which deals in home-made and imported clothing.

I do not know in what part of England this suit of clothing was made, but it was made in England, and anyone can see that it is very well made clothing. The work, as I have said, cost only 90 cents on that entire suit.

Mr. President, that is the sort of labor with which the people engaged in our large cities in the manufacture of ready-made clothing will have to compete. They are a large number of people; they are ill paid now; and it seems to me that they, of all others, should not be subjected to any further competition. If the loss falls anywhere, it will fall on them; and they are least able to bear it.

I have no intention of delaying the bill by offering an amendment, which I know will be voted down; but I at least desire to enter my protest against the rate proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

285. On cloaks, dolmans, jackets, talmas, ulsters, or other outside garments for ladies' and children's apparel, and goods of similar description or used for like purposes, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out that paragraph and insert what follows it in the bill, printed in small type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 285, and in lieu thereof to insert:

285. On cloaks, dolmans, jackets, talmas, ulsters, or other outside garments for ladies' and children's apparel, and goods of similar description or used for like purposes, and on knit wearing apparel, composed wholly or in part of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, made up or manufactured wholly or in part, 50 per cent ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I think that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER], and that any Senator, even a free-trade Senator, ought to be content with paragraph 284, which cuts plushes and other pile fabrics from 118 per cent down to 45 per cent. That, I should think, was cut enough.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is very satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

286. On webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, gimps, cords and tassels, dress trimmings, laces and embroideries, head nets, buttons, or barrel buttons, or buttons of other forms, for tassels or ornaments, any of the foregoing which are elastic or nonelastic, made of wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals, or of which wool, worsted, the hair of the camel, goat, alpaca, or other animals is a component material, 40 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the paragraph, on page 74, line 2, before the words "per cent," to strike out "forty" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee amendment is withdrawn. I move to strike out "40 per cent" and insert "50 per cent."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 74, line 2, before the words "per cent," it is proposed to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty," so as to make the rate "50 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

287. Aubusson, Axminster, Moquette, and Chenille carpets, figured or plain, carpets woven whole for rooms, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, and oriental, Berlin, and other similar rugs, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. PLATT. I may as well say on this paragraph, as on any of these carpet paragraphs, what I wish to say.

The reduction of the ad valorem rate on carpets is, I think, more unjust than any of the reductions which are made in the woolen schedule, for the reason that there was in the compensatory duty, as it is called, some protection to the carpet manufacturers upon certain grades of their carpets. It was more than an equivalent for the duty upon wool. For instance, quite a number of carpets are made with linen backs, jute backs, and cotton backs. In all those branches of carpet manufacture there was some protection afforded in the 40 per cent ad valorem duty, because the materials were not all wool.

As to purely woolen goods, the duty on wool has been taken off, and the specific or compensatory duty has been taken off. That leaves the manufacturer even so far as these two matters are concerned. Then, the reduction of the ad valorem is a reduction upon the duty afforded for the protection of the manufacturer. But the Democrats say that the woolen manufacturer has free raw materials, or free materials, as we say; that they have made wool free. They have done no such thing with the carpet manufacturer, unless the manufacturer's carpet is made of all wool. If he manufacture a Brussels carpet, and, indeed, any of the common carpets, except ingrain, he still has a duty upon a portion of the materials, which is equal to the duty which is given to him upon the manufacture by this bill. Jute yarns are 30 per cent, linen yarns are 35 per cent, and cotton yarns are 40 per cent. The manufacturer of carpets of those grades has to use the linen yarn, the jute yarn, and the cotton yarn. On those there are the duties which I have specified. So he does not get his materials free; and yet, in addition to that, his ad valorem duty has been reduced in this bill.

It is unfair treatment, Mr. President, and on this Saturday afternoon, when the Senate is so thin, I can not ask for a yea-and-nay vote upon amendments which I should like to propose; but I wish to say I am not going to give up this point, and when the bill comes into the Senate, we shall see whether some proper amendment can not be made.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 6, of paragraph 287, I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In paragraph 287, line 6, before the words "per cent," it is proposed to strike out "forty" and insert "fifty," so as to read "50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I am in favor of this amendment for two reasons: First, that the articles enumerated in this paragraph are pure luxuries upon which a high revenue duty ought to be imposed. I know of no reason why a person who wants to buy Oriental rugs, Axminster, or other imported carpets of this character, should not pay at least 50 per cent ad valorem upon their foreign value; and it seems to me there can be no reason for this reduction of rates from a revenue standpoint.

I am for an increased duty, in the second place, because these rates are not adequate. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that the Senate should not allow these low rates to stand upon carpets. I regret that I have left at my room some memoranda I have, giving in detail the difference in cost in manufacturing carpets here and in competing countries; but when these items are reached in the Senate I shall join the Senator from Connecticut in trying to impose adequate protective duties on the carpets imported that do compete with those made in the United States, and in having a high revenue duty upon those that do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

288. Saxony, Wilton, and Tournay velvet carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 35 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 10, before the words "per cent," I move to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "fifty."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

289. Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 12, before the word "per cent," I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read as follows:

290. Velvet and tapestry velvet carpets, figured or plain, printed on the warp or otherwise, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should on the preceding paragraph and on this and the following paragraph have offered the same amendment if I was not certain, from the indications, that these different amendments would be voted down in every case.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 12, before the words "per cent," I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five."

Mr. LODGE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "forty."

I called attention the day before yesterday, when I spoke in regard to the question of wool and woolens generally, to this matter of tapestry carpets. I desire to call attention to it again. The letters from which I read, and the petitions which I have presented, were from the weavers engaged in the making of tapestry carpets.

They have been suffering from a 10 per cent reduction; they are threatened with a further and inevitable reduction if these rates prevail; and they petition the Senate to give them, as wage-earners and workers, a proper protection. Some of them are men who have worked in the John Crossley mills, at Halifax, England, where they received from 12 to 18 shillings a week, and did not get steady work. The average pay of a weaver in the Roxbury mills was about $8 a week, and with labor paid at the rate of $8 per week we have to compete with labor paid, at the highest rate, of $3 per week.

Mr. President, there can be but one end to that competition if proper protection is not given, and that is a heavy reduction in the wages of the operatives. They are the persons who have written me, and who have forwarded their petitions. They are the makers of tapestry carpets, on which they ask a heavier duty than that offered by the bill. It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I move this very slight addition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

291. Tapestry Brussels carpets, figured or plain, and all carpets or carpeting of like character or description, printed on the warp or otherwise, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read "35 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. LODGE. I move the same amendment, to make the rate 40 per cent.

Mr. ALDRICH. I hope before this matter is again reached to be able to show definitely to the Senate the difference between the foreign and domestic cost of carpets and the necessity for higher rates of duty than those imposed in these paragraphs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next paragraph was read, as follows:

292. Treble ingrain, three-ply, and all chain Venetian carpets, 30 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 23, I move to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to read: "35 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

293. Wool Dutch and two-ply ingrain carpets, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 24, after the word "carpets," I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read: "30 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

294. Druggets and bockings, printed, colored, or otherwise, felt carpeting, figured or plain, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 2, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read: "30 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

295. Carpets and carpeting of wool, flax, or cotton, or composed in part of either, not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 6, I move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to read, "30 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

296. Mats, rugs, screens, covers, hassocks, bed sides, art squares, and other portions of carpets or carpeting made wholly or in part of wool, and not specially provided for in this act shall be subjected to the rate of duty herein imposed on carpets or carpetings of like character or description.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move in line 7 to insert after the word "rugs" the words "for floors;" so as to read:

Mats, rugs for floors, screens, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

297. The reduction of the rates of duty herein provided for manufactures of wool shall take effect December 2, 1894, and on all rates of duty in the woolen schedule, except on carpets, there shall be a reduction of 1 per cent ad valorem to take effect on the 1st day of July, 1895, and thereafter of a like amount on the 1st day of July, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900, respectively.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph by striking out lines 15 to 21, inclusive, in the following words:

And on all rates of duty in the woolen schedule, except on carpets, there shall be a reduction of 1 per cent ad valorem to take effect on the 1st day of July, 1896, and thereafter of a like amount on the 1st day of July, 1897, 1898, 1899, and 1900, respectively.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 13, I move to strike out "December 2" and insert "January 1;" also to strike out the word "ninety-four," in line 14, and insert "ninety-five," and to strike out the remainder of the paragraph; so as to make it read:

297. The reduction of the rates of duty herein provided for manufactures of wool shall take effect January 1, 1895.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SCHEDULE L.—SILKS AND SILK GOODS——

Mr. LODGE. I desire, before we pass from Schedule K, to offer an amendment, to be numbered paragraph 297½.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert as paragraph 297½:

297½. In all cases where the appraiser shall believe that there has been undervaluation in the invoices of any importations of manufactures of wool in this schedule, and where the person importing such manufactures is dissatisfied with the appraised value placed upon such importations by the appraiser, the collector of the port shall be authorized to take such goods, paying to the owner the declared value and an advance of 5 per cent, and shall then order such goods sold for the benefit of the Government in such a manner as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. Ad valorem duties are abandoned by all the countries of Europe as far as they possibly can be abandoned. They are recognized, I think, by all tariff experts outside of the United States as an undesirable form of duty, because they lead to vast frauds and bring many goods into the country at a lower rate than they cost, which is an injustice to the home producer if he has a protected industry, and is also a severe discrimination against the honest importer.

As I said, they have practically abandoned ad valorem duties in the foreign tariffs, except in those instances where they felt they could not avoid them. The opposition to them is so strong that in the German tariff there is a clause such as I have now presented.

The object of that clause is to prevent frauds under the ad valorem system. It operates in this way: If an appraiser is of opinion that the goods presented are undervalued and the importer objects to his valuation, the collector of the port then has the right to take those goods, paying to the importer the invoice price and 5 per cent, and then to sell the goods at auction. It is a simple protection of the Government against frauds under ad valorem duties.

The ad valorem duties imposed in this schedule make in reality a much heavier reduction than appears on the face. A dishonest importer has no difficulty in bringing in clothing invoiced at a very low rate, and unless some power is placed somewhere in the hands of the officers of the Government there is no method of putting a check upon that fraud.

This amendment of mine raises no duty. It simply provides a method by which importers shall be forced to make honest returns of the value of their goods, because if they do not the goods will be taken from them at the invoiced price and sold at auction. Such a provision, borrowed, as I have said, from the German tariff, would, I think, very largely check the dangers to be apprehended from the ad valorem system.

Mr. President, I have gone through the reports of the collectors of the American ports on this matter of ad valorems and specifics, and even there, with all the desire that those eminent gentlemen have to say "ditto to Mr. Burke," to agree with the Secretary of the Treasury, a large majority are obliged to confess the specifics are the only proper method of levying duties.

I will print these extracts from the collectors with my remarks. In the other bulletins, of which we have thirty or forty, the testimony from the home producers is almost overwhelming in favor of specifics. There is hardly any opposition to them. Therefore, it seems to me that it is entirely consistent and would be greatly for the advantage of the revenue to put in some such clause as I have now suggested.

The matter referred to is as follows:

AD VALOREM.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, UNITED STATES SENATE,
January 10, 1894.

MY DEAR SIR: In view of proposed tariff legislation the Committee on Finance is desirous of having a full and comprehensive report from you concerning the workings of the existing tariff laws in your district. It is, therefore, desired—

First. That you submit your views as to any modifications or changes which you or your responsible subordinates believe would insure a better administration of the customs laws.

Second. The views of yourself and your immediate subordinates as to whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are most desirable, and why.

Very respectfully,

D. W. VOORHEES, Chairman.

The COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

(1.)

CUSTOM HOUSE, NOGALES, ARIZ.,
Collector's Office, February 12, 1894.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your circular letter of Jandary 10, requesting observations concerning the workings of the existing tariff laws, I would state that experience and observation in this district have led us to believe that the revenue purposes of the tariff laws will be best accomplished by a reasonable ad valorem duty as low and as nearly uniform as possible. When the protection idea enters into the formation of a tariff schedule extremists are prone to push the theory to the point of prohibition, and this is done to mask the enormity of the exaction, under the guise of specific duties. The taxpayer, paying ad valorem duties, readily sees wherein and how much he is being taxed, but is often befogged by specific duties.

These ideas are indorsed by all the force in our office. The collector having been called away, I write at his request. Hoping for the speedy success of tariff reform, I am,

Very respectfully,

H. M. WOODS, Statistical Clerk.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Wilmington, Del., February 2, 1894.

Ad valorem duty is much easier to collect, because duty can be estimated and collected upon the sworn invoice, but specific rates are, in my judgment, safer, as there is no temptation to undervaluation.

Very respectfully,

GEO. L. TOWNSEND,
Collector of Customs.

CUSTOM HOUSE, INDIANAPOLIS, IND.,
Surveyor's Office, February 12, 1894.

As to the tariff schedules I give it as the opinion of myself and chief deputy that as a general thing ad valorem duties are preferable to specific, and that in the preparation of schedules compound rates of duties should be entirely omitted.

Very respectfully,

GEO. G. TANNER,
Surveyor of Customs.

(9.)

CUSTOM-HOUSE, BRASHEAR, LA.,
Collector's Office, Morgan City, La., February 7, 1894.

SIR: Your circular No. 9 is at hand. The importation of merchandise at this point is very limited, and the importers reside in New Orleans.

It is my opinion that an ad valorem duty is most desirable. It places the amount of duty directly on the valuation of imports, and does away with the compounding of specific and ad valorem, which gives the customs officers greater work, besides creating appeal upon appeal as to classification of articles, etc. I also believe it would increase the customs revenues.

Very respectfully, etc.,

JAS. R. JOLLEY, Collector.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, GALENA, ILL., SURVEYOR'S OFFICE,
January 12, 1894.

SIR: In reply to yours of the 12th ultimo, I have the honor to report as to circular 9, as follows:

I have obtained the ideas of our leading manufacturers and business men, and especially of such as are true and patriotic Democrats, and found them unanimous in favor of the Wilson bill.

Second. They also believe strongly in the ad valorem rates of duty, because they consider the same the fairest and most honest one.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES H. MILLER,
Surveyor of Customs.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
Chairman Finance Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of St. Paul, Minn., February 10, 1894.

DEAR SIR: * * * As to your second inquiry, whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are the most desirable, am of the opinion that ad valorem rates, notwithstanding occasional undervaluations, are the fairest, most equitable, and most desirable. Purely specific rates are fixed and arbitrary, resulting in onerous and unreasonable exactions, in many instances amounting frequently to prohibition. On the other hand, ad valorem rates adjust themselves to trade conditions and the rise and fall in the prices of foreign commodities. Specific rates, with few exceptions, are only defensible on the ground that they protect the Government against frauds upon the revenue through undervaluations.

JOHN C. GERAGHTY, Collector.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
Chairman Finance Committee, United States Senate.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, ST. LOUIS, MO.,
Surveyor's Office, February 17, 1894.

* * * * * * *

If this is done, then to my mind your second question, "whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are the most desirable," should be answered that ad valorem rates of duty are the most desirable.

If the purpose be to raise revenue and not protection, and the suggestions that I have made with reference to the consul invoice be observed, this, in my judgment, would operate equitably upon all; all would pay taxes on the value of what they purchase.

Very respectfully,

R. DALTON, Surveyor of Customs.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Edenton, N. C., February 5, 1894.

* * * * * * *

Second. Myself and subordinates are convinced that ad valorem duties are most desirable. And why? Because they are fairer under all circumstances and require no payment of duty except for value received.

R. K. PENDLETON,
Collector of Customs.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEWBERN, N. C.,
Collector's Office, February 6, 1894.

SIR: In reply to your circular letter, No. 9, interrogations concerning working of the existing "tariff laws," I would respectfully state, first, that I believe they should be changed, and that the Wilson bill as formed by the House of Representatives, including the internal-revenue and income tax, meets with general approval of this community; second, I believe that both ad valorem and specific duties are necessary, but where it is possible the ad valorem duty should be applied.

Respectfully,

S. H. LANE, Collector of Customs.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES, Washington, D. C.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Oswego, N. Y., February 9, 1894.

Second. It is believed that ad valorem duties should be levied instead of specific. They are more just to the poor consumer. If the poor man pays 25 per cent ad valorem duty on 5 yards of imported cloth, worth $2 per yard, used in making a suit of clothes for himself, the dutiable increased cost to him is $2.50. If the rich man uses 5 yards of cloth worth $5 per yard the increased dutiable cost to him is $6.25. This is as it should be. The consumer should pay in proportion to the value he consumes.

Yours, very truly,

W. J. BULGER, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of New York, February 28, 1894.

In answer to your second inquiry, I have to say that, in my own opinion, ad valorem duties are more desirable than specific rates of duty as a general rule. There are, of course, instances in which the specific rates would, in my opinion, be more desirable, but these are exceptional.

I can add nothing by way of argument in favor of this position to that which has already been fully and ably expressed by the honorable Secretary of the Treasury in his recent annual report.

Very respectfully, yours,

JAMES T. KILBRETH, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Philadelphia, February 14, 1894.

On the question as to whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are most desirable, I beg to state that ad valorem duties appeal at once to the common-sense view of exacting duties and collecting revenue, appearing so just and impartial as to require but little examination to gain the approval of most men. The duties follow the rise or fall of values so closely and sympathetically as to appear to leave nothing more to be desired on the score of equality and justice.

This view, however, loses its practical feature in the face of tests which develop fraud and undervaluation, dishonest methods of concealing the quality of materials used in manufactures, the employment of bribes in some instances to corrupt public officers, to which may be added, what is perhaps the greatest objection of all to ad valorem rates, the tendency to place the control of the most valuable imports in the hands of foreign manufacturers having agents in this country to whom they consign the products of their factories at cost of production, or perhaps less—a method which has been carried to such an extent as to force a large number of merchants in our chief commercial cities out of the importing business, compelling them to buy their goods from such agents who are enabled by the ad valorem system to sell the goods, duty paid here, at lower prices than an importer could buy them at the foreign point of manufacture.

It is therefore apparent that the ad valorem rate in such instances, while appearing to be most just and equitable, is practically the one best adapted to injure the revenue.

THOS. V. COOPER, Collector.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, PETERSBURG, VA.,
Collector's Office, February 6, 1894.

SIR: Your circular reached me a few days ago.

Since the tariff legislation has been under discussion my attention has been particularly drawn to the question of specific and ad valorem rates, and as you invite expression of opinion and reasons therefor, I have no hesitation in saying that ad valorem taxation seems to me far preferable to specific rates; and why?

Take for example: One of our wealthiest citizens might desire to buy a grand piano, at a cost of $3,000, from one of the great manufacturing establishments of Germany. He has the right, unquestionably, to indulge his preference, and, being amply able to pay his way, why not require him to pay a duty according to the value of the instrument? Should the duty be 20 per cent on value, the Government would realize the sum of $600. Then suppose a less-favored citizen, wishing to be fashionable, should also decide to import a piano, the cost of which might be $500. At 20 per cent ad valorem he would pay $120 duty. Then suppose the tax to be a fixed rate of $100 per instrument; the Government would only realize $200 for both, and the man with small means would be required to pay as high a rate of duty as his wealthy neighbor. This example would, it seems to me, be applicable in a majority of instances.

T. J. JARRATT,
Collector of Customs, Port of Petersburg, Va.

Hon. D. W. VOORHEES,
United States Senate.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Nantucket, Mass., February 5, 1894.

Specific duties here are well enough, though I am a believer in most cases of ad valorem duties.

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH W. CLAPP,
Collector of Customs.

SPECIFIC.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of San Diego, Cal., February 10, 1894.

In reply to second inquiry, I am of the opinion that specific rates are most desirable. Because (1) they are most uniform in their application; (2) they make fraudulent undervaluation impossible; (3) they are the most easily assessed and collected; (4) they are the most simple.

JOHN R. BERRY, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of New Haven, Conn., February 8, 1894.

Second. "As to whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are most desirable, and why?"

In reply to this I would say that, so far as importations at the comparatively small and unimportant ports of entry are concerned, in my opinion specific rates of duty are preferable, for the simple reason that in the smaller towns and cities it is difficult in many cases to determine the values of imported goods. In the large cities expert appraisers and merchants familiar with the market prices in foreign places are to be found who may detect undervaluations. Not so, however, in the smaller and interior places, where the custom-house official appraiser is seldom familiar even with the kinds and qualities of imported goods, much less with foreign market values.

There is thus ample opportunity for undervaluation to pass undetected, especially in invoices to established houses whose reputations have been subjected to no suspicion, but which may passively accept undervaluations with the condoning thought that "it is done everywhere and we must submit to it or cease business." I know of no other or stronger reason why, in these places of lesser importance, specific duties are preferable to ad valorem.

Very respectfully,

J. RICE WINCHELL, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Tampa, Fla., February 6, 1894.

Second. Our experience here clearly indicates the specific rate of duty as preferable. Why? I can only say that it is not always practicable to have an expert appraiser at every port capable of detecting a false valuation, but there are none who are unable to read the figures on a scale or beam.

E. R. GUNBY, Collector.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, BALTIMORE, MD.,
Collector's Office, February 8, 1894.

Specific rates are simple and far more easily collected. They afford less chance for fraud, where susceptible of measurement, weight, and gauge. Values are more readily ascertained, and rates less difficult of application.

W. M. MARINE, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of New Orleans, February 12, 1894.

The examiners concur in the opinion that specific duties generally are more desirable than ad valorem duties, stating that the possibilities of fraud are much greater and the detection thereof much more difficult.

THEO. S. WILKINSON, Collector.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, GLOUCESTER, MASS.,
Collector's Office, February 13, 1894.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your circular letter of the 10th ultimo (No. 9) regarding the workings of existing tariff laws in this district, I would say that, in my opinion, a specific duty on salt and fish, the two principal articles of importation at this port, is preferable to an ad valorem duty.

WILLIAM A. PEW, Collector.

HON. DANIEL W. VOORHEES,
Chairman Committee on Finance, Washington. D. C.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of New Bedford, Mass., February 8, 1894.

The specific rates of duty seem to be the most desirable where practicable, as it does away with questions of fictitious or fraudulent invoice values and obtaining more nearly the exact duty without a delay on the part of the importer in custom-house liquidations.

Respectfully, yours,

JAMES TAYLOR, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Ellsworth, Me., February 10, 1894.

In answer to question second and in reply would state that specific rates of duty are most desirable. An ad valorem duty gives an importer too much chance to defraud the Government by invoicing the goods much below the value of them.

Respectfully,

JOHN D. HOPKINS, Collector.

OFFICE OF COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Eastport, Me., February 9, 1894.

Such experience as I have had leads me to prefer specific rates as involving less time and expense of inspection appraisal and also avoiding the very frequent efforts at undervaluation, and, within the limits of my own observation. I think the honest importer suffers less from inequalities under the specific than under the ad valorem rates.

Respectfully, yours,

GEO. A. CURRAN, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Detroit, Mich., February 20, 1894.

My idea is that it is impossible to have a wholly specific tariff; but, where practicable, the specific system has much to recommend it. For instance, it is possible to arrive exactly at the amount of duty to be collected, as weight or quantities can be estimated exactly, and questions of classification, causing delay by protests and sometimes expensive suits, do not arise.

JNO. B. MALONY, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Duluth, Minn., February 7, 1894.

The second proposition, "as to whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are most desirable," I beg to state that in every instance known to me where specific rates are possible they are preferable to ad valorem rates. "Why?" Because the specific system diminishes the possibility of defrauding the revenue by undervaluation.

C. F. JOHNSON,
Collector of Customs.

OFFICE OF THE SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of St. Joseph, Mo., February 6, 1894.

In many instances the duty ought to be specific, as it prevents undervaluations. Tin plate, dress goods, cottons, etc. Specific and ad valorem duties both are subject to objections.

Respectfully,

JAMES LIMBIRD,
Surveyor of Customs.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Fort Benton, Mont., February 9, 1894.

So far as the district is concerned it makes no difference whether an ad valorem or specific rate of duty is levied. However, the latter, in my judgment, would be preferable, as the amount of duty is more easily determined than where valuations must be determined.

DAVID G. BROWNE,
Collector.

OFFICE OF THE SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Omaha, Nebr., February 5, 1894.

Second. (1)—I hold to specific duties, whenever practicable, because I believe the Government loses less through fraud, and would be saved much costly litigation. There could also be a saving in cost of expert service in valuation. (2)—It is practically impossible, at many interior ports, to pass intelligently upon values where a great variety of merchandise is handled. It is, therefore, possible for importations to be undervalued without detection, whereas specific duties invite computation which can not fail of being accurate.

W. H. ALEXANDER,
Surveyor, Omaha, Nebr.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Pembina, N. Dak., February 21, 1894.

Second. As to whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are most desirable, and why?

I have the honor to state that the experience of this office has been that in the interest of the prevention of fraud upon the revenue, specific rates of duty, in all cases where such rates are practicable, are decidedly the most desirable.

The most fruitful source of frauds upon the revenue from customs would seem to be a persistent system of undervaluation by means of fraudulent invoices. It is true that all foreign invoices of importations, valued at $100 or more, must be accompanied by consular certificates, ostensibly certifying to the foreign market value of the goods; but this requirement is, in a great many cases, rendered valueless by collusion between the foreign vender and the American vendee, whereby one set of invoices (undervalued) is furnished to the United States consul for customs purposes and another correct set furnished the importer.

N. E. NELSON, Collector of Customs.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Suspension Bridge, N. Y., February 13, 1894.

Second. As to my views, and my immediate subordinates, as to whether ad valorem or specific rates of duty are most desirable, and why?

I am entirely clear in my own mind, after considerable experience, that specific duties on nearly all the merchandise imported at this port and other ports along the Canadian frontier are most desirable, for the reason that they obviate the opportunities for fraud and undervaluation, and render more economical the collection of the revenue.

It is not difficult to ascertain the number of bushels of beans, peas, barley, potatoes, apples, etc., or the tons of bran or hay, pounds of butter or cheese, number of lambs, sheep, horses, or cattle, but very difficult to ascertain the actual market value of these products in the principal markets of Canada, and will be so as long as human nature remains as it is.

My experience has taught me that many importers will invoice below actual value to escape paying the proper duties; that different shippers will give different values, and different appraisers or collectors will come to different conclusions as to values, so that rates are not the same at the different ports on this frontier.

JAMES LOW, Collector.

OFFICE OF COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Rochester, N. Y., February 5, 1894.

Second. In my opinion specific rates of duty give less opportunity for fraud upon the revenues than ad valorem rates. This is, I believe, the opinion of most of the Treasury officials.

Respectfully, yours,

HENRY HEBING, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Ogdensburg, N. Y., February, 7, 1894.

Fifth. That specific duties are most desirable in every case where it is possible to levy them, for the reason (1) that it always can be ascertained to a certainty how much there is of an importation, whether the duty be so much per yard, pound, bushel, ton, or other unit of quantity making no difference, the amount being in each instance easily calculated; (2) that it is almost an impossibility for an appraiser to know how much another person paid for any article which he wanted—for instance, the market value of an article might be a certain amount and a person take a liking to it, and in order to get it, pay much more than the market value and yet enter it for that, the appraiser being powerless to detect the fraud; (3) in case where the whole product of a mill is purchased (viz, of lumber, for instance) at a certain price, when it comes to be shipped to the United States it is graded and qualities changed so much that it is almost an impossibility for the fraud to be detected; (4) fluctuations in the market value are always occurring, and a value correct one week may be entirely wrong the next, and the appraisers not be able to ascertain the true one. With duties all specific they may go up or down and the Government get all its dues.

Such are some of the reasons which have come under my observations during a service at this port since April 1, 1867, why duties should be specific, etc.

Respectfully, yours,

FRANK JOHNSON, Deputy Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Toledo, Ohio, February 5, 1894.

Second. The importations through this office have been limited as to variety, but in such lines as have been brought to our attention there are arguments to offer in favor of both ad valorem and specific rates of duty. Our chief importations are tin (specific), crockery (ad valorem), and bicycle fittings (both specific and ad valorem). We believe there is force in the argument that an ad valorem duty offers opportunities for undervaluation, and hence of defrauding the Government, that under a specific rate of duty does not obtain, at least to the same extent.

D. R. AUSTIN, Collector of Customs.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Port of Sandusky, Ohio, February 3, 1894.

Second. I am most decidedly in favor of specific duties, as I believe that the adoption of an ad valorem system would be an incentive to dishonest foreign producers and dealers, at the instance of importers who are equally dishonest, to undervalue their commodities in invoices in order to evade the payment of duties in full. The adoption of ad valorem duties, would, in my opinion, inaugurate a system of speculation by importers, upon the judgment of appraisers, and open the way to frauds innumerable by which the revenue would suffer great losses. Specific duties, wisely adjusted, so as not to be burdensome, are, in my opinion, far preferable to ad valorem duties, as they offer no incentive to dishonesty, and the Government runs no risk of loss of revenue by undervaluation or errors of judgment on the part of appraisers who are not absolutely experts in determining the values of the vastly differing commodities upon which it is their duty to fix valuations as to duty.

Very respectfully,

T. PITT COOKE, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Corpus Christie, Tex., February 27, 1894.

The brief experience that I have had in this office inclines me to the belief that ad valorem rates of duty are more desirable than specific rates. The great objection to specific rates is that they are inequitable. All articles in the same class are not of the same quality and value. The importer purchases in the foreign market to meet the demands of all classes of consumers at home.

FRANK B. EARNEST, Collector.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Laredo, Tex., February 10, 1894.

First. As to ad valorem and specific rates of duty, it seems that specific rates are desirable in many cases, because of the inclination to undervalue commodities and opportunities of importers to take advantage of the lack of the necessary information of customs officers.

F. E. THOMPSON,
Deputy Collector.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, FERNANDINA, FLA.,
Collector's Office, February 5, 1894.

My personal opinion as to rates is that specific rates of duty are the most desirable—based largely on the facilities for false valuation allowed by an ad valorem system.

Respectfully,

JAMES A. PINE, Collector of Customs.

OFFICE OF THE COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS,
Cape Vincent, N. Y., February 5, 1894.

I am positive in the opinion that specific rates of duty are far preferable, where practicable; and this opinion is concurred in by my special deputy, who has had over twenty-five years' experience in the customs service.

In this district duties, specific, can and have been collected at a less expense than ad valorem. Many cases of undervaluation have been detected, while undoubtedly many have escaped detection, with a consequent loss of revenue. It often becomes necessary to send officers to Canada to ascertain in regard to values, which expense is avoided where specific rates prevail.

Very respectfully,

G. H. SMITH, Collector.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, CAIRO, ILL.,
Surveyor's Office, February 5, 1894.

As regards the second query, I beg to say that, in my opinion, if a duty is to be imposed on foreign goods for revenue only, a specific duty is by far the more desirable. It would be more easily assessed, easier of comprehension by the average importer, and therefore more favorable to commerce. It would, I think, be less exposed to misrepresentation, undervaluation, and fraud.

The markets of foreign countries would fluctuate so that the importer who made an honest valuation of his goods could never more than approximately tell what duty he would be expected to pay next year or even next month. Nor could the customs officer do more than guess what the revenue would be from an estimated quantity of goods to be imported. An ad valorem duty would render it possible for importers to illegally control dutiable values, and thus control the amount of duty paid on the merchandise, even if their invoices show the actual price paid for it. I would, therefore, respectfully say that, in my opinion, the rate of duty should be made specific instead of ad valorem so far as the nature of the merchandise will admit.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

JOHN F. RECTOR,
Surveyor of Customs.

OFFICE OF THE SURVEYOR OF CUSTOMS,
Wheeling, W. Va., February 6, 1894.

As to whether ad valorem or specific duties are more desirable, I think there is no doubt that specific duties are far more desirable, because in case of dispute or protest the rates can be adjusted on this side, while the ad valorem system offers too great facilities for dishonest shippers to commit fraud, over which we have comparatively no control.

JOSEPH A. FARIS,
Surveyor of Customs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

298. Silk partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk, and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk, 25 cents per pound. Thrown silk, not more advanced than singles, tram, organzine, sewing silk, twist, floss, and silk threads or yarns of every description, except spun silk, 20 per cent ad valorem. Spun silk in skeins, cops, warps, or on beams, 20 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph on page 75, line 25, after the word "silk," by striking out "25 cents per pound" and inserting "20 per cent ad valorem;" on page 76, line 3, after the word "description," by striking out "except spun silk, 20 per cent ad valorem," and inserting "and;" and in line 5, after the word "beams," by striking out "twenty," and inserting "twenty-five;" so as to make the paragraph read:

298. Silk partially manufactured from cocoons or from waste silk, and not further advanced or manufactured than carded or combed silk, 20 per cent ad valorem. Thrown silk, not more advanced than singles, tram, organzine, sewing silk, twist, floss, and silk threads or yarns of every description, and spun silk in skeins, cops, warps, or on beams, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. Upon this paragraph there will be a contest. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the paragraph be passed over until Monday for consideration, and that the other paragraphs of the schedule, which will not give rise to any considerable discussion, be read to-night, and that we shall then take an adjournment.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. We will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE and others. Agreed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. Paragraph 298 will be passed over and paragraph 299 will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

299. Velvets, plushes, chenilles, or other pile fabrics, 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 7, I move to strike out "forty-five" and insert "fifty:" so as to read, "50 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I had supposed that silk and manufactures of silk, silk goods, were a proper object for the levying of high duties. If I am not mistaken, both parties in this Chamber during the last ten years have advocated a system of customs taxation by which high duties should be levied upon articles of luxury. That certainly has been the doctrine of the Democratic party. I had supposed that silks and the products of silk, silk goods, were articles of luxury.

I had an impression that silks are worn by the wives and daughters of wealthy men, men who are amply able to pay the tax, if a duty is a tax, as our friends on the other side of the Chamber always contend. But, I suppose, inasmuch as the Democratic majority have always expressed great sympathy for the farmer and the laboring man, and a great desire to lessen his burdens, they must have come to the conclusion that silks are worn by the wives and daughters of day laborers.

I should like to know some reason for reducing the duties upon silks and silk goods. I do not propose to discuss the question at length. I know it would be entirely useless. It would be just as futile for me to undertake to make an argument in favor of retaining the present duties on silk and silk goods levied under the McKinley law as it has been for me to ask that a duty be retained on wool and lumber, and that the industries of my own State shall be protected.

I hold in my hand a little pamphlet entitled Facts Referring to the Silk Industry of America, from which I quote briefly:

The growth of the silk industry in this country for the past thirty years has been steady and healthy, so that now more than half, probably two-thirds, of the silk goods consumed here are made in the United States, and are sold cheaper than corresponding goods of foreign manufacture.

The growth of this industry has been only possible under the duties which have been imposed on imported silks, and its further progress depends upon maintaining them.

Here is an opportunity to tax the rich. Here is an opportunity to tax articles of luxury. Here is an opportunity to raise the necessary revenues by taxation upon the rich in order that the poor may be relieved, and at the same time give such incidental protection to this industry as to continue its growth. This pamphlet states that more than one-half, probably two-thirds, of the silk goods consumed here are made in the United States. Why should we not make them all, or at least if the rich people of the United States are determined to import foreign silks, either because they are foreign silks or because they suppose them better than domestic silks, why not make them pay for that indulgence?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. It has been suggested that we pass over paragraph 299, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done. Let it go over with the preceding paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the next paragraph will be read.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

300. Webbings, gorings, suspenders, braces, beltings, bindings, braids, galloons, fringes, cords, and tassels, any of the foregoing which are elastic or nonelastic, buttons and ornaments made of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, 40 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. In line 12, after the word "value," I move to strike out "forty" and insert "forty-five," so as to read "45 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas by striking out "forty-five" and inserting "fifty," so as to read "50 per cent ad valorem."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

301. Laces and articles made wholly or in part of lace, and embroideries, including articles or fabrics embroidered by hand or machinery, handkerchiefs, neck ruffings and ruchings, clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description, including knit goods made up or manufactured wholly or in part by the tailor, seamstress, or manufacturer, composed of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, and beaded silk goods, not specially provided for in this act, 50 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph on page 76, line 22, after the word "act," by striking out "fifty" and inserting "forty-five."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee amendment is withdrawn. I move, in line 17, to add the words "veils and veilings" after the word "ruchings," so as to read:

Handkerchiefs, neck ruffings and ruchings, veils and veilings, clothing ready made, and articles of wearing apparel of every description.

The mendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 22, after the word "act," I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read "60 per cent ad valorem."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The amendment was rejected.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

302. All manufactures of silk, or of which silk is the component material of chief value, including those having India rubber as a component material, not specially provided for in this act, 45 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. ALDRICH. In line 2, page 77, after the word "act," I move to strike out "forty-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to read "50 per cent ad valorem."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Secretary read as follows:

SCHEDULE M.—PULP, PAPERS, AND BOOKS.

Mr. HARRIS. It is now six minutes of 5 on Saturday evening. In view of various requests made by Senators, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. VILAS. Will not the Senator from Tennessee withdraw that motion and move to proceed to the consideration of executive business?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, June 18, 1894, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 16, 1894.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain of the Senate.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Journal will be approved.

Mr. REED. I object for a moment, Mr. Speaker. I do not observe that any mention is made in the Journal of the question of privilege which was raised by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] yesterday.

The SPEAKER. There was no action taken by the House upon the matter. It was a personal explanation.

Mr. REED. It was part of the proceedings of the House.

The SPEAKER. It was not necessary to incorporate it in the Journal. It is not customary, the Chair thinks, to include such matters in the Journal. It was a matter of debate, a personal explanation.

Mr. REED. I have not examined the matter, but it was certainly a part of the proceedings of the House, and I do not see why it should be left out any more than any other proceeding. The RECORD reads:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a matter of personal privilege——

The SPEAKER. That is not correct.

Mr. REED. Whereupon Mr. RICHARDSON proceeded with his statement.

The SPEAKER. That which the gentleman has read is incorrect.

Mr. REED. Well, on that I think opinions perhaps will differ.

The SPEAKER. What is the suggestion of the gentleman as to the Journal?

Mr. REED. My suggestion is that there should be some statement in the Journal that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] arose on a question of privilege and addressed the House.

The SPEAKER. Certainly there can be no such statement as that, because that is not the fact.

Mr. REED. But here is the RECORD which states that that is the fact.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee himself will state that it is not the fact. The Chair has knowledge that it is not the fact.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, when I prepared my remarks I expected to address myself to a matter of privilege, and the first sentence in the typewritten speech which I had prepared makes that statement, but by inadvertence on my part I was prevented from doing so; in other words, the special rule reported from the Committee on Rules was presented before I had an opportunity to take the floor, and upon that rule, or resolution reported, there was a demand for the yeas and nays, and a yea-and-nay vote was taken.

While the yea-and-nay vote was being taken I went to the Speaker, knowing full well that under former rulings of the Chair I was not entitled to the floor upon a matter of privilege and asked to be recognized to ask permission to make a statement by unanimous consent, and was informed that I would be recognized for that purpose. Immediately after the closing of the yea-and-nay vote I arose and addressed the Chair and asked permission to make a statement by unanimous consent on a matter which I thought would ordinarily be privileged, or words to that effect. That is about the statement I made. I looked over the House to ascertain whether I could have order, and as soon as order was restored I began my statement. I understood that I was proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, this situation would not be complete unless it is presented fully to the House. On page 7510 of the RECORD the following colloquy is reported by the official reporters, and I do not see any note here to indicate that there is any doubt about this:

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry. Was this proceeding had by unanimous consent of the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked consent to make a personal explanation.

Mr. REED. Asked consent? Was unanimous consent asked?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked consent.

Mr. REED. Was that put to the House?

The SPEAKER. Of course that was put to the House. Why does the gentleman ask the question?

Mr. REED. Because I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman had been here he would probably have heard it.

That, whether intended or not, contains a suggestion that I was not present at the time. The Speaker then proceeded to say:

Under the order adopted the House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will please take the chair.

Meantime, I had asked some of my neighbors whether my recollection was correct or not, and, finding it confirmed, I made this remark:

Mr. REED. I am informed that it was not put to the House.
The SPEAKER. The House will resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will take the chair.

I at once went to the Reporter and got his notes of the transaction just as he had taken them down, because I wanted to know whether my recollection was accurate or not. It had meantime been fortified by the recollection of all the gentlemen I knew who had noticed the transaction, which recollection I think I may state agrees with the Reporter's notes. I will read the reporter's notes:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a matter of persona privilege——

Not a personal explanation, you will see, but a matter of personal privilege, which was precisely what it was in parliamentary language.

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] states that he rises to a question of personal privilege.
Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, for nearly ten years I have been a member of this House—

And so on.

According to the Reporter's notes there was no question put to the House; according to the Reporter's notes there was no request for unanimous consent; according to the Reporter's notes there was no request to make a personal explanation; but, on the contrary, the gentleman rose to a question of personal privilege; and there was no question put to the House whatever. Now, there is an inaccuracy here somewhere. The Reporters have added this note, or somebody has:

The foregoing is given as understood by the Reporter. For incidental correction see proceedings immediately following the conclusion of Mr. RICHARDSON'S statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair ought to state——

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Before the gentleman from Maine concludes, if the Chair will indulge me, I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine whether he was in his seat or heard what occurred when I did rise?

Mr. REED. I did.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. My distinct recollection is that I addressed myself to the Chair, and asked consent to make a personal explanation.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman will have to make another one before he gets through with this.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Will the gentleman be kind enough to inform me to what he refers in order that I may begin to get ready for that explanation?

Mr. REED. I think that the present proceedings have indicated it already. I mean by that, frankly, that I think the gentleman from Tennessee is mistaken in supposing that he asked unanimous consent. I think he is mistaken. I think he may possibly—for I am desirous of being entirely courteous to the gentleman—I think it is possible that he may have had such an intention. If he says so, I shall not be inclined to disbelieve it. But the action that took place before the House was so plain and simple—the House will remember the transaction, and will remember the language which I have read, and will see at once that I am somewhat concerned (although it is a very small matter) in believing the actual truth presented in the RECORD.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, only a word or two in reply. I do not usually put my recollection against the recollection of other gentlemen. But I knew I had to make my remarks as a personal explanation, not to present a matter of privilege. As I have said, my remarks were typewritten. The first sentence in my remarks was "I rise to a question of personal privilege." But that is omitted from the printed statement, because I did not use that language, knowing I was not addressing myself to, or had not obtained the floor on, a matter of personal privilege. I am further sustained in my recollection by reason of the fact that when I went to the Speaker and asked him to recognize me to make a personal explanation, I knew I could not in the condition of affairs at that time, by reason of the special rule under which we were acting, rise to a question of privilege; and therefore I knew I must make it "a personal explanation." And that is what I intended to make. I am further supported in my recollection by at least one gentleman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE], now sitting within a few feet of me, and who was sitting there yesterday when I rose, and who says that I did say that I rose on a matter of personal explanation.

Mr. HOLMAN (to Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee). You made that statement; everybody heard that.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] states that he so understood me.

Mr. HOLMAN. My attention was called to the matter from the fact that I desired to correct the RECORD; and the gentleman was standing by me at the moment before he went to his seat.

Mr. LANE. I was sitting right here; and I heard the gentleman make the distinct statement.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I knew that was what I was obliged to do and that is what I tried to do. That is the explanation I make.

Mr. REED. It will be perceived—and I call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee to this—that this is not simply a statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee and taken down by the reporter, and a part of his notes, "I rise to a matter of personal privilege," but the Speaker repeats, "The House will be in order. The gentleman from Tennessee states that he rises to a question of personal privilege."

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. That is undoubtedly true; but the gentleman from Maine well knows that that is the ordinary form when a gentleman rises to a matter such as I had in hand yesterday; and the reporter being so familiar with the usual form, might have put it that way. I do not say it occurred that way. I simply state what my recollection was; and I find that recollection supported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LANE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who were very near me. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] now repeats the statement; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], and perhaps other gentlemen near me also sustain it.

Mr. REED. Do you now claim that it was submitted to the House?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. In this way: I do not undertake to say that the Speaker said, "The gentleman asks unanimous consent, etc.; is there objection?" which would have been the formal way if he had adhered strictly to the rule; but the gentleman knows that three times out of five, if a gentleman on this floor desires to object to a request for unanimous consent he objects, and the Speaker takes note of the fact; but when he pauses and waits for objection, as I did, and there was no objection, because I would not have proceeded if there had been any objection, it is assumed there is no objection, and the gentleman proceeds.

Mr. REED. But I desire to refresh the mind of the gentleman from Tennessee by this recital:

Mr. REED. Was that put to the House?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I remember very distinctly hearing that.

Mr. REED (reading):

The SPEAKER. Of course that was put to the House. Why does the gentleman ask the question?

After having his mind refreshed by that, does he think that it was put to the House?

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. I am not on the floor to answer that question. I do not think that is material; but I would ask the gentleman, without getting into any controversy with him——

Mr. REED. It seems material to accuracy.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Without getting into any controversy, when it was suggested by the Chair, yesterday, that the gentleman was not on the floor, the gentleman from Maine did not reply that he was on the floor.

Mr. REED. The time was somewhat limited. The Chair seemed to be desirous of closing the incident.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper that he should make some statement about this matter.

Ordinarily the Reporters are very accurate, and yet, as we all know, they sometimes make mistakes. It is no uncommon thing for gentlemen to rise and correct the RECORD as to statements alleged to have been made by them, but not made by them. And that is not remarkable when you consider the size of this body and the confusion usually incident to the transaction of business in it.

If there were no incident connected with this matter, except that which ordinarily takes place in the House, to have fixed the recollection of the Chair, the Chair would be inclined to accept, as he always has been inclined to accept, the notes of the Reporters. But in this matter there was a circumstance which fixed and fixes the recollection of the Chair.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] came to the Chair pending the consideration of the report from the Committee on Rules, and stated that he desired to reply to a matter which had appeared in a paper in the city of Washington, "But," he said, "it will require unanimous consent." Inasmuch as the order which was then before the House provided that immediately upon its adoption the House should resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole to consider a given bill, it would require unanimous consent to interrupt that automatic action provided by the order, and the Chair said to the gentleman, "It will require unanimous consent to do this."

The gentleman from Tennessee, after the order was adopted, in the eye and ear of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], rose and asked unanimous consent to make a personal explanation, or to refer to a personal matter, and the Chair stated, after rapping for order and asking for order, "If there be no objection, the gentleman from Tennessee will be permitted to make his personal explanation." That was an invitation to any gentleman to object who desired to object. That was submitting the matter to the House.

The gentleman asking unanimous consent to make the explanation, the Chair said: "If there be no objection, the gentleman will be permitted to make the explanation." The gentleman took the floor. He made his explanation. No one objected. After the gentleman had finished his explanation, after the matter had passed, as it were, from the consideration of the House, when there was nothing before the House for action, the gentleman from Maine arose and asked how it was the gentleman from Tennessee obtained the right; or to quote his own language as reported:

Mr. REED. A parliamentary inquiry. Was this proceeding had by unanimous consent of the House?

Now, that was after the proceeding was over. It was at a stage when the gentleman from Maine, whether it was had by consent of the House or without the consent of the House, could take no action relating to the explanation. After the transaction was completed the gentleman from Maine asked:

Was this proceeding had by unanimous consent of the House?

The Speaker replied:

The gentleman asked unanimous consent to make a personal explanation.

The Speaker made that reply because he had a distinct recollection, from the incident just indicated, that he did make the request. Quoting further:

Mr. REED. Asked consent? Was unanimous consent asked?
The SPEAKER. The gentleman asked consent.
Mr. REED. Was that put to the House?
The SPEAKER. Of course that was put to the House—

And the Speaker reiterates now that it was put to the House by the Speaker stating, "The gentleman asks unanimous consent to make an explanation, and in the absence of objection the gentleman will be permitted to make his explanation."

Then the Chair said:

Of course that was put to the House. Why does the gentleman ask the question?

The Chair asked why the gentleman propounded the question, because there seemed to be nothing practical, no practical result that could arise or occur, whether it was by unanimous consent or without unanimous consent, because it was a completed and a perfect act. The gentleman replied:

Because I did not hear it.
The SPEAKER. If the gentleman had been here he would probably have heard it.

All this is in accordance with the recollection—the distinct recollection—of the Chair. Now, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] refers to a note which the Chair sees now for the first time, or saw this morning for the first time, and of which prior to that time the Chair had no knowledge. The reporters have inserted that note. They quote the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] as saying:

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a matter of personal privilege.
The SPEAKER. The House will be in order. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] states that he rises to a question of personal privilege.

And then this note appears in the RECORD:

The foregoing is given as understood by the reporter. For incidental correction, see proceedings immediately following the conclusion of Mr. RICHARDSON'S statement.

The Chair desires to say that so far as that note is concerned, he is no wise responsible for it, and did not suggest it in any way. After the incident on yesterday, the Chair's attention was called to the fact that the notes of the reporters were called for as to what took place when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON] arose. The Chair desired that a copy of those notes be furnished to him. They were furnished to him.

When the Chair saw them, he saw that the reporter's notes were inaccurate and incorrect; but inasmuch as this colloquy took place between the gentleman from Maine and the Speaker, after the completion of this transaction, the Chair expressly declined to make any correction of the RECORD. He wrote a line to the reporters, saying that the statement in the notes was incorrect, but under the circumstances the Chair declined to make any suggestion as to a change, and only wrote this line so that he might not be understood, even by implication, having seen the notes, to approve their correctness. That is the whole of the transaction so far as the Chair recollects it.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] makes the point that this matter should go into the Journal, and that is a practical question.

The Chair has not looked at the precedents. The Chair is informed that those matters only go into the Journal where there is some action of the House upon a resolution or question of order, or a matter of that kind. When a gentleman arises to a personal explanation it is not stated in the Journal; and while the Journal has to contain a recitation of the proceedings of the House, it does not mean the debate that takes place in the House. Debate is not entered upon the Journal; but it is some action of the House upon some pending measure or questions of order that are contained in the Journal. Therefore the Chair does not see that it is necessary that this should go in the Journal. There is no objection, however, if the gentleman desires that this should go in the Journal.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine.

Mr. REED. I desire to say that I procured at once, there being a difference of recollection between the Chair and myself upon the point, as the Chair had manifested by suggesting that I was absent, the notes of the Reporter, and was assured that that was the transaction as it took place. I do not know what caused the Reporters to put that note in the RECORD. Certainly something caused them to do it. In that I had no hand or part. I desire to say that among the gentlemen who recollected this as I do are three gentlemen immediately around me—the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUD], the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL].

I desire to suggest to the Chair, in furtherance of the idea the Chair suggests, that this can not go in, because it was not a part of the business of the House; if unanimous consent of the House was asked, it thereupon becomes the business of the House; and it would therefore seem as if the journal clerk's recollection and that of gentleman about me, was the same as the Reporter's notes. I do not desire in the slightest degree to make a mountain out of a mole-hill or to make any particular comment upon inaccuracies which have occurred.

I think the Speaker divined what my motive was in putting the question. In addition to the answer which I made that I did not hear it, I was at the time, of course, a little doubtful of my recollection, inasmuch as in the hurry and confusion of this House a man may be very easily mistaken. While I felt confident of it, I had the statement of the Speaker at the time, and I thought there might be some doubt; I thought possibly I might have been mistaken, and I do not desire to make mistakes if I can help it about this matter.

I think the Speaker also divined the point which I intended to bring to his attention, and which I should have brought to his attention if the gentleman from Massachusetts had not taken the chair, was that ruling of the Speaker to which I had objected, and on which I addressed the Chair a number of times before, that one of these orders stops the privileges of the House, and was not only incorrect in theory, as I think I had demonstrated, but was also exceedingly inconvenient in practice, because it would put a gentleman in a position of submitting in silence to a newspaper statement which was absolutely incorrect and which he thought to be damaging to himself. I think I may be doing the country more service in pointing out the practical results of what I conceive was the mistaken theory of the Chair. That question I am not making, except so far as it incidentally comes up in the statement which I make.

Now, in regard to this amendment of the Journal, it seems to me very clear that it must be made, especially after what the Speaker says on the subject of having put this question to the House. If he had put it to the House it certainly was a transaction of the House; and if he did not put it to the House, and it was not a transaction of the House, I wonder what in the world it was; because the House of Representatives does not usually spend ten minutes in what it is obliged to admit in its Journal was absolutely nothing.

The Journal is a statement of the proceedings of the body. It is accurate, and intended to be so, for all purposes; and if this question was put to the House, and the House gave unanimous consent for the gentleman to proceed, then the Journal ought to state it; and if the Journal does state that unanimous consent was given, of course the responsibility for that statement will rest upon those who choose to make it. For my part, with my recollection fortified by that of a number of other gentlemen, and agreeing perfectly with the notes of the Reporters, I may be pardoned for still continuing to think that there is a possibility of an inaccuracy somewhere or other in this transaction.

Mr. CATCHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words. I have a very distinct recollection of what occurred on yesterday. Shortly before the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICH-ARDSON] took the floor to make his explanation, he met me behind the railing and told me that he contemplated making an explanation with reference to a publication that had been made in the News, and that he had been informed by a mutual friend that I had said that if I were in his place I would treat the charge as unworthy of answer.

I told him that I had so stated; that I did not suppose that anybody in this House would believe for a moment that he was guilty of the act which was charged against him. He said, however, that he had prepared with care what he was satisfied would be a complete answer to the charge, and that he proposed to make a statement. Just then he left me and walked down the aisle, and I followed him for the purpose of hearing what he had to say. He stood near the seat now occupied by the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. MARTIN, and I sat within a foot or two of him, across the aisle. I have a distinct recollection that he rose to address the Chair and stated that he desired to ask consent to submit to the House an explanation of a nature personal to himself.

I am very sure that nothing was said about rising to a question of personal privilege. The Speaker thereupon made a statement as I remember—and my recollection is quite vivid—using about these words: "The gentleman from Tennessee asks consent to submit a statement of a nature personal to himself. If there be no objection, the gentleman will proceed." There was no objection, and the gentleman from Tennessee did proceed. That is my recollection of what occurred, and I believe I state the transaction correctly.

Mr. REED. I only want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi—and I wish I could reach the country—that, in view of his statement, I trust none of us will ever be accused hereafter of doing things or saying things here upon the mere authority of the Reporters. [Laughter.]

Mr. CATCHINGS. I have made no accusation against anybody. I have taken the floor simply to make this statement because of the statement made by the gentleman from Maine. I have made no accusation against him or anybody else. I can well understand how things that occur in the bustle and turmoil which often exists on this floor may be misunderstood. I think it very likely that a dozen of us might get together any time and undertake to recite what had occurred during the preceding hour and might all differ about it, but I have no doubt myself that what I have stated is exactly what occurred here yesterday.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. There is one question pending now. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] suggests that the action of the House on this matter should be entered upon the Journal. That is the practical question and the only practical question. The Chair has no doubt himself as to what took place on yesterday, his recollection being distinct from the previous conversation with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RICHARDSON], and the Chair has no concern as to what gentlemen may think as to whether the Chair's recollection is correct or incorrect.

Conscious that his recollection is correct, the Chair would not yield it to the notes of anyone, no matter who he might be, nor to the recollection of anyone, no matter who he might be, and the Chair will not be deterred from stating that recollection by any intimation that "hereafter it will be understood the Reporters' notes are inaccurate."

While the official reports are generally correct, yet no fair-minded or just man, knowing the nature of the proceedings of the House and the circumstances under which the Reporters are required to perform their duties, would expect them to escape occasional inaccuracies. For this reason a "correction of the RECORD" is always recognized as a matter of privilege; yet on such occasions, and they are not infrequent, no gentleman has ever heretofore risen and made the suggestion, "Hereafter be it understood that the notes of the Reporters are not to be trusted."

It is well enough to be fair and just and honest with each other. The practical question now is whether the Journal should contain a recital of the fact of the gentleman from Tennessee rising on yesterday to make a personal explanation. The Chair is informed that it never has been the habit to include such matters in the Journal. A gentleman rises and asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and no reference is made to it in the Journal. The House gives consent that he shall extend his remarks in the RECORD, and that is found in the RECORD, and not in the Journal. A gentleman rises to make a personal explanation involving no resolution, involving no action of the House except the mere action by which he is permitted to make the explanation, and it is not customary to put such a matter in the Journal.

No practical purpose would be subserved by including such matters in the Journal, and the Chair is informed by the Journal Clerk that such has not been the practice. Therefore, the Chair thinks that the Journal, so far as that is concerned, is correct. The question is upon the approval of the Journal.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to call the attention of the Chair to another matter in the Journal. I understood the Journal, as read, to state that the modification of the rule proposed by the gentleman from Ohio was made by unanimous consent of the House. The modification was offered and was objected to, and then it was offered by way of amendment by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE], he having withdrawn the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was modified by the gentleman from Ohio, on consultation with the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BURROWS], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CATCHINGS], and the Speaker. The unanimous consent, however, will be stricken out. The question is on the approval of the Journal.

The Journal was approved.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend a moment that the House may receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment, bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 172) granting full permission to the State of Maryland and to the several State courts within the city of Baltimore to occupy the old United States court-house in the city of Baltimore for the period of five years.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1515) to amend chapter VI, of title 32, of the Revised Statutes, relating to mineral lands and mining resources, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 160) to fix the price of lands entered under the desert-land laws;

A bill (S. 814) for the relief of the representatives of Daniel C. Rodman, deceased, and others; and

A bill (S. 1852) to provide an American register for the steamer S. Oteri.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] rises to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. According to the rule under which we are operating, does it not require unanimous consent to present a question of personal privilege?

The SPEAKER. It does not. There is nothing in the special rule requiring that the House shall consider the pending bill until after the first morning hour—after the call of committees for report.

Mr. WALKER. My question is this: The records of the reporters having been refused to me, and I having been told that they were refused under the direction of the Speaker, and it having appeared in the debate this morning that a copy of the records has been furnished to other members at their request where the matter was not a matter of controversy between them and other members, my question is whether there is a discrimination made as between the members of this House; in other words, who may and who may not have a copy of the records of the reporters of this House? And if you will allow me, my theory about the matter is——

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. WALKER. My question of privilege is that I have been refused a copy of the records of this House; I have been denied the opportunity to verify my recollection of what transpired in the House by having the reporters furnish me a copy of the records or read to me those records. It appears that the gentleman from Maine did receive a copy of the records of the House about a transaction of the House in regard to which he was in doubt. Now, if one member of this House has a right to that privilege, it seems to me all members of the House have that right. I have been told that the Speaker directed the reporters of the House not to give me a copy of the records of remarks and transactions in the House about which I was in doubt, because I had no right to them, unless it was a matter of personal controversy between me and the member whose remarks I wanted.

Now, it does not appear by anything that has been said this morning that there was a personal controversy between the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman from Tennessee. My point is this—that I have the same right to verify my recollection of remarks that were made here, by access to the records of any transaction on the floor, that the gentleman from Maine has.

Let me say that I do not question the right or the propriety of any gentleman on this floor changing to any extent that his judgment dictates any remarks that he may have made on this floor which, when he sees the record of the Reporters, he decides do not receive his deliberate approval.

But if, on the other hand, any member desires to have, for any reason that commends itself to his judgment, a record of the exact words pronounced on this floor, which are taken down by the public reporters, which as printed are spread broadcast over the country by the newspapers, he has such right; otherwise he may never know whether they are correctly published or not in the RECORD. When he may recite those remarks himself upon the stump before his constituents or anywhere in the country, he may be called to account for stating that which is not true, although he heard them with his own ears. Therefore I contend that each member has a right to obtain from the Reporters, if they are willing to be at the trouble and cost of giving it to him, the record of anything which has been said on the floor of the House. And that right has been denied me. That is my point.

The SPEAKER. It is, of course, a very difficult matter to determine exactly what is the limit of the right of revision.

Mr. WALKER. This is a question of discrimination—whether I am to be discriminated against.

The SPEAKER. It is a very difficult question to determine exactly the extent of the right of a member to revise his remarks for the RECORD. Of course, there is somewhere a limit, and generally all are inclined to be very liberal in allowing the revision of remarks where there is nothing personal added or subtracted. Where there is simply a discussion of economic or other public questions, and no personal reference is made to individuals, the House, so far as the Chair knows, and individual members, have generally been very liberal in their view of this question.

Now, the Chair does not recollect exactly the circumstances incident to the matter referred to by the gentleman from Massachusetts. He can refresh his recollection by inquiry of the Reporters, if necessary. But the case was something like this: A gentleman on the floor had made remarks and withheld them for revision; he took them and revised them; and the revised speech was then published. As the Chair recollects, there was no reference to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] in the remarks——

Mr. WALKER. Will the Chair allow me one word?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. WALKER. No reference whatever.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair thought.

Mr. WALKER. My point is that in quoting those remarks I might be confronted by the remarks as revised and printed, and I might be unjustly charged with stating that which was not true. Therefore I claimed that if I chose of my own motion to put the actual remarks made in the RECORD, I ought to have the right to do so.

Furthermore, as I have before said, I am in favor of the most liberal changing of remarks, even to any extent that a member chooses, if his deliberate and final judgment does not approve of what he has said on the floor: but if any member, in order that he may be certain of his memory, desires to have the original record, the original notes, my point is that he has a right to have them.

The SPEAKER. The point was this—because the Chair does not want to be misunderstood about it—it appeared to be this kind of a case, as the Chair recollects: A gentleman on the floor made certain remarks, withheld them for revision, the notes were sent to him, and he revised them, and perhaps, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, on cool reflection in his room, when he revised his remarks, he left out certain things, not personal in their nature to anybody, and the revised remarks were printed. Then, as the Chair understands it, the gentleman from Massachusetts wanted to get from the Reporter the original remarks, which the gentleman himself had never published, which he had revised and left out, the part omitted reflecting on nobody.

The Reporter came to the Speaker about it, and the Speaker said there was no fixed rule about how far one member had a right to see the original manuscript of another's remarks, except that wherever there was a personal controversy between them, wherever one reflected upon the other, or anything that seemed to point to the right of the member to have an examination of the original, that they ought to be furnished, but where it seemed to be a mere effort to criticize something not personal that a gentleman had spoken and did not want printed the Chair did not think the Reporter should furnish the original. That was all there was of it.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I wish to correct the RECORD. On page 7511, about the middle of the page, appear the following remarks:

Mr. HOLMAN. To save the trouble of offering an amendment to the bill, I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he except from his point of order the first three lines of the second paragraph, which simply make the ordinary appropriation which, of course, has to be made "for the payment of interest on said bonds for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894—1894, not 1895—$78,350."

At the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana I immediately asked unanimous consent to except those three lines from my point of order. It was granted. It does not appear in the RECORD, and I think it ought to.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be corrected

IMMIGRATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, in relation to the importance of the question of determining the movement—passenger and immigrant—from the United States to foreign countries, and inclosing the draft of a bill for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

Senate bills of the following titles were severally laid before the House and referred as indicated, namely:

A bill (S. 115) for the development and encouragement of silk culture in the United States under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture—to the Committee on Agriculture.

A bill (S. 168) granting to the State of Wyoming certain lands in the Fort D. A. Russell military reservation for agricultural fair and industrial exposition grounds, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 207) granting jurisdiction and authority to the Court of Claims in the case of the towboat Future City, her barges, cargoes, etc.—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 217) for the relief of the heirs of James Bridger, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 807) for the relief of Joseph Redfern and Eliza J. Redfern, his wife—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 1717) to authorize the appointment of women as public-school trustees in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

A bill (S. 1957) to increase the pension of Joseph W. Fisher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WASHINGTON until Tuesday, on account of sickness.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I desire to request that my colleague, Mr. BOUTELLE, may have indefinite leave of absence.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection, leave of absence will be granted to the gentleman from Maine as requested.

There was no objection.

ERRONEOUS PRINT, INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask a single moment. On yesterday I made a statement in response to an inquiry in reference to a certain duplication of a part of the Indian appropriation bill, and stated that it was a blunder at the Printing Office. The accomplished Public Printer calls my attention to the fact, and on examination I find it to be true that the blunder was committed in the committee room and not at the Government Printing Office.

I ask that this letter go into the RECORD:

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC PRINTER,
Washington, D. C., June 16, 1894.

DEAR SIR: I observe in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning that you stated in the House of Representatives yesterday, in connection with the discussion of the Indian appropriation bill, in reply to a statement made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. O'NEIL], that there appeared a duplication in the printed bill then under consideration, and that such duplication or error was a "mere blunder of the Printing Office."

I desire to say that the error was not a blunder on the part of this Office, but was an exact print of the copy furnished by your committee; further, your committee had a proof of this copy sent them, and the error was returned to us unnoticed. I think it is due the Public Printing Office that these facts should be made as prominent in the records of Congress as the unjust statements which appear in to-day's issue of the RECORD.

Very respectfully,

TH. E. BENEDICT,
Public Printer.

Hon. WILLIAM S. HOLMAN,
Chairman Committee on Indian Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committees for reports.

The committees were called for reports, none being submitted.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. Under the special rule the House will now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will please resume the chair.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, before that I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. SHERMAN, a member of the committee, desired to submit some remarks on a paragraph of the bill, but was called away suddenly last night. He desires to have leave to print his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, leave will be granted to the gentleman from New York.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. I also, Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, ask the privilege of submitting certain remarks to be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon this provision in the bill which has just been read by the Clerk: The mineral lands shall be disposed of under the laws applicable thereto, and the balance of the lands so ceded shall be disposed of until further provided by law under the town-site law and under the provisions of the homestead law: Provided, however, That each settler, under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead laws shall, at the time of making his original entry, pay the sum of 50 cents per acre in addition to the fees now required by law, and at the time of making final proof shall pay the further sum of $1 per acre, final proof to be made within five years from the date of entry, and three years' actual residence on the land shall be established by such evidence as is now required in homestead proofs as a prerequisite to title or patent.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to understand what the point of order is made against.

Mr. McRAE. Beginning with line 21 after the word "law" on page 136 and down to and including line 9 on page 137.

Mr. HERMANN. Is it not too late now to make that point?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will also reserve the decision on that point of order. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That immediately after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe rules and regulations to procure the ratification by said Indians of the Siletz Reservation to the changes in said agreement, as provided for in this act, and shall without delay, upon the agreement of said Indians to said changes, under such regulations as he may prescribe, open said lands to settlement after sixty days' notice,

Mr. McRAE. I also make the point of order against that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. That also will be reserved for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. That to pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian service and pay of necessary employés; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates, inspection, and all other expenses connected therewith, including telegraphing, $35,000: Provided, That the office for purchasing goods and supplies and the principal depot shall be established at Chicago, and the bids shall be opened there.

The CHAIRMAN. This completes the reading of the bill.

Mr. STRAUS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the point of order against the provision on page 138, beginning with line 1 and ending with line 3, the proviso to section 16. I make the point of order that this is new legislation and that it does not reduce expenditures. It makes it incumbent upon the Secretary of the Interior to establish a warehouse contrary to any previous regulations; consequently it does not retrench expenditures, but on the contrary increases them.

Mr. HARTMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARTMAN. Are amendments now in order under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at present; a point of order is pending, raised by the gentleman from New York. The gentleman will please restate his point of order.

Mr. STRAUS. I raise the point of order on lines 1 to 3 on page 138, beginning with the word "Provided," as being new legislation and not reducing expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report that particular part of the bill to which the gentleman from New York raises the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the office for purchasing goods and supplies and the principal depot shall be established at Chicago, and the bids shall be opened there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to second the demurrer and objection made by my colleague from New York [Mr. STRAUS] to this proviso, on the ground that it has no place in the bill; that it is class legislation; that it is vicious, and does not retrench expenditures. There is no reason why the amendment should be ingrafted on this bill at the present time. Why it was put in originally is a question that is agitating the minds of the people of our section of the country.

I have here a petition, or letter, from the Clothing Manufacturers' Association of the city of New York, which will thoroughly explain the facts and circumstances why the provision should not remain in the bill. I ask that it be read at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, May 28, 1894.

DEAR SIR: We would respectfully call your attention to the following words in the Indian appropriation House bill No. 6913, page 138, lines 1, 2, and 3, viz:

"Provided, That the office for purchasing goods and supplies and the principal depot shall be established at Chicago, and the bids shall be opened there."

This is an attempt to interfere by legislation with the discretion vested in the Secretary of the Interior, to receive bids and purchase supplies in such market as he may deem most advantageous to the public interests.

It is unjust to New York and the East, as a very large proportion of the supplies—dry goods, clothing, hats, caps, groceries, medical supplies, etc.—are produced in New York or territory contiguous thereto, and must be directly or indirectly purchased there, wherever offered; and no bids for these articles have ever been submitted from Western points for the well-known reason that the Eastern prices on them could not be competed with.

The provision would work an injustice to New York, whence these supplies must be obtained, as it would put its merchants to the inconvenience of sending samples and bids to a distant point and of delivery there, where they are not needed, instead of at the point of supply.

It would work an injustice to the Government, which now makes special freight contracts for delivery of these supplies at the agencies; whereas contractors, whether from the East or West, would necessarily have to pay the regular freight rates on articles to be drawn from the East and would, of course, add such freight to the cost of the articles.

The Government would be put to a considerably increased expense in procuring these supplies not only in freight, but also on the added profit to be paid in purchasing from second hands instead of first hands, as heretofore.

There is at present under order of the Secretary of the Interior, dated March 31, 1894, an office and warehouse at Chicago "for receiving samples and for purchasing the goods which experience has shown are furnished at lowest prices in Chicago and the West;" and one in New York "for receiving samples and for purchasing those goods, which experience has shown are furnished at lowest prices at New York and the East."

The present arrangement is an eminently fair one, and has been directed by the honorable Secretary of the Interior after a thorough examination.

It seems clear that such matters should be left for proper disposition to the executive and administrative departments which can act upon them understandingly with a thorough knowledge of all the facts.

We deem the provision quoted vicious in principle, uncalled for, and unfair, and respectfully request that you employ your good offices to have the same eliminated from the bill.

Very respectfully,

THE CLOTHING MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION,
ALBERT F. HOCHSTADTER, President.
SAMUEL FLEISCHMAN, Secretary.

Hon. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the letter which has just been read from the Clothing Manufacturers' Association of New York fully explains why no change should take place, and why the principal warehouse of the Indian Bureau should remain at the city of New York, as they are one of the best authority and one of the most reputable organizations in the State and city of New York.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I present an editorial from the New York Herald, giving further reasons why the Indian supply warehouse should not be removed from its present location.

TRICKERY CONCERNING INDIAN SUPPLIES.

The jobbery in the Indian appropriation bill, by which Commissioner Browning and the Committee on Indian Affairs are seeking to remove the Indian supply warehouse from New York to Chicago, came in for another scoring yesterday in the House, this time at the hands of Representative BARTLETT.

This rider which the committee sought to insert in the bill aroused suspicion that something was wrong from the time it first appeared. That Commissioner Browning and the Indian Affairs Committee should endeavor to override the Secretary of the Interior, who favored the change only so long as he was in ignorance of the character of the jobbery behind it, of itself tends to confirm this suspicion.

Congress is certainly in no temper to tolerate anything which is likely to bring back Indian scandals again, and the news from Washington is to the effect that when the voting on the amendment takes place it will be defeated. There is no honest reason why the Indian supply warehouse should be moved from New York, the natural market for nearly one-half of the supplies purchased, to Chicago, the natural market for less than one-tenth of the supplies, and the argument of economy is in favor of its retention here.

During the discussion on this paragraph last week, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GOLDZIER], in his speech of wit and sarcasm, took occasion to interject my name, and say that I called the people of Chicago "guerrillas." I suppose the remark was made in a Pickwickian sense, as there should be no sectional differences between the East and the West, for New York has always been ready and willing to extend the right hand of fellowship to all parts of the country when the same is needed.

I trust that the Chairman may, with his usual good sense and judgment, see his way clear to decide the point of order made by my associate [Mr. STRAUS] as well taken, and thereby prevent future legislative jealousies between the Eastern and Western States, as such jealousies are detrimental to the interests of all sections of the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I be allowed five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. That can not be done under the order of the House.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask that I be given five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot be done under the rule which the House adopted.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The gentleman voted for that rule, and he is now suffering from the same.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not suffering from anything; and the gentleman can not make me suffer from anything. [Laughter.]

Mr. KIEFER. Mr. Chairman, when this bill first came up the other day New York and Chicago gave a complete and thorough exposition of their relative greatness and importance—and we all agreed that both cities are ably represented on this floor—and I for one am quite sure that the House long since became satisfied that neither of these great rivals for commercial notoriety wanted the World's Columbian Fair—New York refused it and Chicago had it unwillingly thrust upon her—and now both towns are so excessively jealous lest they may appear to want anything from the Government, and especially a little matter like the Indian supply depot, that the champions of both Chicago and New York, as I will show, have inadvertently admitted that if the business principles which they urge are applied to the proper purchase and distribution of Indian supplies, the city of St. Paul is the logical center for the depot, the very center of distribution.

In all the arguments thus far essayed for or against either New York or Chicago, there have been three propositions submitted upon which claim to superiority is made. First. Facilities to obtain supplies and commodities needed and desired. Second. Ability of persons, firms or corporations handling the goods and commodities needed to furnish them at a low price. And third. Transportation facilities, which is the most important point of the entire question after all. On any one, and on all of these propositions, I am prepared to prove that the gentlemen from New York and the gentlemen from Chicago have made effective arguments in favor of St. Paul. I will also show that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the honorable Secretary of the Interior are essentially, though perhaps unconsciously, valuable advocates of the city for which I speak.

ST. PAUL'S ADVANTAGES.

I do not claim that St. Paul produces as many goods, or that it has as large a trade as either of the other cities—that is not the question involved—but I do maintain that St. Paul possesses many advantages over New York and Chicago, which makes it the logical distributing point for the Indian reservations, upon which a greater portion of our Indian population is located, and I propose now briefly to show why. Mr. Commissioner Browning stated the salient point of the entire question when he said in the letter which has been read from the desk, "Whatever difference there might be," meaning in the cost of the goods and supplies purchased, "will be more than offset by the difference in transportation, which is on an average of 30 cents per hundred less from Chicago to the various agencies than from New York."

Now, Mr. Chairman, St. Paul is much nearer more reservations, and more Indian agencies, and to a greater part of the Indians who are supplied by the Government, than Chicago or New York; and I will, before I conclude, produce a table of freight rates taken from transportation contracts with the Government which shows how much of a saving will be effected. Applying Commissioner Browning's figures, that $18,000 can be saved in freight rates between New York and Chicago delivery on 6,000,000 pounds, the same number of pounds shipped from St. Paul would effect a saving of more than $30 000, for the average difference rate from St. Paul to the agencies where deliveries are made is an average of 50 cents a hundred.

Now, the main argument made here on behalf of New York is that that city is the natural base of supplies. To prove this remarkable claim the gentleman from the city that is 1,500 miles further from any big reservation than is St. Paul, say the records show that for many years past 85 per cent of the supplies have been furnished by New York bidders. In answer to this the champions for Chicago have clearly shown that their city is as well equipped and in many instances better than New York York to make bids and deliver the supplies.

The statement has been made and has not been contradicted that Chicago sent out more packages, more pounds of freight, last year than did New York. The gentleman from Chicago [Mr. ALDRICH] presented figures showing that out of 80,000 packages purchased by the Bureau of Indian Supplies in 1893, 60,000 went from Chicago, and the statement has not been questioned, so far as I know.

But, say the gentlemen from New York, if bids can only be opened in Chicago and the West and goods only delivered there, it would necessitate sending a corps of men there by the heretofore successful bidder, for submitting samples as well as for the ultimate delivery of the goods; and as it often happens that some lots of goods are rejected because they are not up to sample, these New York gentlemen would have to take into consideration the reshipping of such goods back to New York and the replacement of them with other satisfactory substitutes. "All the risk and expense," complains Mr. STRAUS, "the New York bidders would have to add to the price of their goods or desist from bidding altogether"—a handsome argument indeed. Now then, Mr. Chairman, that involuntary admission by the gentleman from New York, has lost the battle for him and the cause he represents in this controversy; and I have been wondering, Mr. Chairman, why some of our Chicago friends did not take up that admission.

First, he says that the successful bidders send men out with samples; then admits that Eastern samples are not up to contract requirement; and, third, says that if the depot comes West New York must cease bidding altogether. Ah, Mr. Chairman, that is the very reason why the Western cities have been unable to come boldly to the front. Is the gentleman from New York so selfish that he is not willing to give to other cities the same privileges that he himself asks for New York? I want to say right here, Mr. Chairman, that if this House finally concludes to leave the purchase of supplies and location of a depot open for the next year, and will allow the Department to make comparisons as to where it can do the best for the kind of goods needed, you will not hear of New York in 1895.

In St. Paul the manufacturers make a class of goods especially designed for the West. The sizes of shoes, mittens, socks, caps, outside coats, and, in fact, all wearing apparel, run larger than in goods made in the East. I venture to say that the many great firms engaged in making boots and shoes, clothing, knit and woolen goods, blankets, etc., in and about St Paul will furnish samples that will be filled to the very letter in a contract.

One reason why Eastern bidders have had more contracts on these goods is, I am told, because they are given an opportunity to replace a rejected lot that are not up to sample.

Chicago's chief spokesman on this floor, Mr. ALDRICH, in his very able speech said:

> The nearer the base of supplies is to the consumer, the cheaper the consumer obtains his goods. This is a well-recognized axiom among business men and the first principle of commercial science. There will be ten bidders through this transfer where there is now one. Warehouse facilities, as pointed out by the Commissioner, will be cheaper and better, because located in the greatest railroad center of the country.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is absolutely true, and following that proposition to a legitimate conclusion, I will now cite a few reasons why St. Paul should be selected as the distributing point of Indian supplies.

Take the latest map issued by the Interior Department and enumerate the different Indian reservations in the United States. You will find that the greater number of them lies within a Territory that is tributary to the city of St. Paul, and that St. Paul is the logical distributing center. With three great transcontinental lines of railroads from St. Paul to the coast, and with nine other lines centering at St. Paul, the great Mississippi River and the Great Lakes, the transportation facilities, as shown by the statistics from the Indian Bureau, show plainly that St. Paul is a better shipping point for the Government for its Indian supplies than either New York or Chicago.

Embraced within a territory that is nearer St. Paul than any other city that ranks at all as a commercial center and distributing point there are more reservations, more agencies, and more Indians than in all the other territory combined.

The total Indian population exclusive of the Five Civilized Tribes, as shown by the Commissioner's last report, is 178,866. Of this number, 106,305 occupy the territory which I have mentioned as being nearer to St. Paul than the other cities who are seeking to have the supply depot. In some of the States the Indian population has been consolidated, and former reservations as shown on the maps are now open in some instances to settlement. In other cases, as in my State, the lands are to be sold for the benefit of the various tribes.

Number of reservations and population.

States and Territories.	No. of reservations.	Population.
California	6	12,434
Colorado	1	1,002
Idaho	4	4,185
Iowa	1	389
Kansas	3	1,102
Minnesota	10	6,194
Montana	6	10,722
Nebraska	6	3,863
Nevada	4	1,685
New Mexico	5	9,882
North Dakota	4	7,928
Oregon	5	3,923
South Dakota	5	18,501
Utah	2	1,877
Wisconsin	7	8,177
Wyoming	1	1,724

In addition to the above number, there are, as stated by the Commissioner's report, upward of 2,500 Indians outside of the State of California and Indian Territory that are not under control of an agent. Those in California and the Indian Territory who are not looked after by the agents of the Department are included in the totals given in the above table.

Take the four States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana, and there is an Indian population of 43,345. Add Idaho, Oregon, and Washington, and it makes nearly half of the total of all in the States and Territories mentioned. This territory is strictly in the dominion of St. Paul, and that city has a large trade with every section of the territory mentioned. Moreover, the very articles that are furnished the Indians are produced by manufactures and raised from the soil in the great Northwest.

Minnesota makes more flour than any other State. We have immense stock yards at St. Paul where the beef of Montana and the pork of Minnesota and the Dakotas are packed. The Northwest raises barley and beans. We manufacture a high grade of woolen blankets especially adapted for the use of the Indians. We have some of the largest boot and shoe factories, and St. Paul's wholesale grocers import coffees and teas direct via the Pacific coast, and sell these articles as cheap as New York. Agricultural implements are now made very near to the big reservations of the Northwest. Everything in the way of natural facilities gives that city the advantage.

So much has been said by our friends from New York since the proposed removal of the supply depot concerning freight rates that one might suppose that New York was the only place where transportation contracts could be made for the best advantage to the Government.

But what are the facts? It will not do for New York to claim that it can give a lower freight for a longer distance than either Chicago or St. Paul. The tabulated statement of transportation contracts, as shown on page 774 of the report of Commissioner Browning, shows that the depot should be located at the place that is nearest to the great body of the consumers. I cite only a few rates by way of comparison: From New York to Devils Lake, N. Dak., the rate given per hundred is $1.35; from Chicago, $1.17; from St. Paul, 72 cents—63 cents per hundred in favor of St. Paul.

HOW THOUSANDS CAN BE SAVED.

	New York.	Chicago.	St. Paul.
Fort Berthold, N. Dak	$1.80	$1.80	$0.95
Mandan, N. Dak	1.16	.90	.90
Standing Rock	1.59	1.35	1.17
Chamberlain, S. Dak	1.17	.88	.80
Crow Creek	1.48	1.19	1.08
Browns Valley, Minn	1.09	.94	.54
Pipestone	.92	.73	.55
Detroit	.96	.80	.46
Blackfeet Agency, Mont	2.55	2.41	2.05
Crow Agency	2.65	2.51	2.10
Rosebud	1.88	1.76	1.46

These are mere instances chosen at random from the report of the Commissioner. But it proves that St. Paul, as a distributing point, has advantages in freight facilities that other cities can not have. The Northern Pacific and Great Northern systems terminate in St. Paul running from the coast. Shipments made on these lines do not become subject to any charges by traffic agreements with other lines.

In answer to a request from the superintendent of the Union Depot Company at St. Paul, Mr. C. B. Brunson, secretary of that company, answers as follows:

There are at this time about one hundred and thirty passenger trains in and out of the city and about one hundred freight trains daily.

There are ten great railroad systems centering in St. Paul, viz; The Northwestern, known as the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha; Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, with several divisions radiating from this great center; the Burlington line, the Chicago, Great Western; the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific, of which the Minneapolis and St. Louis is a division; the Wisconsin Central, St. Paul and Duluth; the Great Northern Transcontinental system; the Northern Pacific Transcontinental route, and Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault St. Marie.

With the divisions and with the smaller lines absorbed the total number of lines radiating from St. Paul are twenty, representing a mileage of 42,308 miles. In the lake season boats come up the Mississippi to St. Paul, and we are enabled to get a lake and rail-route rate that is more favorable for the purposes desired than any other city.

Within a radius of 20 miles from St. Paul there is made annually from good No. 1 hard 10,000,000 barrels of flour—more than is produced at any other point in the world. This brings us on an average of $45,000,000. We have immense packing houses, and the business done last year was $5,775,000. In the manufacture of boots and shoes we did last year $11,690,000. In groceries $24,500,000. Fruits, produce, fish, etc., $9,893,000. Paints, oils, varnishes, etc., $1,540,000. Dry goods and notions, $15,000,000. Harness, leather, and leather manufactures, $2,000,000.

We manufacture blankets of every quality, and the "North Star" woolen mills, at Minneapolis, turns out as good an article of this kind as there is manufactured in the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of this committee, let me ask in all candor, what does the Indian receive from his Great Father? The main articles are: Beef, on the hoof; beef, in barrels; pork, smoked and salted; flour, in barrels and sacks; rice, in packages; beans, in sacks; sugar, in barrels; tea, in boxes; coffee, in packages; blankets, clothing, shoes, agricultural implements, etc. These are the main articles the Government furnishes the Indians.

Mr. Chairman, where are all these articles produced? Beef cattle are raised upon the broad fields of the great Northwest, and not in New York. Pork is raised in Minnesota, Iowa, and the Dakotas, and not in New York to any extent. Flour is made in Minnesota more than in any other State. Rice is grown on the Lower Mississippi River lands, which admits of the cheapest river freight to St. Paul. Beans are raised in Minnesota. Sugar is produced on the Lower Mississippi River lands, and is laid down at St. Paul under a much lower freight than it can be laid down at either New York or Chicago. Tea and coffee is placed at St. Paul at a rate as low as in any city in this country. Enterprising wholesale merchants at St. Paul are buying their tea and coffee directly at the plantations where it is produced. Coming as these articles do, via the Pacific Ocean and through rail to St. Paul, purchase and freight are largely in favor of my city.

Blankets are made within 10 miles of St. Paul at Minneapolis.

Clothing and boots and shoes are made by the millions of dollars worth per annum in that great metropolis that I have the honor to represent upon this floor.

Agricultural implements: St. Paul has one of the greatest plants in America—the noted Walter A. Wood harvester works. The work of this firm goes all over the great Northwest, in which territory New York does not sell a plow.

It is for these reasons that I, as the representative of 200,000 people, ask that this supply depot, if located permanently at all, be placed at St. Paul. And if you see fit to leave the matter open for the next year, and if the Department will make a special effort to ascertain where all supplies can best be laid down, I will be satisfied. All St. Paul asks is a fair field and no favor.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the time of Mr. KIEFER expired.

Mr. PICKLER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on the point of order is exhausted.

Mr. KIEFER. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule adopted by the House that motion can not be entertained.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Minnesota may be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have a decision on the point of order.

Mr. KIEFER. I now move——

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending, and an amendment can not be offered at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I admit, Mr. Chairman, that this provision does not upon its face retrench expenditures; but as a matter of fact it does, as a reduction of $28,000 has been made by the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs from the appropriations in the bill on account of this provision, $18,000 of the amount being for transportation and $10,000 for the warehouse, which amounts would be saved to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the point of order is exhausted. The gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the committee, admits that this provision on its face does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it does so in fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not go beyond the face of the provision. On its face it does not; it is unquestionably new legislation; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the committee, that there were several things passed over and that it would be well to go back and dispose of them.

Mr. HOLMAN. To go back to whatever was passed on points of order I think will be entirely proper; but otherwise I ask permission to submit the amendments which the committee recommend.

The CHAIRMAN. On page 44, at the end of line 8, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. DOOLITTLE] offered an amendment to the bill, against which the chairman of the committee or some other member of the committee reserved a point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not remember what that amendment was.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 8, page 44, add the following:

"Provided, That all lands heretofore constituting a part of the Puyallup Indian Reservation, situate near the city of Tacoma, Pierce County, State of Washington, now held in severalty by the Puyallup Indians, patents to which have heretofore been issued by the United States to said Indians, said patents containing certain restrictions upon the sale and conveyance of said lands, are hereby declared to be the property and estate of each of said allottees or their heirs in fee simple, free and clear of each and every restriction as to the sale, conveyance, or other disposition of the same heretofore imposed by the Government of the United States: Provided, however, That no sale of said lands shall be valid until the parties shall appear before the United States district judge of the district in which said lands are situate, and thereupon submit to him all the terms and conditions of such proposed sale for his approval, and if approved by such judge he shall indorse his approval on the contract or other instrument evidencing such sale; thereupon such sale may be executed and completed in accordance with the terms and conditions so approved by said judge."

Mr. HOLMAN. I simply reserve the point of order until the gentleman is heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I observe that inadvertently King County was not inserted in the amendment. Now, I desire to have the words King County inserted after the words Pierce County.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can so modify his amendment. It will be so modified by the Clerk.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is an exceedingly important provision, involving a very important effect; but inasmuch as it does not come within the rule, and does not retrench expenditures, I will have to insist upon the point of order.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the ground of objection in this point of order is that it does not decrease the appropriation.

That I believe is the case. Now, Mr. Chairman, in presenting my side of this contention I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the statute which provided for a commission. I suppose that the chairman of this committee will take judicial notice of the law which this amendment, if it be adopted, will modify, and for the information of the Chair I will read a portion of the statute I refer to:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized, immediately after the passage of this act, to appoint a commission of three persons, not more than one of whom shall be a resident of any one State, and it shall be the duty of said commission to select and appraise such portions of the allotted lands as are not required for homes for the Indian allottees, and also that part of the agency tract, exclusive of the burying ground, not needed for school purposes, in the Puyallup Reservation in the State of Washington. And, if the Secretary of the Interior shall approve the selections and appraisements made by said Commission, the allotted lands so selected shall be sold for the benefit of the allottees, and the agency tract for the benefit of all the Indians, after due notice at public auction, at not less than the appraised value for cash, or one-third cash, and the remainder on such time as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, to be secured by vendor's lien on the property sold.

This amendment relates solely to the allotted lands of the Puyallups, and not at all to the reservations or the school lands proper.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman himself says that this is a modification of existing law. Therefore it is new legislation.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. The point is not made that it is new legislation. The point of order is based entirely on the other ground, and is so presented to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair only heard the gentleman from Indiana state that he insisted on this point of order against the amendment. So far the Chair has been unable to hear what the grounds are.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. But if it please the Chair, the grounds were stated, and the point or order was not made upon the proposition that this is new legislation, but solely on the ground I have stated.

But, as I have said, this amendment relates only to the allotted lands. Now, on page 634 of the Statutes at Large, Fifty-second Congress, I find this:

And the sum of $30,000, or so much hereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purpose of paying the expenses of said commission, to be reimbursed to the United States out of the proceeds of the sale of that portion of the agency tract, to be immediately available.

That, of course, relates to the allotted lands. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment shall become a law the necessity for any further work upon these allotted lands will have been done away with entirely; so that the passage of this amendment will decrease the expenditures of the Government as contemplated by this law, and the amendment is in the way of decreasing expenditures rather than of increasing them, as I have attempted to show by the reading of this statute. It seems to me there can be no question, then, as to this amendment being in order and not being subject to the point of order that has been raised by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair has any doubt upon this question, I desire to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has no doubt about this being new legislation. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. One moment, Mr. Chairman. Our ten minutes have not been exhausted, have they?

The CHAIRMAN. Only five minutes have been used.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I yield the balance of the time to my colleague.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I do not desire to convince a man against his will, and if the Chair has already made up his mind that this is new legislation——

The CHAIRMAN. It is admitted to be so by the gentleman himself [Mr. DOOLITTLE].

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Well, I do not want to argue that point now, but I wish to call the attention of the Chair and of the House to the fact that year after year when we have come into the House with an Indian appropriation bill, there has been a great hue and cry about the expenditures contained in the bill and about the amount appropriated. Every time that we discuss the bill we seek in some manner to do those things that will ultimately result in decreasing the expenditures for Indian affairs.

I called the attention of the House to four or five cases the other day, three of them in my own State. Now, if you will permit these Indians to sell their lands at what they are worth, subject to the control of the United States court, sufficient money will be obtained to support the Indians for all time, and it will not be necessary to make any further appropriations for an Indian agent, or for the schools at that agency, because the section of land which is owned by the tribe as a whole and which has not been allotted will sell for money enough to swell the school fund that is already provided for by law so that it will educate them for all time to come. This amendment, therefore, does tend to decrease expenditures; and the only way that you can ever succeed in reducing the expenditures of the Indian Department is by gradually cutting off the Indian agencies wherever it is possible, and decreasing your expenses in that way. I might add that you can also make a saving by removing this warehouse farther West. You can save $27,000 or $30,000 in that way.

After this agency has been out at Chicago a little while, if gentlemen can not agree about retaining it there, we will take it out to Spokane; and that word means in the Indian language "Take everything in sight," and we are trying to do it. [Laughter.]

Does this amendment decrease expenditures? How, I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], under the policy that you have sought to inaugurate, are you going to stop appropriating money for Indian agencies unless you permit the Indians to sell their lands where they are valuable and put that money into a fund to take care of them and educate them—their own money, not the people's money?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will remember that he got an act passed on this subject in the last Congress covering the same ground.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I know an act was passed by the last Congress; but the Indians say in reference to that act, "It is none of your business; we will not sell our lands that way; we have acquired them by treaty, and we want to dispose of them ourselves, and take our own money to provide for our own comfort and happiness." They are educated. They own probably as valuable a body of land as can be found anywhere in the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. You provided by that act, I believe, that the money should go into the Treasury, and the Indians should be paid the interest on that money.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was that a safe measure?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I think so. I can not go back on that. I was constrained by the gentleman from Indiana to accept that as the very best I could get. [Laughter.] I wanted to go farther; but the gentleman from Indiana said, "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther."

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Does not the gentleman from Washington know this to be true—that this Government has been engaged for the last fifty years or more in the attempt to educate the Indians, to make men of them capable of transacting their own business; and does he not know further that these people, the Puyallups, holding these allotted lands are educated, capable of transacting their business; and can he tell me why, under the policy of this Congress, we find the Government of the United States holding on to those men with a stronger grip than it would hold on to blanket Indians, uneducated and uncivilized? Why will not this Government allow those men to go free?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I can not answer the gentleman, because my time has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will now read the next amendment pending, which was offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. HULL. At the time the House adjourned on the day preceding the adoption of the special rule, we were considering an amendment on page 51.

The CHAIRMAN. That is still pending.

Mr. HULL. But for the existence of the rule, that amendment would have come up the first thing the next morning, when the consideration of the bill was resumed.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is still pending. The Chair is taking up the amendments as they come.

Mr. BURROWS. The points of order are now being disposed of, as I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. Points of order were reserved against these amendments. At the same time the gentleman from Washington offered his amendment to the first paragraph on page 44, the gentleman from Indiana offered an amendment on behalf of the committee. Both amendments were allowed to go over. The Clerk will now report the latter amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 44, after the word "agencies," in line 6, strike out "$14,000;" and in line 7, after the word "employés," strike out "two" and insert "sixteen thousand;" also, in line 7 strike out the words "in all $16,000."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] to page 48, upon which a point of order was reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 23, page 48, the following:

"Provided, That paragraph 4 of section 10 of 'An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for fiscal year ending June 30, 1894,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"And the provisions of said agreement so amended shall be fully performed and carried out on the part of the United States: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be immediately available, and the remaining sum of $8,300,000, or so much thereof as is required to carry out the provisions of said agreement as amended and according to this act, to be payable at the pleasure of the United States, in one or more payments, after the 4th day of March, 1900, said deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, to be paid semiannually, and the amount required for the payment of interest as aforesaid is hereby appropriated: And provided further, That of the money hereby contracted to be paid, a sufficient amount to pay the Delawares and Shawnees their pro rata share in the proceeds of said Outlet shall remain in the Treasury of the United States until the status of said Delaware and Shawnee Indians shall be determined by the courts of the United States before which their suits are now pending; and a sufficient amount shall also be retained in the Treasury to pay the freedmen who are citizens of the Cherokee Nation, or their legal heirs and representatives, such sums as may be determined by the courts of the United States to be due them. Nor shall anything herein be held to abridge or deny to said freedmen any rights to which they may be entitled under existing laws or treaties. The acceptance by the Cherokee Nation of Indians of any of the money appropriated as herein set forth shall be considered and taken and shall operate as a ratification by said Cherokee Nation of Indians of said agreement, as it is hereby proposed to be amended, and as a full and complete relinquishment and extinguishment of all their title, claim, and interest in and to said lands; but such relinquishment and extinguishment shall not inure to the benefit of any railroad company, nor vest in any railroad company any right, title, or interest in or to any of said lands: Provided, That said railroad shall be relieved from any further payments of compensation to said Cherokee Nation as required by law for running said railroad across said Cherokee Outlet: Provided further, That the extension of the time of payment, as above provided for, shall only become binding on the Cherokee Nation, or its assigns, or on either of them, after the same shall have been accepted for the amounts of indebtedness which they hold respectively, and notice in writing of such acceptance duly filed with the Secretary of the Department of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. On this amendment a point of order was reserved. Is the point of order pressed?

Mr. WILSON of Washington and Mr. HUDSON. We insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made against this provision, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Alabama on the point if he wishes to be heard.

Mr. WHEELER of Alabama. The principle involved in the point of order upon this amendment having been so recently decided by the Chair, I do not think it would be proper for me to consume any portion of the very limited time left for the consideration of other amendments, particularly as the Chair fully considered the question on Thursday and now has my argument before him.

Mr. BURROWS. Let us have a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Before that, Mr. Chairman, I had an understanding with the gentleman from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that a certain item, which had been overlooked, increasing the appropriation from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars, as agreed on by the committee, for the allotment of lands in severalty would be presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that after the pending amendments are disposed of the Chair will recognize the committee for other amendments.

The Clerk will report the next pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 51, in line 15, strike out the following words: "At St. Boniface's Industrial School."

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized to address the committee on that amendment.

I desire, first, to send to the desk the following resolution which I have prepared and wish to have read, prefacing it with the statement before it is read that if I am recognized, or the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GEAR] is recognized, as he gave notice he would desire to be, at the proper time I shall move to recommit this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs with the instructions contained in the resolution which I now ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 6913) "making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith, amended as follows: "Striking out all of the bill relating to Indian schools beginning with line 6, on page 50, and all of pages 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58," and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"For support of Government Indian day and industrial schools and the erection and repair of Government school buildings on Indian reservations and at places where the Government has established and is now maintaining Government Indian schools, and for each and every purpose necessary in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior for the establishment and proper conduct of such schools, $2,250,000: Provided, That pending the establishment of such schools on Indian reservations, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, during the fiscal year 1895, authorize contracts to be made with established schools not conducted by the Government for the education and support of Indian pupils and to pay therefor from this appropriation; and the Secretary of the Interior shall report to the first regular session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, in detail, all expenditures made and authorized by him under this appropriation; Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the sending of Indian children, at no expense to the United States, to schools not conducted by the Government."

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve the question of order on that proposition.

Mr. BURROWS. Oh, it is not offered now.

The CHAIRMAN. It is only read for information.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I have given notice of the reason why I desired to have the resolution read. I wish now to submit a brief explanation in support of it.

I want to say to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that the census of the United States for 1890 shows the Indian population to be 247,498; of these Indians there reside on reservations situated in twenty States and Territories, 133,417; of these Indians on reservations 34,785 are supported, in whole or part, by the Government, having rations issued to them; while 98,785 on the reservations are self-supporting. There are 58,806 Indians off the reservations who are taxed or taxable, self-supporting, and most of them are citizens of the United States and voters. There are, in addition, the five civilized tribes in the Indian Territory, in number 49,392 (the richest population in the world in agricultural lands). Add to these the Six Nations of New York, 5,309 in number, and you have, total Indians not supported by the United States, 212,139, as against 34,785 that are supported by the United States.

The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, page 7, for 1893, gives the enrollment of children at Indian schools for that year at 21,138, and the average attendance at 16,333. Of these children 11,229 were in Government schools (training, boarding, and day), 160 in local public schools; 4,916 were in contract schools, not controlled by the Government, but the tuition and subsistence of the children was paid by the Government. Some of these schools were under Protestant control, most of them were under Catholic control. Twenty-eight of these children were in mission schools, not assisted by the Government. I will state further that of these children in contract schools 3,430 were in boarding schools, 1,111 were in boarding schools specially appropriated for, and 342 in contract day schools.

Mr. Chairman, the appropriations by the Government for education of Indian children began in the year 1877, for which year the appropriation was $20,000, and the average attendance of children in schools was 3,508. These appropriations have increased every year until now for the year 1893 the appropriation by the Government for this purpose was $2,315,612, and the average number of children in attendance 16,333. On page 19 of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is a statement of the various amounts of public money set apart for various religious bodies for Indian education for each of the fiscal years 1887 to 1894, inclusive, from which it appears that $502,635 was so set apart for the year 1894.

Mr. Chairman, from all of which it appears that over two-thirds of these children are being educated in schools exclusively under Government control and less than one-third of them, in round numbers 5,000, in contract schools not under control of the Government, but substantially under control of the various religious bodies, but all at the expense of the Government.

Now, having hastily outlined the situation, I have to say this proposition that I have read briefly would do this: For the coming year it would increase the appropriation for schools over the amount recommended by the committee in this bill a quarter of a million of dollars, and $100,000 over the estimate; the object being, if it should be adopted, that the Secretary of the Interior, in the exercise of a wise discretion, shall prepare Government schools on the reservations for the education of these children that are being instructed in contract schools.

Pending the construction of such public schoolhouses, as there are nearly 5,000 children in the contract schools, it gives the Secretary of the Interior the exercise of a wise discretion, not to turn them out without any school, but to use the appropriation, so far as necessary, to put these children in established schools, giving him plenary power in the premises, and he is required to report his expenditure of this money to the first session of the next Congress.

Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly evident that for fifty years to come or more, the public sentiment is such that as these Indians get ready for citizenship the Government will pay for the education of most of them. We have passed beyond the experimental stage with them. In my judgment the time has come to enter vigorously upon the policy that all expenditures of public moneys for the education of these, the nation's wards, shall be in Government schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Just one moment more, Mr. Chairman.

One other remark. The last proviso in the resolution provides that any Indian child may be sent to any private or religious school, but not at the expense of the Government. This is broad and liberal ground, on which we can all stand, and in my judgment will meet the approval of the intelligent, liberal members of all churches and of no church.

That is all I desired to say. [Applause.]

[Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. See Appendix.]

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that I hope the bill will be recommitted for the purpose of securing the consideration of this proposition; and it is in the power of this House, by the adoption of a rule, to consider that amendment, which will not unnecessarily cut off debate, as that rule adopted yesterday.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will have to be reported back instantly.

Mr. BURROWS. Not necessarily. There is plenty of time.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The Speaker and the majority of this House have the power, if they will exercise it, to consider it at this session.

Mr. TRACEY. We do not want it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ah; the gentleman from New York says he does not want it. Then his ears are dead to my proposition.

Mr. TRACEY. At this session.

Mr. PICKLER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. If I had the time I would.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. PICKLER. You propose to strike out from page 50 to 58 inclusive.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. PICKLER. Now, I want to inquire why you strike out the Government schools? There are several purely Government schools you strike out. How is that?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It provides for every Government school in existence.

Mr. PICKLER. It does not in detail.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. While it may not in detail, it does in the lump.

Mr. PICKLER. I have two such schools in my State, the Flandrau and Pierre schools.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It provides for schools of that kind.

Mr. PICKLER. But I want it to provide for them in terms.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It can be. The gentleman can trust, of course, to the general provision.

Mr. PICKLER. I do not propose to do that.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Very well; then the gentleman can vote against it.

Mr. PICKLER. I would like to support the proposition, and it would not hurt your proposition to put these schools in, as we have provided for education there.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It would be the duty of the Commissioner, if this proposition were adopted, to utilize every Government school to its full capacity, and then to go on and build other schools on the reservation—day, industrial, and board—and to take care of the children in these schools.

Mr. PICKLER. That is all right; but after we have provided for certain schools in the bill I want that provision in your proposition.

Mr. BURROWS. Then you would have to mention in detail every one of them.

Mr. PICKLER. There are only two or three of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. COFFEEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire not to make a speech, but to enter my own indorsement of the motion made, and hope the committee will accept the situation and go at once to it. It is the proper thing. Almost all the Western men have favored it. Because they see the way that the minds of the people are inclined, I hope the committee will take this up and will be willing to work a little while longer on it. It would make the education of the Indian children depend on schools on the reservations as far as possible.

Mr. PICKLER. We have already provided in this bill that these children can not be taken more than 40 miles from their homes without the parent's consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have made great progress as to the reservation schools in this bill. This is the most progressive measure of the kind we have ever passed by Congress. We have taken a long step in that direction, the gentleman will see.

Mr. COFFEEN. So far so good.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, which the Clerk will report again.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Would it be in order to move this amendment by way of amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois knows it certainly would not.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I was not sure whether it would be in order under the special order. I know it would not be in order under the general rules of the House.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HULL. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 57.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now turn to page 94, line 15.

Mr. POST. Can I offer an amendment to the next section?

The CHAIRMAN. Not now.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand that no amendment can be offered to any part of the bill preceding page 90?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until the unfinished business has been disposed of.

The Clerk read as follows:

Second. That the lands by said agreement ceded to the United States shall, upon proclamation by the President, be opened to settlement, and shall be subject to disposal only under the homestead and town-site laws of the United States (except section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, which shall not apply), excepting the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections in each Congressional township, which shall be reserved for common school purposes and be subject to the laws of the State of South Dakota: Provided, That each settler on said lands shall, before making final proof and receiving a certificate of entry, pay to the United States, for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $3.75 per acre, one-half of which shall be paid within three years from the date of his original entry; but the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, shall not be abridged except as to the sum to be paid as aforesaid: Provided, however, That each settler shall be limited to 80 acres in amount, but after the expiration of six months from the opening of said lands to settlement, may take an additional 80 acres from any of the lands of said tract then subject to entry: And provided further, That after three years' actual and continuous residence upon said land from date of settlement, the settler shall, upon full payment of $3.75 per acre, receive patent for the tract entered: Provided, That settlement shall be made under this act within thirty days from date of filing on land.

And provided further, That sections 16 and 36 of the lands ceded and relinquished by said agreement are hereby confirmed to the State of Oregon for the support of the common schools of said State under the limitations prescribed by law; the mineral lands shall be disposed of under the laws applicable thereto, and the balance of the lands so ceded shall be disposed of until further provided by law under the town-site law and under the provisions of the homestead law: Provided, however, That each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead laws shall, at the time of making his original entry, pay the sum of 50 cents per acre in addition to the fees now required by law, and at the time of making final proof shall pay the further sum of $1 per acre, final proof to be made within five years from the date of entry, and three years' actual residence on the land shall be established by such evidence as is now required in homestead proofs as a prerequisite to title or patent.

The CHAIRMAN. On this the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE] makes the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. The point of order applies to what has been read on pages 94 and 95, and to all of the paragraph on pages 136 and 137, beginning with the words "the mineral lands," in line 21, page 136, down to and including the word "patent," in line 9, page 137, and also to the lines from 14 to 20, inclusive, on page 137.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Arkansas did not make his point of order until after the Clerk had proceeded to read the last line on page 136, and about six lines beyond. His point of order, as I understand, applies to all after the words "provided, however," on line 25, page 136.

Mr. McRAE. No, sir; the point of order applies beginning at the word "law," on line 21, page 136.

Mr. HERMANN. Then I make the point that the gentleman did not make his point of order until after the Clerk had passed that point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the proper time to make the point of order, after the paragraph was read.

Mr. HERMANN. But the Clerk had read six lines beyond that particular paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman's point of order is in time.

Mr. McRAE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will repeat what I have already said, that these provisions will change the manner of disposing of the lands treated for, and are therefore new legislation. This kind of legislation does not belong on an appropriation bill. So far as I am personally concerned, I wish these and all other treaties could be ratified, but when the Committee on Indian Affairs undertakes to change the public-land laws simply because we have ratified an agreement with an Indian tribe, I think it exceeds its jurisdiction. These provisions change the public-land laws in several particulars. They allow in some cases only 80 acres of land where the general law allows 160 acres, and in other cases they allow people who have no right to the benefit of the homestead law to take the benefit of it. They allow persons who have taken the benefit of the law and who have sold the land to speculators to enter under this act. They suspend the operation of some of the laws by making them inoperative here, and in many other important respects they change the public-land laws as to these reservations.

Now, I maintain that we should ratify these treaties, but that these provisions should go out, and instead of them we should, if necessary, enact a general provision for the disposal of the lands acquired by this act, or that may be acquired hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman claims that the provisions in this section interfere with the laws in relation to public lands now on the statute books. Are those lands, before the treaty is confirmed, subject to the laws of the United States?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly not until the treaty is confirmed; but these provisions change the methods of disposing of the lands that will become a part of the public domain under these agreements and set up in every reservation a different system of land laws, a system under which, in Oklahoma, in the Outlet, and on other reservations, we have had the most outrageous scandals and frauds upon the honest settlers that have ever disgraced our Government. Now, in the face of the experience we have had, I feel it my duty to make the point and to warn this committee that there are in the bill provisions which will allow a repetition of those outrages. I will not quietly consent for the land laws of this country to be so changed as to make it possible for those outrages to be repeated. I want these reservations opened, but I want them opened in an orderly way under the existing public-land laws, or under some system adapted to the end in view, and I insist that we ought not to change existing laws in this way on an appropriation bill.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, the different propositions contained in this bill for disposing of the surplus lands on the several reservations are numerous, but in each instance they are conformed to the circumstances of the case as nearly as possible. I contend that this point of order is not well taken, because the lands to which these provisions apply are not now public lands of the United States. The Government has no interest in them, and it will have no interest in them until it acquires such interest by the ratification of each of the treaties separately. When that is done and the Government acquires these additional lands it has a perfect right to prescribe the methods by which they shall be disposed of.

Mr. McRAE. But are the treaties themselves germane to an appropriation bill?

Mr. LYNCH. Entirely so.

Mr. PICKLER. Positively so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late to make that point now.

Mr. LYNCH. The Government obtains these lands at different prices in different cases. By some of the treaties the lands cost 75 cents or 80 cents or $1 an acre; and in one case, that of the Yankton Reservation, the Government pays $3.50 an acre, so that it would have to sell that land for $3.75 in order to come out even. These cases, therefore, can not all be provided for by any general uniform law.

Mr. McRAE. I think they can be. I think I have an amendment which will cover the whole matter, and could be adopted, I think, at this time.

Mr. LYNCH. I have read the gentleman's bill and I wish it could be passed, but it is too important a matter to be considered and disposed of in the short time now at our command. If the gentleman can pass that bill, it can be so modified as to include these cases, because its passage will be subsequent to this. These different methods of disposing of these surplus lands are absolutely necessary. In regard to the Yankton Reservation the committee were of the opinion that as the price of those lands was $3.75 an acre, $1.60 an acre would come too high for a poor man to buy, and therefore we concluded to reduce the amount which one man could enter there to 80 acres. Each reservation was taken up on its own merits, and disposed of on its own merits, it being impossible to make any general rule or law applicable to all these cases. I contend that as the Government does not own the land now, it has a perfect right to acquire that land and dispose of it upon any terms that it may deem fit, regardless of existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me suggest to my friend that these contracts are made in pursuance of law; and this proposition simply carries the agreements into effect.

Mr. LYNCH. That is all. The Government finds itself the owner of those surplus lands, and must dispose of them. They are of no account while they remain in the possession of the Government. It seems to me that it is simply acting in furtherance of their acquisition to adopt limitations or restrictions in regard to their sale, and to dispose of them as may be deemed proper; and this I submit is not a change of existing law.

Mr. McRAE. It is new legislation; that is the point.

Mr. LYNCH. Well, everything is new legislation in one sense.

Mr. HOLMAN. The purpose is to carry out existing law.

Mr. LYNCH. Contracts are made according to law. The treaty is referred to Congress according to law——

Mr. TERRY. Allow me to ask this question: As soon as these lands were purchased under this treaty, did they not become a part of the public domain of the United States?

Mr. LYNCH. Not necessarily.

Mr. PICKLER. No; they are to be sold at $3.75 an acre——

Mr. TERRY. Did not the United States purchase the land?

Mr. PICKLER. If they were public lands, under the homestead law they would have to be granted to homestead settlers for nothing.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PICKLER. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order made by the gentleman from Arkansas is clearly not well taken. We do not by this provision change one word or syllable of the public land laws of the United States. I ask the attention of the Chair to that proposition. We simply provide in this bill how these 168,000 acres of land acquired from the Indians shall be disposed of. It is impossible to dispose of this land under the public land laws of the United States. Why? Because under those laws every homesteader is allowed to take 160 acres, and, after five years' residence thereon, to acquire title. Now, in this case that is impossible. We acquire these lands at $3.50 an acre, and dispose of them to settlers at $3.75 an acre. So that the public land laws of the United States will not and can not govern this case.

Wherever there is an acre of public land subject to the public land laws of the United States we do not interfere with it or affect it in any particular. We simply carry out the agreements as modified by Congress. The point made against this proposition is not applicable. We are not attacking the land laws of the United States; we are not proposing to vary in any way these laws as applicable to any portion of the public domain.

One other point, Mr. Chairman. We are not here by sufferance. In the Forty-seventh Congress Mr. Kasson, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, held squarely upon a point raised by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]—and I may say that as a parliamentarian Mr. Kasson has had few superiors in this House—that the ratification of a treaty where a commission had been appointed, and its action came before Congress for ratification, was in pursuance of a "public work," and was therefore proper on an appropriation bill.

Now, if the ratification of a treaty is proper on an Indian appropriation bill, then whatever is necessary to carry out such an agreement is proper and in order. We are inevitably forced to that conclusion. If the treaty covered by this section is in order, as it is, and would have been under this decision even if a point of order had been made against it—then whatever is necessary to carry out that treaty must necessarily be in order.

But, Mr. Chairman, my other proposition is too clear for argument. We do not interfere with the public land laws of the United States. We propose to take the only course possible to dispose of these lands; and the proposition affects no land but that which has been acquired under the conditions I have stated.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this point of order applies to the provision pertaining to the allotment of lands to Indians in my State, the point is in some respects different from that which relates to the Dakota reservation.

Now, in the first place, I ask the consideration of the Chair to this fact—these are not public lands of the United States. They are lands belonging to the Indian reservations and to certain bands of Indians. They do not become lands of the United States at all until after the ratification of the treaty made with the Indians. Then and only then do they become subject to our land laws.

Now, as to the point made by the gentleman that this is new legislation, I desire to make the distinct proposition that this is in accordance with existing law, and that therefore it is pursuant to regulations already provided and strictly in accordance with such regulations. In order to convince the Chair of that fact I ask his kind attention to the act approved February 8, 1887, the law providing for the allotment of lands in severalty among the Indian tribes, in which will be found this provision:

> All lands adapted to agriculture, with or without irrigation, so sold or released to the United States by any Indian tribe, shall be held by the United States for the sole purpose of securing homes to actual settlers, and shall be disposed of by the United States to actual and bona fide settlers only, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, on such terms as Congress shall prescribe.

In reference to this proviso as to the Oregon Indians there is no minimum fixed for the sale of the lands. The maximum limit prescribed by the homestead law is followed, 160 acres; but as to payments, terms, and conditions, they are prescribed in this particular bill, and that authority is given by the general act of Congress providing for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Indians. So, Mr. Chairman, all of the precedents are in line with existing law and not in contravention of it, and it occurs to me that the point of order the gentleman makes is not tenable.

Now, to show again the effect of it, it is provided here that $142,000 shall be paid to these Indians for a large body of land; that $42,000 shall come by way of appropriation; that $10,000 shall be appropriated by the bill, and $32,000 shall come from the sale of the lands; that in order to economize, the settlers shall pay $1.50 an acre for the homestead land, and that they shall have have 160 acres of land and shall be required to reside on them according to the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States.

The Chair will perceive, therefore, that there is nothing here in contravention of the existing law. It is pursuant to the well-known provisions of law regulating the homestead lands of the United States and is in strict accordance with the language of the provision of the general law which I have read, which provides that Congress may regulate the terms and conditions on which the land may be sold to the settlers after the lands are segregated from the rest of the Indian lands and become excess lands and subject to disposal by the Government.

But the first fact that I desire to impress upon the Chair is that they are not public lands of the United States; they are not governed by any of the public land laws until they become segregated from the Indian lands and become in fact a part of our public domain.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order submitted by my colleague, Mr. MCRAE, is very well taken. It seems to me, sir, very clear that the provisions contained in the bill are not germane to the treaty proposed to be ratified. A modification or a change to be germane to a contract or an agreement is one that in some way or other naturally affects the rights of both parties to the contract.

Now, the question as to how the United States shall dispose of these lands after she has acquired them is a matter with which the Indians have no concern whatever, and therefore it shows very plainly that it is not germane to a question of contract.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman permit me a moment? As to the Indians not being concerned in the transaction, it is just the reverse. They can not obtain payment, according to the treaty, unless the funds are derived according to the provisions objected to by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. That is not in the treaty.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, yes it is.

Mr. TERRY. You are putting it in here.

Mr. PICKLER. It is a modification.

Mr. TERRY. Of course, but the terms of the treaty provide that Congress should ratify or confirm the treaty terms and conditions, not as to how the lands should be disposed of, but how they should be purchased.

Mr. PICKLER. In the point of order against my bill, it is provided in section 8 that very thing.

But another question, if the gentleman will permit me. Does not the gentleman know that there has never been a treaty ratified by Congress in all these years, but the bill for the disposition of the land followed directly the treaty? It is universal.

Mr. TERRY. That may be, but it has nothing to do with the point of order.

Mr. PICKLER. And this bill was prepared by the Indian Bureau in accordance with the precedent. It is their bill.

Mr. TERRY. Very well; I have endeavored to answer the gentleman's question.

Now, as I say, the original act provided for a commission which was sent to negotiate the purchase of this land.

They have submitted a treaty, which has been signed by these Indians. If we wish to modify the terms of that treaty as to paying more or less for the land, or as to when the payment shall be made, etc., that is all germane; but to bring forward legislation as to what the United States shall do with the lands after they have purchased them is not germane to the proposition of purchasing them.

Mr. HERMANN. Will the gentleman indulge me again—and this is a very vital point? I ask the gentleman what is his construction of the provision of law which I have just quoted?

Mr. TERRY. I did not have my attention called to that.

Mr. HERMANN. That the specific act of Congress providing for the allotment of lands to the Indians, provided that as to the excess lands they shall be disposed of to actual settlers under the homestead act, "under such terms and conditions as Congress shall prescribe."

Now Congress is proposing to prescribe that under the general provision of the law these lands may be occupied by actual settlers, but one of the conditions shall be that they shall pay $1.50 per acre at the time of final proof. Now, I ask the gentleman if that is not in accordance with existing law?

Mr. TERRY. Not now recalling the particular section to which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] refers, I will leave the answer on that matter to my colleague [Mr. MCRAE], who has just been examining it, and I now yield the floor to him.

Mr. MCRAE. The section of the law read by the gentleman from Oregon, instead of being an authority for him, is to my mind very conclusive against him. That law contemplates that when we acquire lands we shall dispose of them, as I am insisting we should, under the public land laws. The gentleman points to this law, which requires that they shall be disposed of under the homestead law, and yet he contends for a proposition in this bill which literally takes all the life and vitality out of it. That is what I complain of.

Mr. HERMANN. My answer to the gentleman is this, Mr. Chairman, that if that were the construction to be placed upon this provision, then it would be necessary simply to say that they shall be acquired under the conditions imposed by the homestead act, but we go further, according to the language of the allotment act, and we are standing upon the allotment act, which provides for such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by Congresss. Why insert those words if the lands were to be disposed of under the homestead act?

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman forgets that this is a point of order, and the question is, at what time and upon what bill shall Congress make or prescribe these conditions? The point I make is that it can not be done upon an appropriation bill. Now this is a very plain proposition, that does not, as my colleague has correctly and clearly stated, have any reference to the confirmation of the treaty; but it is a proposition to change the land laws, so far as these lands are concerned, giving men the benefit of the law who are not entitled to it, changing the time of residence from five to three years and depriving settlers of the right of commutation. Almost every important provision of the homestead law is changed. Men who have had the benefit of it can take it again under this bill, and gentlemen will find that if these provisions are adopted the land jumpers and "sooners" will take every valuable piece of land that you open to settlement by it.

Mr. PICKLER. Oh, no.

Mr. LYNCH. Will they not take it under the homestead law just as well?

Mr. McRAE. Oh, no.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not?

Mr. McRAE. This bill restores the right to those who have lost it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I only rise to correct a mistake in the statement of my friend from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]. There is no such change here as from five years to three. The act of the 3d of March, 1891, provided a period of fourteen months, and this makes it a period of three years. That is the only difference.

Mr. PICKLER. Is it to prevent fraud?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair was of the opinion yesterday that perhaps the point of order was well taken, but he has given the matter very careful consideration last night and this morning, and the Chair wishes to direct the attention of the gentleman from Arkansas to the fact that the question whether or not a point of order would lie against a treaty in an appropriation bill does not now come up for consideration. It is too late to raise that point, and that has nothing whatever to do with the question before the House. Now, it is conceded by the gentleman from Arkansas that these lands are not public lands of the United States, and are not governed by the laws now on the statute books in relation to the public lands of the United States.

In addition to that the Chair finds, upon looking at the matter, that it is the universal custom, in considering these treaties, to modify and change them just as now being done in the present bill, and that is not only true of Indian treaties, as the Chair understands, but it is also true of other treaties. In fact, the Chair is informed that when the treaty between France and the United States was made, by which the United States acquired the great territory of Louisiana, after that treaty had been made by the high contracting parties, the great Napoleon twice modified the treaty, and the Senate of the United States once modified it, before it finally became a law. It seems to the Chair, therefore, that in view of the custom which has existed from time immemorial in this country that the point of order is not well taken, and the Chair so rules.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I rise to offer an amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to be perfectly fair, and he will first recognize the chairman of the committee to offer any amendment. This ruling cleans up the four points of order which were pending against the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, since the preparation of this bill——

Mr. McRAE. I understand the Chair's decision goes to all of these, the whole of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order against each is good on the same ground.

Mr. McRAE. That any kind of land legislation as to these lands will be germane. Is that the ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so holds.

Mr. McRAE. Then, I wanted to move an amendment myself. That is the reason I asked the question.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following amendment in behalf of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 8, after the word "Muscogee," insert the following language:

"And also provided that the Pueblo, Jacarilla Agency, in New Mexico, is hereby abolished and consolidated with the Southern Ute Agency, Colorado."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 53, line 18, after the word "thousand" insert "fifty," making it read $28,050.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection this amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the understanding was yesterday reached that all the duplicate matter shall be omitted.

The CHAIRMAN. It was not read, and it is to be omitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all on page 77 after the word "seal," in line 12, and insert the words "and others;" and strike out all of pages 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, and all of page 92 down to and including line 22.

The CHAIRMAN. This strikes out the signatures and names. If there is no objection, this amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say before the Chair announces the result, that it has not been thought necessary of late years to insert the names of the Indians who sign the contracts, as was done in former years, for the reason that the original agreement is on file in the Interior Department and there is no necessity for anything more than to refer to the law.

The names are left in, however, so that if any question should arise in the House there would be an easy reference to the number of persons who signed the agreement. I now submit, with the same object in view, the following amendment.

There was no objection, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all on page 101, after the word "seal," in line 16, and insert the words "and others," and strike out all of pages 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, and all of page 116 down to and including line 19.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, this amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I also offer the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of page 120, after the word "seal," in line 21, and insert the words "and others;" and strike out all of pages 121, 123, and lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, on page 124.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this amendment will also be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I also offer the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of page 131, after line 17, and insert the words "and others," and strike out all of pages 132, 133, 134, and 135 down to and including line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection this amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment, which I have left on the table in the room of the committee on Indian Affairs, but I will ask leave, if I find the amendment, to submit it.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he has offered the amendment in accordance with the agreement of the committee, on page 46 of this bill, relative to the allotment of land, that the appropriation was to be increased from $15,000 to $20,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has not offered any amendment to page 46.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this amendment was agreed upon by the whole committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, the amount in the appropriation—what line is that?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Page 46, allotting lands. In line 17, is my recollection.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amount appropriated is——

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. HOLMAN. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. We agreed to increase that amount to $20,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. With reference to one of these items the money is to be expended by direction of the President. This item provides for the expenditure under the authority of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. The Committee on Indian Affairs directed me to move an amendment increasing the amount from $15,000 to $20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twenty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw the amendment, fixing the salary of the superintendent of schools at $2,500, which was adopted. That provision is already in the bill, so of course there is no necessity for duplicating it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw this amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out lines 7 to 14, inclusive, and insert the following:

"For support and education of one hundred and fifty Indian pupils at Mount Pleasant, Mich., at $150 per annum each, $22,500; for pay of superintendent, $1,500 per annum; general repairs, $1,000; construction of laundry, $500; construction of storage building, $2,000; in all, $27,500."

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment for the committee.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out the word "six" in line 16, on page 58, and insert the word "ten." Also insert "ten" after the word "thousand" in line 17, page 58.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Amend by inserting after the word "dollars" in line 16, page 59, the following:

"Provided, That the sum of $9,500 shall be subtracted from the amount to be paid to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians on account of the interest herein provided for, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said sum of $9,500 to W. B. Munson, of Denison, Tex."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I have discussed this amendment with the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs and most of the members of it, and every one of them to whom I have explained it have agreed that it is a proper one. It is intended to reimburse Mr. Munson for money which was advanced for the Chickasaw Indians, and for which he had the acceptances of the auditor of that tribe. This money was used for an Indian school at Lebanon, in the Indian Territory.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After "land," page 95, line 19, add:

"That the right of commutation is extended to all bona fide settlers on the lands in Oklahoma Territory opened to settlement under the provisions of the act of Congress entitled 'An act making appropriations for current and contingent expenses and fulfilling treaty stipulations with Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894" approved March 3, 1893, and the President's proclamation in pursuance thereof, after fourteen months from date of settlement and upon payment for the lands as provided in said act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 7, page 51, insert the following:

"Provided, That so much of the appropriations made in this bill for the payment of agents as shall not be required for that purpose is hereby made available for educational purposes, to be added to the $1,000,070 already appropriated, and used for the same purposes if required."

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order on that for a moment. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there is already a provision in the bill which authorizes the use of surplus appropriations to the amount of $25,000. The truth is that this will amount to about $40,000. My friend will bear in mind that twenty-three military men are acting as agents, and of course appropriations are made for those agencies, all of them, and I should think the salaries of all the twenty-three would be in the neighborhood of $15,000. That would make the whole amount about seventy or seventy-five thousand dollars. However, I will not press the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 19, page 51, insert the following:

"For support of Indian school at Fort Shaw, Mont., as follows:

"For support of 230 Indian pupils, at $167 per annum each, at said school, $38,000; for pay of superintendent, $1,500; for repairs of buildings, $3,000; for fences, farm implements, seed, etc., $1,000; for irrigation ditches, laterals, etc., $3,000; in all, $46,500."

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is no new legislation. I hold in my hand a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing a letter from the Secretary of the Interior and a letter from the Indian Commissioner, recommending this appropriation, only that they recommend $62,250 instead of $46,500, as is proposed to be appropriated by my amendment. Now, I want to say here that from the records it appears that last year there were 171 pupils in this school. It is a Government school; a reservation school. There was an average attendance of 136 last year, and during the present year there are 231 Indian pupils enrolled and 216 as an average attendance.

And I do not know upon what principle this has been omitted from the bill.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Was this provided for last year?

Mr. HARTMAN. It was.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. And no provision is made for the matter in this bill?

Mr. HARTMAN. No provision is made this year.

Mr. HOLMAN. There was no estimate for this.

Mr. HARTMAN. Why, the chairman of the committee [Mr. HOLMAN] is entirely wrong. I hold the estimate in my hand.

Mr. HOLMAN. From the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. HARTMAN. From the Secretary of the Interior——

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not get our estimates from him.

Mr. HARTMAN. And also from the Indian Commissioner——

Mr. HOLMAN. We do not get our estimates from him, either.

Mr. HARTMAN. And a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Curtis.

Mr. HOLMAN. What does Mr. Curtis say.

Mr. HARTMAN. Here is his letter; and with the permission of the gentleman I will read it:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 31, 1894.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, an estimate of appropriation submitted by the Secretary of the Interior on the 29th instant, for the support of the Indian school at Fort Shaw, Mont., for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, $62,250, this school being now maintained out of the general school appropriation.

Respectfully, yours,

W. E. CURTIS, Acting Secretary.

The SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, that comes out of the $1,070,000. That is why it is omitted here.

Mr. HARTMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this question: How happens it that other Government schools are specifically provided for and this is not?

Mr. LYNCH. This was a new school just started a year ago, and was not carried in the appropriations.

Mr. HARTMAN. Then I presume I have the assurance of the chairman of the committee that this school will be taken care of out of that general fund?

Mr. LYNCH. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will say without hesitation that out of the general fund this school has been kept up till the present time, a period of two years; and, so far as I am concerned, I shall insist that the necessary money for this school shall be taken from the $1,070,000.

Mr. LYNCH. There is no danger about that matter.

Mr. HARTMAN. What sum will be allowed for this school?

Mr. HOLMAN. Whatever is necessary—based on the average attendance.

Mr. MCRAE. I now move to amend by inserting on page 59 of the bill the provision which I send to the desk, as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior, or any three persons they may jointly select or cause to be selected on behalf of the United States, are hereby fully authorized and empowered to compromise, adjust, and finally settle with the governor of the State of Arkansas, or with such person or persons as may be authorized by the laws of that State to act in its behalf, upon such terms and conditions as to them may seem just and equitable, subject to approval by Congress, as hereinafter provided, all or any of the differences between the Government and the said State growing out of and arising from the issue of certain bonds by the said State which are now owned in their own right or held in trust by the United States; the 5 per cent fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved June 23, 1836; the unpaid portion of the distribution fund which accrued to the said State under the act approved September 4, 1841; the swamp and overflowed lands in place granted by the act approved September 28, 1850, and not heretofore approved to the State; the land and money indemnity due the said State under the acts approved March 2, 1855, and March 3, 1857, and all other claims and demands of whatever kind or nature, and any compromise or settlement they may make with the said State shall be fully reported back to Congress, giving the basis thereof, for its further action, said compromise not to be effectual and final until approved by Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, while I am in complete sympathy with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE] in regard to the adjustment of these mutual accounts between Arkansas and the United States, and while they certainly ought to be adjusted, this subject has never been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs; and I feel that I should be doing injustice to my colleagues on that committee if I consented that so important a provision should go into this bill without any opportunity for its consideration by the committee. I shall, therefore, have to insist on the point of order.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard on the point of order. This matter, to which I move this as amendment, involves, as was stated yesterday, the bonds, the interest upon which is provided for. I claim that this amendment is germane to that section, and I insist that under the last clause of the second paragraph of Rule XXI, inasmuch as this is a proposition coming with a favorable report from a committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, it is admissible. Let me read the clause of the rule to which I refer:

That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee or any joint commission authorized by law or the House members of any such commission having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment—which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The Public Lands Committee in this case—

Now, Mr. Chairman, the bill which is embodied in this amendment has been considered and reported by the Committee on Public Lands, and substantially approved by two Departments. It does occur to me that when we have so reasonable and just a proposition as this, which must come back to Congress before any settlement is approved relating to a matter for which Congress is now called upon to make an appropriation which may be saved in future by this provision, it does seem to me the gentleman from Indiana, who has so often given me the assurance that he would like to see this provision enacted into law, should now withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, my friend from Arkansas does not, of course, pretend that this provision retrenches expenditures; that is the frailty of the proposition—it does not retrench. My friend must see that I should be doing great injustice to the committee of which I am the chairman, if I consented to so important a proposition as this, without the committee having an opportunity to consider the subject. I repeat, I am in full sympathy with the gentleman on this question, and always have been.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, in line 3, page 138, by striking out the word "Chicago" and inserting "St. Louis."

Mr. BARTHOLDT. This contest, Mr. Chairman, of our great cities for the Indian warehouse may not be as lofty as was that of the seven cities of ancient Greece for the honor of being the birthplace of Homer. In accordance with the spirit of the times, it is waged for things material. Yet there are involved in this controversy not merely questions of pecuniary gain, but also paramount considerations of fairness and justice.

If a father of a family be good and just, he will distribute the good things at his disposal equally and impartially among the members of his family. But to us, to St. Louis, "Uncle Sam" has not been a good and just parent, but rather a stepfather. While all her sisters were constantly receiving presents of some kind or other, St. Louis's invariable lot was to go empty-handed.

However gigantic the national pie, there never was a crumb left for St. Louis, and we are thus unlucky under Democratic as well as Republican Administrations, because, let me tell you confidentially, both parties deem Missouri too safely Democratic to require looking after. Consequently, when we ask for the protection of our farms against the annual floods, we are told that no money could be spent for this purpose; when I ask for the building of a road to our military reservation, Jefferson Barracks, in order to enable the farmers of St. Louis County to haul supplies there; when I ask that that reservation, which is now only a recruiting station, be turned into a regular military post; when we prove by facts and figures that our postal facilities need extension on account of the natural growth of our city, the stereotype answer of Congress and the Executive Departments to all these questions is, "No money."

Even our pension claims are disregarded, neglected, and ignored, or how will you account for the astounding fact that I now have over seven hundred unadjudicated pension claims on my files? Claims, too, of men who deserve to be remembered above all others, because they were the first to take up arms in defense of the nation, and were the ones who, by capturing Camp Jackson, did so much to save Missouri to the Union.

My people have patiently stood this sort of treatment for more than a quarter of a century, but the time has come when patience ceases to be a virtue with them. They begin to ask themselves, if such are the results of Missouri always going Democratic, whether it would not be wise, whether it would not be a good investment for them to for once hand the State over to the Republicans and to forever thereafter keep Missouri in the column of the doubtful sisters, so as to be "looked after" in the future.

And let me say right here, that if the proposition of the committee to transfer the Indian supply bureau from New York to Chicago is made with a view to offering a present to Illinois in order to keep that State in the Democratic phalanx, the same argument, motive, and consideration holds good with respect to Missouri, in fact more so, because Missouri now is a doubtful State, while Illinois, as recent elections show, is again as safely Republican as is Pennsylvania.

I sincerely trust, however, that political motives are not actuating the committee in a matter that presents a plain business proposition and nothing else. The only question is, can the Government buy the $3,000,000 worth of supplies that are annually furnished the Indians as cheaply in St. Louis as in New York or Chicago?

I unhesitatingly answer this question in the affirmative, and this being the case, I claim that the metropolis of the Mississippi Valley ought to have a chance for once. As a base of supplies for the Indians it is more favorably located than either New York or Chicago, because it is equally near to the Southwestern and the Northwestern Indians. It is the principal market of the staples of the South, and not only of those, but it is also one of the greatest flour, vegetable, and cattle markets, and the greatest tobacco and mule market in the country. And when you ask about the character of St. Louis business enterprises, we bluntly say to all the world, "Match it, if you can, the proud solidity of our commercial houses, the honor and integrity of our merchants."

Perhaps many of my Southern friends will not admit the adaptability of the allegory when I say that Uncle Sam was, instead of a kind parent, a stepfather to us—because their political theories preclude that admirable gentleman from being either an uncle or a father—but I know they will bear out my assertion that of all larger cities of the country, there is none more closely related to the South, in a commercial sense, than is St. Louis. The father of waters has connected us and tied us together for all time to come. We are selling your products, and we now merely ask you to help us get Uncle Sam as a customer for them. Will you do it?

Politically speaking, Mr. Chairman, St. Louis knows no East or West, North or South. She is the heart of the continent, in which sectionalism has no place, and which beats alike for all sections and all the people of our common country. This is a time, Mr. Chairman, when we should carefully avoid emphasizing questions and framing laws which have a tendency to separate us. We should rather seek points that unite us, and strive to discover common ground upon which North and South, East and West can stand. Therefore do not incite the envy of the West and South by unduly favoring New York, and do not go out of your way to confer new national favors upon a city which has but recently been the recipient of the grandest boon in the gift of the nation. The whole country has ungrudgingly contributed to make the World's Fair the grand success it was; now let Chicago do the graceful thing and step aside for her Missouri sister.

In harmony with this suggestion two Representatives of Chicago have indeed declared upon this floor that it was really immaterial to them whether they would get the Indian Supply Bureau or not. To us, Mr. Chairman, it is not immaterial; we want it, we need it, and we think we are entitled to it; and since there ought to be a branch bureau somewhere in the West, I appeal to the House in the interest of economy, fairness, and good Government, to locate it at St. Louis.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri as withdrawn, as this provision has been eliminated from the bill.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAWFORD], who, on yesterday, was granted leave to offer an amendment on page 48.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 48, in line 23, after the word "available," the following: "Provided, however, That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States court in the Territory to hear, try, and determine claims for Cherokee citizenship in all cases where the claimant can show a prima facie right to citizenship by reason of being a Cherokee within the meaning of treaties and laws guaranteeing his rights as such; and shall in all cases have the right of appeal to said court from the decision or judgment of any commission, court, or tribunal of the Cherokee Nation, and pending such appeal neither he nor his family shall be disturbed in their possessions until the suit is terminated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will have to reserve the point of order on the amendment, and hope the gentleman from North Carolina will be heard.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment with the view of taking the jurisdiction or authority out of the council of the Indian Territory and giving it to a court of the United States which is now located in that Territory.

Everybody knows, who has given any attention at all to the question, that the council of the Cherokee Nation has, contrary to any authority, in my judgment, ever conferred upon it, taken jurisdiction of all questions affecting the right of citizenship in that Territory.

Now, we have a large number of the old Cherokee tribe in my district in North Carolina; but under the usurpations of the Cherokee council they assume the right to reject any Cherokee from my district, if they so desire, and put him off without the provision of law as an intruder. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the Cherokee council has no jurisdiction whatever, either of the person or the property, of so-called intruders into that Territory, and that they can not determine the question so as to legally put them out by the court or by any departmental ruling, and I think it perfectly fair that some provision should be made by which those who have certain rights under the treaties with the United States, could have them determined by an impartial court. It has been recently decided by the United States court in the Territory, Judge Stuart presiding, when the question was brought before him on an appeal, that he had no jurisdiction whatever in the case where Cherokees alone were involved so as to determine the question of citizenship.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. Let me ask the gentleman what there is in the report that the nation frequently refuses to give those who claim to be citizens an opportunity for a hearing?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It amounts to this, that the council claims absolute power over the matter, without any right of appeal on the part of the defendant.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. That is, that they refuse to grant such hearing?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They refuse to put them on the roll of citizenship and they are not recognized unless they are enrolled. In this case to which I have referred, that went to the United States court over which Judge Stuart presided, it was clearly established that the applicant for citizenship, who had been declared an intruder, was a Cherokee, and it was so held by the court; but when the question was decided in favor of the so-called intruder as to his being a Cherokee he could not take further jurisdiction of the matter, and it was consequently dismissed.

The only thing that the Cherokee chief has to do now is simply to designate any man in the Territory not on the rolls as an intruder, and the commission of appraisers go on and appraise the value of the property, and that is all that has to be done before the Department can proceed to remove him as an intruder. Now, I maintain that the Cherokees of North Carolina, or anywhere else, have a perfect right to go there under the treaties, and there is no authority in any council, or in any court, or in any Department, to exclude them upon any proposition made by the nation or by the council, for the treaties are the supreme law.

I say that the court which you have recently established should have jurisdiction of the matter. How can the Department know anything about intruders there, simply when the appraisement has been made and referred to the Secretary of the Interior? No other facts are submitted in support of it. You must have some kind of a court with jurisdiction to determine the question involved, before the Department can act intelligently and fairly. The Secretary can not go into the matter, but must act on the report of the appraisers, and this appropriation is for the purpose of executing their decree.

I ask, then, Mr. Chairman, that the court be given jurisdiction to determine the question of the right of these Cherokees under the treaty. That is all the amendment proposes. It does not prevent the Cherokees from ejecting intruders, but it permits the Cherokees who are entitled to citizenship to have the privilege of having that right determined by some proper tribunal without having a judge sitting in his own case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I hope I will have a few minutes more.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield two minutes of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now, I think the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] ought to withdraw the point of order and let the Federal court in the Territory determine whether or not they have these rights, whether or not they are entitled to these rights under the treaties which have been made, which question has not been determined. The case of the Eastern Cherokees vs. The United States and the Western Cherokees does not determine the question of the right of the council to determine who shall be citizens, but it only goes to the question of tribal relations with the Western Cherokees; and I say right here that they have usurped the right of the United States, and that the power ought to be assumed by the Federal court, as proposed by this amendment, to decide this question.

I will ask the chairman of the committee to withdraw the point of order and let the court determine the question without prejudice. What objection can be made against the United States court determining the rights of citizenship? They have been refused when it has been found that they were Cherokees and had those rights under the treaties. The court determined that question in favor of the defendant, holding that the proceedings by the council were illegal, and yet it could not take jurisdiction simply for the reason the suit was between two Cherokees.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word. More than one treaty expressly confers upon the Cherokee Nation the power to determine who its citizens are, and it is no use to adopt my friend's proposition. We have no right to violate those treaties, and I trust we never shall.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 23, page 53, strike out the word "five" and insert the word "eight."

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the effect of that amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. It is to retain the present salary.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. The effect of it is to pay the superintendent of schools $1,800 instead of $1,500 per annum.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must raise the point of order on that. There is no law fixing the salary at $1,800.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. That is the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the Chair holds that an appropriation bill is a law within the meaning of Rule XXI, of course the Chair must overrule the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to overrule the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of North Dakota. Division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 46, noes 75.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COFFEEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after line 4, page 58, the following:

"For the purpose of conducting negotiations with the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians for the relinquishment of certain portions of their reservation in the State of Wyoming to the United States, under charge of a commissioner to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, there shall be appropriated the sum of $2,000, to become immediately available: Provided, That the pay of said commissioner shall not exceed $6 per day and necessary traveling expenses: And provided further, That any agreement entered into for said lands shall be ratified by Congress before it becomes binding."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that that amendment be again reported. There is so much confusion that it was impossible to hear it.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Although that subject has not been considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, I am not inclined to press the point of order, if my friend will consent to strike out the provision for a commissioner, and authorize the Secretary of the Interior to have these negotiations carried on by one of the Indian inspectors. If that change is made, and the appropriation of $2,000 is stricken out, I shall not object.

Mr. COFFEEN. That neutralizes everything and renders it valueless.

At the request of the committee we cut down the provision from $3,500 to $2,000, and cut down the three commissioners to one, and then the committee agreed to it. It only went out the other day upon the objection of the gentleman from Georgia, who has now withdrawn his objection, so that it can be passed upon as it was agreed upon. I do not see why that should not be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no necessity for the expenditure of this $2,000. There are so many of these commissioners and Indian inspectors, and so many officers employed all the time, that this bill is terribly top-heavy. It is almost as much a bill for patronage as it is a bill providing for the Indians.

Mr. COOMBS. Is it not necessary that there should be inspectors or commissioners employed?

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not employ inspectors, Indian inspectors, or special agents?

Mr. COOMBS. I know you say that the bill is top-heavy; but it is necessary to have either inspectors or commissioners.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Indian inspector is not an Indian. He is a white man; and there is really nothing much for these inspectors to do.

Mr. COFFEEN. I ask to be heard a moment on this.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I want the attention of my friend from Wyoming.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one amendment pending.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I want to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I desire to obtain the attention of the gentleman from Wyoming. I am exceedingly anxious that he shall have some one appointed to make this treaty, and I suggest that he take the same method and the same plan as has been suggested by the chairman, which I took in the Fifty-second Congress. I have had two treaties ratified, and they have been better made and the Indians have been better pleased by having the Secretary of the Interior send one of the five inspectors to negotiate the treaty than any other treaties we have had made in my country. I think it is in the interest of the Indians and the interest of the gentleman from Wyoming that he accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana. He will be much better provided for, and his treaty will be ratified much quicker, by having one of the inspectors authorized to make the treaty.

Mr. COFFEEN. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that any discussion should be necessary. We have done all the work that could be done to get the committee harmonized, and it was understood that it was going on as it was, after we had given away on every point that we could. We have endeavored for years and years to get the Shoshone Reservation, which contains three times as much land as is necessary, or in any manner used by the Indians, relinquished to the United States, so that people could settle on it and make homes and go on and develop that part of the State. Therefore, we have asked that a commissioner be appointed, not three, but one, at a very low rate, and the work that is already almost completed can then be accomplished. Now, let me say one word further. There is nothing whatever in this amendment which would not permit all that the gentleman from Washington said as to the appointment.

The Secretary can appoint one of the inspectors if he chooses. I hope the chairman of the committee will notice that. I ask that he may have latitude, so that we may secure the appointment of a commissioner or of one of the inspectors and get this work completed.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend will authorize the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, to devolve the duty of conducting the negotiations upon one of the inspectors I think there would be no objection.

Mr. COFFEEN. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman modify his amendment?

Mr. COFFEEN. I modify it in that line.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Mississippi, who desires to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all from and including line 8, on page 50, to and including line 17, on page 58, except lines 14, 15, and 16, page 51, and insert instead thereof the following:

"For the establishment and maintenance of public schools for Indian children between the ages of 7 and 18 years, $200,000, to be expended under the direction and on such plan adopted by the Secretary of the Interior."

The CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to the amendment now pending.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN. Because it is offered to a different part of the bill.

Mr. STOCKDALE. The amendment now pending applies to schools, and this is a motion to strike that part all out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment is not in order. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming as modified.

Mr. STOCKDALE. What was done with my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It was ruled out by the Chair.

Mr. STOCKDALE. On what ground?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain it as an amendment to the pending amendment when it was not to the same paragraph.

The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Wyoming as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of conducting negotiations with the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians for the sale and relinquishment of a certain portion of their reservation in the State of Wyoming to the United States under charge of a commissioner to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, there shall be appropriated the sum of $2,000, to become immediately available: Provided, That the pay of said commissioner shall not exceed $6 per day and necessary traveling expenses: And provided further, That any agreement entered into for said lands shall be ratified by Congress before it becomes binding: And provided further, The Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion detail an inspector in lieu of such commissioner.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. STOCKDALE. I make the point of order against that.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I object to the Secretary of the Interior having discretion in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from Mississippi both make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. The agreement was that the Secretary of the Interior "shall" detail an inspector: and unless that is agreed to I shall object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. STOCKDALE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in reference to this point of order, that the whole system of Indian schools is against the spirit of our institutions, and the money expended ought to be expended in common schools.

All the States have common schools. Very few support high schools at the public expense. I believe it is an unwarranted and unwise expenditure of public money to support high schools anywhere. The public of any community or any government are not called upon to do more than to give the poor children of the community what is known as a common-school education.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington insist upon his point of order?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I do, unless the amendment be modified so as to provide that the Secretary of the Interior shall detail an inspector for this purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILSON of Washington. I ask the gentleman from Wyoming to accept this amendment: "Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall detail one of the inspectors to make this agreement."

I ask him to accept that amendment, and to strike out the $2,000 appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn, then?

Mr. WILSON of Washington. It is withdrawn if the gentleman will make that modification.

Mr. COFFEEN assented.

The amendment as modified at the suggestion of Mr. WILSON of Washington was adopted.

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I ask the Clerk to read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 51, line 24, strike out the word "two" and insert in lieu thereof the word "four;" so as to make the provision read: "For pay of superintendent, $1,400."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is more than the law allows.

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina. The salary has been at that figure heretofore. The amount in the bill is a reduction.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think his salary as superintendent has been $1,200, but he has received additional pay in some other capacity.

Mr. BOWER of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this school is not located in my district, so that I have no peculiar interest in it, but this amendment simply proposes to restore the salary of the superintendent to what it has been heretofore, and I will add, by way of argument, that the agency at this point has been discontinued and, as a result, the duties pertaining to that agency have been transferred to the superintendent of schools. Instead of reducing his salary, therefore, it occurs to me that this is a very proper case for an increase but the committee, inadvertently, I suppose, has seen fit to decrease this officer's salary to $1,200, and my amendment simply proposes to restore it to $1,400, the amount at which it stood before.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will find as a matter of fact that the case stands this way: There was a compensation of $1,200 fixed by law for this office of superintendent, but afterwards $200 was added for his services as agent. His salary as superintendent has been $1,200.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not make the point of order against this amendment. I want to make a plain statement of this case. There was an agent at this school, and the Fifty-second Congress abolished the agency and transferred all of the agent's duties to the superintendent, and made the salary $1,400, thereby saving the Government $600. I offered an amendment to the appropriation bill myself giving the superintendent $200 additional, because of the extra duties that were imposed upon him, and it was adopted. Now, the committee are not taking away the duties that are put upon him, yet they propose to reduce his salary without giving a single reason for it. It is the only case where there is a dual capacity, superintendent and agent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, there are no agency duties there.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This superintendent has a great many duties to perform for the board in the capacity of agent. It is his duty to attend council meetings, make reports to the Indian Bureau, keep records and furnish evidence in litigation, prevent trespass being committed, and many things too numerous to mention here, and this amendment restores the salary to what it has been heretofore.

Mr. HOLMAN. We allowed you $3,000 on a new building, you know.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on the amendment; and the Chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 95, noes 13; so the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Page 64, line 22, after the word "child," add "under the age of 14 years."
Also, on page 65, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "and if neither of them are living without the voluntary consent of the next of kin of such child."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the Clerk to report the provision as it stands, and then as it is proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That no Indian child shall be sent from any Indian reservation to a school beyond the State or Territory in which said reservation is situated without the voluntary consent of the father or mother of such child if either of them are living, and if neither of them are living, without the voluntary consent of the next of kin of such child.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, I ask that he read the provision as proposed to be amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no Indian child under the age of 14 years shall be sent from any Indian reservation to a school beyond the State or Territory in which said reservation is situated without the voluntary consent of the father or mother of such child if either of them are living.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not object to that proposition provided the gentleman will strike out the limit of 14 years of age. I think that that would destroy a very valuable feature of this provision.

Mr. MAHON. If you let the provision stand as it is, you will not get any Indian children into these Eastern schools. If an Indian boy is 14 years old and wants to go to an Eastern school for the purpose of becoming a teacher or learning any other business, he certainly ought to be allowed to come. Even as the law now stands, where they can take a child off the reservation at a much less age the Commissioner says that no harm is done; that there has been no complaint made for the last year or two.

A MEMBER. Make the limit 18.

Mr. MAHON. Oh, no. If you can not get an Indian to go to school before he is 18, you had better keep him away entirely.

Mr. HERMANN. Allow me a single suggestion. I understand the limitation in this case is that children under 14 shall not be sent to any school beyond the boundaries of the State or Territory where those children are.

Mr. MAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERMANN. Now, I submit to the gentleman that some of these Indian training schools are 300 miles away from any reservation; and it might be as great a hardship to send children under 14 to a school three or four hundred miles away, even though within the limits of the State or Territory, as to send them a thousand or two thousand miles to a school beyond the limits of the State or Territory.

Mr. MAHON. I do not agree with the gentleman. At present you can not send these children 40 miles away from the reservation, no matter what their age.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAHON] says there has been no complaint of late years about children being taken away from the Indian reservations and sent to remote schools in the East. The gentleman labors under a misapprehension. If there is anything that creates dissatisfaction and wretchedness on your Indian reservations, it is this snatching away of the Indian children from their homes and their parents. You hear that complaint all along the line in the Indian reservations. The Indian is devoted to his children.

Parental affection is a universal instinct, and a strong one among the Indian tribes. I was told a few years ago by a Mennonite teacher (the Mennonites are great missionaries and eager to benefit mankind) that he had been sent out by his people, living in Kansas, to establish a school at an old abandoned fort called Cantonment, in the old Indian Territory, and he had gathered around him quite a large number of children of the Arapahoes and Cheyennes, neither of which tribes, as gentlemen know, are very highly civilized yet.

He told me there never was a day that he could not look up at the windows of his school room without seeing some mother or father or some other relative of the children looking in for the purpose of seeing that their children were safe. And when I was at Rosebud, S. Dak., an old lady came, as the agent, Mr. Wright told me, a distance of 90 miles, footsore and weary, for the purpose of seeing her little girl. He told me that she made this weary journey twice a year for this purpose of seeing her little girl at the school at Rosebud.

Mr. HAFTMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. In the event that all the time remaining for the consideration of this bill in Committee of the Whole should be consumed by the gentleman from Indiana, I want to know whether or not we shall be permitted to repeat the old legislative fraud which has been enacted in former times—the turning of the clock hands back?

Several MEMBERS. It is the Senate that does that.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOLMAN. This old lady came to the door of the school room, and her little girl came out to her. They went out upon the prairie and sat down. They did not seem to talk much to each other; but after they had sat there together for half an hour the child returned to the school room and the old mother got up and started homeward on her weary journey. Now, gentlemen, consider the agony of the old mother if her little girl was taken away by the agent of some Eastern institution in the name of philanthropy, when the little one would even, if in after years she returned to her, be lost to her. Is there any philanthropy in this? [Applause.] I venture to say that no well-authenticated case can be found throughout all your Eastern Indian school system where any Indian father or mother has voluntarily surrendered a child. In the name of common humanity let the Indian children be educated among their people, elevating at once the whole tribe.

[Here the hammer fell].

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of half past 3 having arrived, the Committee of the Whole will now rise and report the bill.

The committee accordingly rose.

The Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration House bill No. 6913 (the Indian appropriation bill); that, in accordance with the order of the House, the hour of half past 3 o'clock having arrived, the committee had risen, and now reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the previous question is ordered on the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole and amendments pending when the committee rose. Only one amendment was pending, as the Chair understands, and that the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 11, on page 64, line 22, after the word "child," insert the following, "under the age of 14 years;" and on page 65, after the word "living," strike out the following, "and if neither of them are living, without the voluntary consent of the next of kin of said child."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will be voted down.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. Now, unless a separate vote is demanded, the vote will be taken in gross upon all the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. COOMBS. I ask a separate vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LYNCH], on page 36 of the bill. I do this at the instance of my colleague, Judge DANIELS.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. If a separate vote is not demanded on any other amendment, the remaining amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole will be voted on in gross. [A pause.]

The question being taken, the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on state of Union (excepting that upon which a separate vote was demanded by Mr. COOMBS) were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read the amendment on which the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOMBS] has asked for a separate vote.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of page 36, insert the following:
"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to negotiate and effect, if practicable, an agreement with the Ogden Land Company, its successors or assigns, for the surrender and relinquishment to the United States of all such right, title, and interest as it may be found to have in and to any and all of the lands occupied by the Seneca nation of Indians in the State of New York, if any right is found to exist. Any agreement made hereafter to be subject to ratification by Congress."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GEAR. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill with the following instructions.

Mr. TRACEY. I make the point of order against the motion to recommit the bill, that there is no provision authorizing the motion under the special rule adopted by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is nothing in the rule which would prevent a motion to recommit the bill. Has the gentleman examined the order? It provides:

And that the previous question shall then be ordered on pending amendments and the bill to its final passage, and no intervening motion shall be in order until the bill is fully disposed of.

That does not prohibit the motion to recommit. It was not the intent to cut out the motion to recommit.

The Clerk will report the resolution offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 6913) "making appropriations for current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith, amended as follows:

Striking out all of the bill relating to Indian school, beginning with line 8, on page 50, and all of pages 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

For support of Government Indian day and industrial schools, and the erection and repair of Government school buildings on Indian reservations and at places where the Government has established and is now maintaining Government Indian schools, and for each and every purpose necessary in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior for the establishment and proper conduct of such schools, $2,225,000: Provided, That pending the establishment of such schools on Indian reservations, the Secretary of the Interior may in his discretion, during the fiscal year 1895, authorize contracts to be made with established schools not conducted by the Government, for the education and support of Indian pupils and to pay therefor from this appropriation; and the Secretary of the Interior shall report to the first regular session of the Fifty-fourth Congress, in detail, all expenditures made and authorized by him under this appropriation: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the sending of Indian children, at no expense to the United States, to schools not conducted by the Government.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I desire to make a point of order against the proposed instructions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that this amendment is out of order for the reason that such an amendment is new legislation, and would therefore not be in order as an amendment to the bill while being considered in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That being so, according to the uniform rulings in this House, a motion to recommit, with instructions to report a certain amendment, is not in order if the proposed amendment would not be in order as an amendment to the bill. That has been held uniformly by Speaker Carlisle, and other Speakers.

The SPEAKER. There is no question of that.

Mr. BURROWS. If it was not in order in committee, of course it would not be in order now.

Mr. O'NEIL of Massachusetts. I make the point that it is new legislation and not in order; that it changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Iowa if he desires to be heard.

Mr. GEAR. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] wishes to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, after a careful examination of this amendment I am satisfied that under the rules it is in order, and for the following reasons: If the Chair will take the Indian appropriation bill itself, he will find that the pages proposed to be stricken out cover appropriations in one sum of $1,000,000 and over for Indian schools, contract and Government. Then there are specific appropriations for the support and education of Indian children in certain specified religious schools.

Now, what is the law? That these expenditures have always abounded in appropriation only; and if the Chair is willing I will send the Book of Estimates to the Chair, which shows that this is a service that abounds only from year to year in appropriations and has for the last twenty-five years substantially so abounded, and that there is no law for the same outside of annual appropriations.

Now, what does the amendment propose to do? Simply to strike out these items and to substitute in their place an appropriation of two and one-half million of dollars; to do what? To support exactly the same kind of Government schools that have been carried on heretofore, with the addition of more money than is carried by the bill, for additional Government schools.

Again, there is one further provision in this bill, that the Secretary of the Interior is provided, pending the building of Government schoolhouses, [with power to extend such education as in his discretion may be necessary; to do what? To utilize other schools than Government schools for the education of these children precisely as it has been done for the last quarter of a century and as it is now being done.

Having said this much as to the provisions of this resolution, let me call the attention of the Chair to Rule XXI. I read it, the second clause; if the Chair will observe, it provides:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless—

And I call the attention of the Chair to the next clause—unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, this object has been in progress for a quarter of a century, and this appropriation is for the support of schools established, perhaps not by law, except as the grant of annual appropriations constitutes the law, the bill each year being a law for that year, and that is all that is proposed by the resolution which I offer, namely, an appropriation of money to support the Government schools in existence, for the education of Indian children in Government schools, wherever they may exist, and for the construction of Government schoolhouses upon Indian reservations, and for the utilization of this money in contract schools, so far as necessary, pending that construction; this appropriation in the original bill being for precisely the same purpose, differing only in degree.

Mr. BURROWS. As to the manner of the expenditure.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Now, one other observation and I have done. This resolution, if adopted, changes no legislation within the meaning of the rule. It is protected by the rule, as I have pointed out to the Chair. Again, even if there was a permanent law which said that the United States should expend so much money in contract schools every year, it would be in the power of Congress to appropriate or not, as it chose, and it has always been held that it was within the power of Congress, in making appropriations, to direct the application of the specific money appropriated.

Now, I do not think that is the true ground, or that it is necessary to put it on that ground. I think this is in order on the other ground already stated; but from every standpoint it seems to me there can be no question but what the motion is in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois makes the statement that this appropriation bill differs from most of the others, as legislation has generally been on this bill; that is to say, that the appropriations are made, not in conformity with existing law, but from time to time, as the exigencies of the Indian service require.

Now, assuming that to be the case, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, who has presided during the debate, has held repeatedly that this Rule XXI referred to existing law, and that the appropriation law was the law to which reference was made, and that therefore, if there was an appropriation made for a given service for the present fiscal year, that admitted of the reappropriation of the same sum of money, or an increased or less amount. That is the position he has been taking, and that principle has been very generally adopted. Nobody pretends from that standpoint that this changes the existing law, except the law making an appropriation, but it does create new legislation. My friend can not get around that proposition.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. What legislation does it make in contravention of Rule XXI?

Mr. HOLMAN. It creates new principles of administration of the Indian school system.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, certainly it does. It is too obvious to talk about. These schools are carried on under a given system. The effect of the proposed amendment would be to entirely change that system, and to largely increase the appropriations. The appropriation in this bill for educational purposes is about $1,929,000, while the effect of your proposition is to enlarge it much more than a quarter of a million dollars. It is new legislation, adopting a new policy or system.

I call attention to the fact that if this bill was referred back to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the committee should report it in accordance with the order of the House, it would then be subject to the point of order that it must be considered in Committee of the Whole, and when the subject should come before the Committee of the Whole, it would go out on a point of order that it is new legislation undoubtedly.

It is clear that on an appropriation bill, under the rules of the House, no such radical legislation is possible. Such legislation as the gentleman demands must be by direct legislation and not an appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that an amendment substantially embodying the provisions of the instruction now asked for by the gentleman from Illinois was presented in the committee, and in the committee held subject to a point of order.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. How is that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that an amendment was offered in the Committee of the Whole embracing substantially the provisions of this proposition.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I will correct the Chair about that. That is, I will give the Chair the correct understanding. This morning I obtained the floor on another amendment, and gave notice, having this resolution read, that I or some other member would move to recommit this bill with that instruction. After that, out of an abundance of caution, I asked the presiding officer if it would be in order to offer it as an amendment to an amendment to a single paragraph or provision in the bill. He said that I knew it would not. I said that I knew it would not, under the rules of the House, because it would strike out thirty or forty paragraphs before they had been reached, and it would be larger in scope than the paragraph considered. I said I only asked him the question, because I was not quite clear, and wanted to be absolutely certain whether the special rule changed the general parliamentary law of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was misinformed then.

Mr. BURROWS. It was not offered as an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Indiana what the statute is now, what the law is, in relation to the maintenance of Indian schools.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law for the current year?

The SPEAKER. Any law that may exist on the subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law in force in regard to these Indian schools which are affected by that amendment is contained in Indian appropriation bills, a series of them, and I submit further to the Chair that this changes existing law, and makes new law. It is entirely a new system of legislation, and if offered in the committee would be subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair wants to find out.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a large increase in the appropriation—over a million dollars. It is new legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Anything that authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to do anything that he hitherto had not the power to do is a change of existing law.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that this is new legislation on the subject of Indian schools. Does the gentleman know of any provision by which such legislation may go on an appropriation bill except when it reduces expenditures?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Wherein does it legislate?

The SPEAKER. It provides——

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. It appropriates.

The SPEAKER (continuing):

For support of Government Indian day and industrial schools and the erection and repair of Government school buildings on Indian reservations and at places where the Government has established and is now maintaining Government Indian schools, and for each and every purpose necessary, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, for the establishment and proper conduct of such schools, $2,250,000.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Then I just want to call the attention of the Chair——

The SPEAKER. And then it says:

That pending the establishment of such schools on Indian reservations the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, during the fiscal year 1895, authorize contracts to be made with established schools.

That authorizes him to make temporary contracts for the establishment of schools.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Yes, sir. May I call the attention of the Chair to one thing, because I think the Chair has not examined it or the bill itself. This resolution provides for all the Government schools that the bill provides for and for a part of the contract schools temporarily that the bill provides for, the Chair will find; and if there is legislation in one there is legislation in the other. And the Chair will find, further, that there is only appropriation in either.

Mr. BURROWS. These contract schools are already provided for by law.

The SPEAKER. These are contract schools; but this proposes to give permission to make contracts with other schools.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. Ah, but this provides for contract schools in any degree if no Government school be near.

The SPEAKER. Then you propose legislation to go beyond this appropriation?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. It must be one or the other.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. We do not legislate at all in that resolution within the meaning of Rule XXI. We only provide in that instruction for the expenditure of the money appropriated here for the coming fiscal year, nothing more or less, and no broader in that respect than is the bill itself.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands it, under the present law, under provisions contained in appropriation bills, the Government is engaged in supporting the education of Indians by contracts with existing schools.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. And by Government schools and contract boarding schools.

The SPEAKER. Does the proposition contemplate abandoning the making of contracts?

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. So far as this particular affair provided for in the resolution is concerned, I will say to the Chair no, because then it provides an appropriation of money for Government schools, and provides that while schoolhouses are being built that the Secretary of the Interior may contract for the education of the children with established schools not owned by the Government. Even if the permanent law did provide for contract schools it is in the discretion of Congress, in whole or part, to withhold appropriations, although the law might be an inch thick. But this resolution does utilize for the coming fiscal year a portion of this money for contract schools. But suppose it did not utilize any of it, it would merely be a failure to appropriate for an object that the Government has heretofore appropriated for.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is not that new law?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The Chair thinks that the scope and intent of this is to get away from the contract schools and establish schools by the Government. Therefore the Chair holds that it would not be in order as an amendment, and not being in order as an amendment, it is not in order by way of indirection, because that which can not be done directly can not be done indirectly.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. The gentleman from Michigan desires to be heard on the appeal.

Mr. TRACEY. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman has moved that the appeal be laid on the table, and of course that is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The previous question has been ordered, and all collateral questions must be decided without debate after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. CRAIN. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on laying the appeal on the table.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 171, noes 35.

Mr. CANNON of Illinois. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and 35 members voted in favor thereof; not a sufficient number.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, 40 members voting therefor; and the Speaker appointed Mr. CANNON of Illinois and Mr. HOLMAN.

The tellers reported—ayes 47, a sufficient number; so the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER appointed to act as tellers at the desk Mr HOUK and Mr. HOLMAN.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 158, nays 58, answered "present" 1, not voting 135; as follows:

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. COGSWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have my colleague, Mr. MCCALL, excused on account of sickness in his family.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. HARMER, who was compelled to leave the House awhile ago. If he were present I should vote "aye."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN, the appeal was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Shall this bill pass?

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker, is it now in order to make a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MCRAE. Then I move to recommit with the accompanying instructions.

A MEMBER. That motion was ruled out a while ago.

Mr. MCRAE. The point of order was made and sustained against the other motion to recommit.

Mr. SPRINGER. The motion was nevertheless made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that if it was ruled out it is hardly a motion. It was not entertained.

Mr. SPRINGER. What was ruled out was the instructions, but it seems to me that the motion to recommit is still pending.

The SPEAKER. It was a motion to recommit with instructions. It was all one motion. The Clerk will report the motion which the gentleman from Arkansas proposes to make.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the paragraph on page 95 after the word "entry," in line 14, down to and including the word "land," in line 19.

Strike out all after the word "third," in line 20, page 95, down to and including the word "disqualificated," in line 2, page 96.

Strike out all after the word "law," in line 21, page 136, down to and including the word "law," in line 25, and insert the following words:

"The remainder of the lands by said agreement ceded to the United States shall, upon proclamation by the President, be opened to settlement and disposal under the public land laws of the United States.

Strike out all of this paragraph after the word "acre," in line 5, page 137, down to and including the word "patent," in line 9.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make a point of order on that, Mr. Speaker. There are about half a dozen amendments there. None of them are necessarily connected with each other.

Mr. PICKLER. And they were held to be out of order in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MCRAE. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. There was no opportunity to present them there. I made points of order against these and other provisions, which were overruled.

Mr. PICKLER. They were the same propositions substantially.

Mr. SPRINGER. It would not be in order in Committee of the Whole to move all these amendments together.

Mr. MCRAE. These are not amendments. They are instructions to strike out certain parts of the bill. They are offered not as amendments, but as instructions to strike out certain parts, so as to make the bill conform to existing law and prevent fraud and injustice in the entries.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is a proviso there which changes existing law.

Mr. TRACEY. The gentleman's motion is not germane.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable.

The question being taken on agreeing to the motion of Mr. MCRAE, it was rejected, there being ayes 9, noes 130.

The question being then taken on the passage of the bill, there were, on a division (called for by Mr. GEAR)—ayes 137, noes 2.

Mr. GEAR. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. GEAR and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

Mr. PICKLER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 156, noes 23.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. HOLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PEARSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6576) to provide for the closing of part of an alley in square 622 in the city of Washington, D. C., and for the relief of the president and directors of Gonzaga College; and

A bill (H. R. 7458) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year 1894, and for other purposes.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. CANNON of Illinois obtained leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill just passed.

And then, on motion of Mr. HOLMAN (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying that fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations be exempted from the proposed income-tax provision of the pending tariff bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of E. F. Fellows and sundry other citizens of Marion County, Mo., praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of San Juan County, N. Mex., remonstrating against the proposed attachment of certain territory in New Mexico to the Southern Ute Indian Reservation in the State of Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS (for Mr. COKE) presented the petition of W. H. Austin and sundry other citizens of El Paso County, Tex., praying that in the passage of any law providing for the taxation of incomes the funds of mutual life-insurance companies and associations be exempted from taxation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1468) for the relief of James L. Townsend, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS (by request of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia) introduced a bill (S. 2131) to secure uniformity in the names of minor streets of the cities of Washington and Georgetown; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WASHBURN introduced a bill (S. 2132) granting to the Northern Mississippi Railway Company right of way through certain Indian reservations in Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 2133) for the relief of James H. Cromwell, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2134) to amend section 4472 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, forbidding the transportation of certain explosive articles on steamers carrying passengers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 2135) to provide that a term of the circuit and district court of the United States for the district of Vermont may be held at Montpelier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 2136) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at De Witt, Carroll County, Mo., and to establish it as a post-road; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2137) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Osage River, in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BERLIN SILVER COMMISSION.

Mr. VOORHEES. I submit a resolution, which I ask may be printed and go over until to-morrow morning for consideration.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie over, and to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Finance Committee of the Senate have authority to translate the proceedings of the Silver Commission, held at Berlin in February and April, 1894, and report the same to the Senate.

SOUTHERN UTE INDIANS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives, which will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6792) to disapprove the treaty heretofore made with the Southern Ute Indians to be removed from the Territory of Utah, and providing for settling them down in severalty where they may so elect and are qualified, and to settle all those not electing to take lands in severalty on the west 40 miles of the present reservation and in portions of New Mexico, and for other purposes, and to carry out the provisions of the treaty with said Indians June 15, 1880.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has the bill just come from the other House? It ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was under consideration on Saturday.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator from Colorado think that would be the better course?

Mr. BERRY. The bill was discussed on Saturday.

Mr. HARRIS. I think there was an agreement by unanimous consent, on the request of the Senator from Colorado, that the bill should come up this morning.

Mr. TELLER. There was; but there seems to be some objection to the bill. I ask that the bill may lie on the table just as it is, without any action this morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no objection to that course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the bill will lie on the table for the present.

CHARLES W. CRONK.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar is in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

The bill (S. 1228) for the relief of Charles W. Cronk, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] who has charge of the bill is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill and report be read, and let it go through, and get it off the Calendar. The bill is all right.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Charles W. Cronk, late an acting first assistant engineer, United States Navy, $264.46, being the amount of three months' extra pay which he failed to receive as a volunteer officer at the date of his discharge.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. BUTLER, for Mr. MCPHERSON, January 31, 1894, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1228) for the relief of Charles W. Cronk, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to report it back and recommend its passage for the reasons given in the appended letter of the Acting Secretary of the Navy.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, March 18, 1890.

SIR: I have the honor to return herewith the petition of Charles W. Cronk, late an acting first assistant engineer in the Navy, asking to be allowed three months' extra pay on account of his service in the war of the rebellion, and to furnish the following statement, in compliance with your request for information and suggestions relating thereto, viz.:

Charles W. Cronk was appointed an acting second assistant engineer in the Navy October 10, 1863, but the appointment was revoked on the 17th of that month on account of an injury he had received which prevented him from reporting for duty, and he was informed that upon his furnishing the Department with a medical certificate of recovery from the effect of such injury his appointment would be renewed.

Mr. Cronk was reappointed an acting second assistant engineer November 21, 1863, and on the 29th of October, 1864, was promoted to the grade of acting first assistant engineer. Under date of July 27, 1865, Mr. Cronk was detached from the United States steamship Naubuc and given two months' leave of absence, to take effect from the date of the receipt by him of the order granting the same, and notified that if at the expiration of such leave of absence his services were no longer required he would be honorably discharged from the service. The order detaching Mr. Cronk from the Naubuc and granting him leave of absence was not delivered to him, as appears from the papers accompanying his petition, until September 13, 1865, and as he was ordered to duty again on the 30th of that month, he had only seven days' leave thereunder.

Mr. Cronk remained in the service as an acting first assistant engineer until December 22, 1868, when he was honorably discharged from the service and informed by letter of that date that the leave of absence granted him in 1865 was all the leave to which he was entitled, but said letter seems to have been written upon the supposition that Mr. Cronk had had all the leave to which he was entitled under the order of July 27, 1865, the Department not having been informed as to the date of the receipt by him of that order.

It appears, therefore, that Mr. Cronk, through circumstances beyond his control, failed to receive the leave of absence with pay which, in accordance with the practice of the Department, was granted to volunteer officers of the Navy prior to their honorable discharge from the service, viz, one month for each year or portion of a year greater than six months, of service rendered prior to May 1, 1865.

This practice was adopted by this Department in consequence of the passage of an act of Congress, approved March 3, 1865, allowing to officers of the volunteer Army who remained in the service until the close of the late war three months' extra pay on being mustered out of the service.

The petition of Mr. Cronk is recommended to the favorable consideration of the committee.

Very respectfully,

F. M. RAMSAY,
Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. R. MCPHERSON,
Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF ALEXANDER W. BALDWIN.

The bill (S. 1365) to refund illegal internal-revenue tax collected of the late Alexander W. Baldwin as United States district judge for the district of Nevada was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 4, after the words "to the," to insert "legal representatives of the;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to the legal representatives of the estate of Alexander W. Baldwin, late United States district judge for the district of Nevada, the sum of $824.59, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being the internal-revenue tax illegally collected on his salary as said officer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF JOHN SHERMAN, JR.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 763) relieving the personal representatives of John Sherman, jr., late United States marshal for the Territory of New Mexico, from the requirements of section 833 of the Revised Statutes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to relieve the personal representatives of the late John Sherman, jr., late United States marshal for the Territory of New Mexico, from the rendition of his emolument returns for the periods from July 1 to December 31, 1881, and from January 1 to April 21, 1882, as required by section 833 of the Revised Statutes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTRICAL EXPERIMENT STATION.

Mr. PEFFER. A few days ago I had the bill (S. 1170) to establish an electrical experiment station for the purpose of investigating and determining whether electricity can be profitably applied as a motive power in the propulsion of farm machinery and implements recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. My object in asking the recommittal was that I might procure authority from the committee to make one slight verbal change in the framework of the substitute reported by the committee, to enlarge its scope a trifle. I report the bill back with that amendment to the amendment, and ask unanimous consent that it may be considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. PEFFER. I will state the object of the bill as now reported before it is read.

It is a bill to authorize and empower the Secretary of Agriculture to make experiments with a view to ascertain whether electricity may be used profitably as a motive power in the propulsion of farm machinery. The amendment which I have made is, after the word "electricity," wherever it occurs, to insert "or any gaseous substances." My correspondence with gentlemen who have been experimenting in this direction inform me that they are making very good progress in the application of gas to the propulsion of machinery, and that they think could be applied on farms very profitably. Now I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute reported by the committee will be read.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry report to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered, in any way or manner that he may deem best, by investigation, experiment, or otherwise, to ascertain whether electricity, or any gaseous substances, can be profitably used and applied as a motive power in the propulsion of farm machinery used in the tilling of the soil and harvesting and moving of crops.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act the sum of $2,500, payable on warrants issued by the Secretary of Agriculture, is hereby annually appropriated. The Secretary will report in detail to Congress annually his proceedings under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator to strike out annually and not make it a permanent appropriation. If the proposition has merit regular appropriations can be made.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator will see that there is nothing in the bill which requires this action to be taken. It is left purely a matter of discretion with the Secretary of the Treasury as to whether he shall proceed or not, and of course there would be no appropriations made unless he did proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. Still, I am opposed to making permanent appropriations for such matters. If the proposition has merit annual appropriations will be made, and if it has not they ought not to be made.

Mr. PEFFER. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the bill will be considered as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be again read.

Mr. BATE. I ask the Senator from Kansas if the Secretary of Agriculture has recommended the bill?

Mr. PEFFER. No.

Mr. BATE. Has it never been referred to him at all?

Mr. PEFFER. The present Secretary of Agriculture, I think, is not in favor of it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill had better be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be again read.

The Secretary again read the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I doubt the usefulness of the bill. There are already hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of dollars offered as a premium for somebody to do this thing. Men of the greatest ingenuity are studying all the problems connected with electricity, with an intense anxiety to advance the use of it in any and every direction. It is quite useless, in my judgment, to ask the General Government to take charge of this subject, or to go to the expense of appropriating $2,500 for it.

The technical schools of the country have branches devoted especially to the study of electrical matter. The whole thing is a very great and wonderful subject. A man who will go to the Patent Office and read the successive applications for patents and see the patents granted there will get a faint idea of what is being done in this very wonderful field. You might just as well appropriate 1 cent as $2,500 for all the good it will do. It will pay some clever fellow to go around and visit places and go to the Patent Office and look up the matter, but it will be of no material use in the world, in my judgment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? If not, the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; and the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I thought we were proceeding under the Calendar.

Mr. PEFFER. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that I asked a few days ago to have the bill recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, so that I might make a verbal change, adding the words "or any gaseous substances;" and I have now reported the bill back, and ask that it be acted on; that is all.

Mr. HOAR. I thought when it was read it was to be considered as a bill upon the Calendar under the five-minute rule and liable to objection after explanation. I do not think it ought to come up. It seems to me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is liable to an objection, the Chair will state. It was reported this morning. If there is objection it goes over.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say, it seems to me it is very much as if somebody should propose to offer a sixpence to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to inquire what is the best model of ocean steamers, and whether we could not surpass the rest of mankind in naval architecture. As the Senator from Connecticut says, every technical school now in the country has established or is seeking to establish a department of electrical engineering, where this precise problem is being studied. The mechanical genius of the country is dealing with electricity at this moment. There are great establishments, like the Thomson-Houston in Massachusetts, devoted to the manufacture and perfection of electrical machinery, and they seek greedily, they hunger for the best inventive faculty, and the best scientific training, and youth possessing these command large salaries instantly.

Now, to give this little pittance of $2,500 is totally inadequate. The Government would be vieing with private citizens in a problem where they are spending hundreds of thousands already. In the next place, the Secretary of Agriculture is not the official, if anybody, to deal with such a question. It should be the Commissioner of Patents, who has jurisdiction over invention, and who has under his control a trained body of men to deal with the problem of inventive and scientific development. The Secretary of Agriculture has no capacity for the work. I speak of this with the greatest respect for him. I suppose he does not know any more about it than I or my friend from Kansas. So I think I must object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, just a word.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the objection, of course, so that the Senator from Kansas may be heard.

Mr. PEFFER. If the Senator from Massachusetts wishes to enlarge the appropriation, I shall not object. The amount which I had in the bill originally when it went to the committee was $10,000, and I thought that was low enough. If the Senator is in earnest in his objection I shall be very glad indeed to have him propose an amendment. I infer, however, from the criticism which the Senator makes, that he is opposed to the spirit of the bill. All that I care to say, in reply to that, is that the Senator has been here now in the neighborhood of some two months asking for what amounts to the same thing, the paternal care of the Government over the industries in which he is interested, and when I ask a little help for my people, technicalities and quibbles are interposed.

Mr. HOAR. I do not think this will help the Senator's people a particle. I move to amend by substituting "$100,000" for "$2,500," and then I shall object to the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I object to the further consideration of the bill. Let the bill go to the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is objection, and the bill will go to the Calendar.

PAYMENT OF TAXES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1597) to amend an act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes."

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 4 of the act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1877, so as to read as follows:

SEC. 4. That if one-half of the tax herein levied upon the real and personal property taxed by this act shall not be paid before the 1st day of December in each year, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent; and there shall then be added, to be collected with such taxes, a penalty of 1 per cent upon the amount thereof, and a like penalty on the 1st day of each succeeding month until payment of said installment and penalty. And if said installment shall not be paid before the 1st day of June following, together with the one-half of said original tax due before said 1st day of June, a like penalty shall then be added on said last one-half of such tax; and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax, to be dealt with and collected in the manner prescribed by this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HARBORS OF SUPERIOR AND DULUTH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next business on the Calendar will be stated.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. 57) directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission of engineers to examine and report upon the cost of deepening the harbors of Superior and Duluth and their entrances to a uniform depth of 20 feet.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 6913) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE REVENUE BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of half past 10 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4864) to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. PLATT. Paragraphs 298 and 299 in the silk schedule were passed over on Saturday, practically at my request, and I should like to have another day with reference to their consideration.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There will be no objection to that. Let them be passed over for another day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the paragraphs will be passed over. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

SCHEDULE M.—PULP, PAPERS, AND BOOKS.

Pulp and paper:

303. Mechanically-ground wood pulp and chemical wood pulp unbleached or bleached, 10 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I desire an amendment to this paragraph. Maine, like Bozarris, is bleeding at a great many veins under the blows inflicted by the pending bill, and this is one of them.

The wood-pulp industry has grown up in this country since 1870, and it has reached enormous porportions. There are over $60,000,000 of capital invested in it to-day. It employs at least 70,000 men, able-bodied, grown-up men; no women, no children. Its product every year is worth $35,000,000. It pays out in labor alone $23,500,000 annually. It is a very beneficent industry. It has reduced the cost of paper of all kinds enormously.

I notice that wool fiber in 1870 was 7 cents a pound; last year it was 2¼ cents. Ground fiber, in 1870, was worth 4½ cents; last year it was worth 1¼ cents; and it has, as I say, reduced the price of all kinds of paper all over the world.

Our competitors are Austria, Sweden, Norway, and Canada. Austria, Sweden, and Norway have all of their chemicals free of duty. Ours are all dutiable. Austria, Norway, and Sweden employ women largely, and their wages are only one-quarter of the wages paid in the United States in the same industry. I have somewhere the cost per ton in these countries. In Germany the cost of labor is $4.49 per ton; in Austria, $2.83 per ton; and in the United States, $13.27 per ton.

The importations have been largely increasing. In 1886 they were 16,000 tons, and last year 63,566 tons, showing that under the duty in the McKinley law the importations are growing every year.

There are twenty-nine States interested in this industry, Maine more largely than any other, except New York. The annual product in Maine is 600,000 tons, and in New York 1,000,000 tons,

I think that an ad valorem duty was tried awhile on this article, and the frauds under it were so great that it failed. Under the McKinley law I see that the ad valorem duty on pulp dried for paper-makers' use was only 10 per cent; on wood pulp mechanically ground in, 17.52 per cent; on chemical, unbleached, 11.61 per cent; and on wood pulp chemical, bleached, 10.38 per cent.

This bill provides for an ad valorem of 10 per cent. I wish to ask the committee, there being so little decrease in duty, whether or not it can not consent to restore the specific duties in this matter of wood pulp?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Mr. President, the committee examined this subject with as much care as they were capable of doing. When we took this schedule up the argument was pressed, and was earnestly and vigorously pressed, in favor of a specific rather than an ad valorem tariff, and the difficulties of the administration of the law when there was an ad valorem tax heretofore imposed were pointed out; but after consultation with the officials of the Treasury Department and the custom-house officers, and a full examination of the question, we thought there would be practically no difficulty in enforcing the law under an ad valorem tariff. We believe there will be no injustice done and no difficulty in the execution of the law. With that sort of a conviction, I do not see how we could consent to make the change from an ad valorem to a specific basis.

Mr. FRYE. The duty is an exceedingly low one, as the Senator himself will admit—10 per cent ad valorem; it is the lowest duty you have provided in this entire bill, and the industry is an exceedingly valuable one. It is very valuable to the farmers, for it makes a market for their wood, which otherwise would be utterly useless, a mere waste. I wish that the duty could be made specific, even though it be not over 10 per cent.

I know that we have exported a little wood pulp during the tast two or three years, but that came from the dullness of the times and the overproduction of wood pulp in the United States. We exported some to England, but the exportation will stop at once. It is merely temporary. There is a syndicate to-day with $3,000,000 of capital which has bought an enormous tract of forest land in Norway, and is erecting pulp and paper mills there. We can not compete with that product produced in Norway at their price of labor.

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that during the last year we imported nearly $3,000,000 worth.

Mr. FRYE. We imported nearly 93,000 tons last year, and the importation has been increasing for the last four or five years. I shall be obliged to offer an amendment to the paragraph.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 303 and in lieu thereof to insert:

303. Mechanically ground wood pulp, $2.50 per ton, dry weight; chemical wood pulp, unbleached, $6 per ton, dry weight; bleached, $7 per ton, dry weight.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I saw the other day—I think it was the day before yesterday—one of the most vicious and outrageous attacks upon my colleague from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and myself in regard to the construction of the pending bill. The principal feature of the indictment was that we had been influenced by some Democratic leaders in New York, naming one of them, a distinguished Democrat who was a member of Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet when he was last President, to fix the schedule upon wood pulp because they had made a large investment, and that they had been consulted in regard to these rates. I only mention this to show how utterly unjust and reckless are the statements made in regard to public men who are engaged in public duty.

Our only object in framing this paragraph was to make an article of every-day and hourly necessity as cheap as possible to the vast body of consumers in the United States. On one hand are the manufacturers of wood pulp in New York and New England, demanding an increase of duty, but nobody has applied to us in the interest of the importers or of outside manufacturers to put this duty down. We have allowed it to remain as it was in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

It is an article so universally consumed, which enters into every family and business use, and public and private employment in the United States, that it seemed to us our manifest duty to make it as cheap as possible, and to put a duty upon it, which it is true, as the Senator from Maine says, is low, and we intended to make it low. It has not been done in order to meet the wishes of any manufacturers or importers, but because it is one of those articles, like salt and lumber, that ought to be made as cheap as possible.

That is the whole argument on behalf of the committee, and it seems to me it ought to be a paramount argument, unless we were consulting only specific interests. As a matter of course, the manufacturers in this country want the duty put up on it, for it gives them a market and excludes the foreigners. If we consulted the interests of the foreigners alone we would let it come in entirely free. But as it is, we have put this small duty upon it for the purpose of revenue and in the interests of the great body of the people of the country, as we understand it.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Before the Senator from Maine proceeds, I should like to suggest, in addition to what the Senator from Missouri has said, that the great bulk of the importations into this country were of unbleached chemical wood pulp; that 42,000 tons of this article came into the United States in the year 1893; that the tax was $6 per ton, which was an equivalent of 12.38 per cent; and that the tax now proposed is 10 per cent, which is a reduction of but 20 per cent below what it was under the law as it existed at that time. If we are to make any kind of a reduction it would seem that this is a reasonable one.

Mr. FRYE. On wood pulp mechanically ground, by this book, the ad valorem duty was 17.52; on pulp dried, 10 per cent; on wood pulp chemically unbleached, 11.61 per cent; on wood pulp chemically bleached, 10.38 per cent. I am not complaining that the bill has reduced slightly the existing duty; but I am asking, and all I am asking is that it should be made specific instead of ad valorem, on account of the frauds about which the Senator says complaint was made before his committee.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Maine state how the value of wood pulp can be ascertained? Is it a thing which has a stable and well known market value?

Mr. FRYE. I doubt if any wholesale prices in markets abroad can be ascertained. The markets abroad are Austria and Norway and Sweden. Of course they could probably be obtained in Canada, but Canada is not our great competitor to-day, although she will be. It must be understood that this industry is and will be a Northern industry, because the woods grown in cold climates have a much finer fiber than in the warm climates. That is why Maine is carrying on so immensely the pulp industry to-day, and Upper New York. Canada has the same advantage exactly that we have, with 40 per cent less of wages.

Norway has the same advantage as to its forests, and so with Swedon. Austria has not the same; but England is looking entirely to Norway, and purchasing all the forest lands there in order to come in and be our competitor in this matter, as she will be undoubtedly.

The most I care about is to make the duty specific instead of ad valorem. Senators will recognize the fact that there is no rate of duty in the whole bill less than 10 per cent ad valorem. There is no lower duty in the bill than the specific rate which I propose on wood pulp.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I remember well some fourteen or fifteen years ago in the House of Representatives the discussion about wood pulp, and it became in the mouths of many men who did not understand the subject, a prolific subject of jeers. I remember a distinguished statesman from New York who was called Wood Pulp Miller for some time because he desired a protective duty on wood pulp and at the same time was interested in it himself with others. We were told about the anxious desire of those men to keep up the price of the necessities of life. Well, some duty was placed on it, and it has continued to be a profitable industry up to this time.

Then I know very well the paper made from it for newspapers was sold at 6 cents a pound, and instead of the price being raised or even kept up in accordance with the uniform rule, the price of paper for newspapers has gone steadily down until it can be bought in large quantities for large newspapers at considerably less than 3 cents a pound. I do not wish to say exactly how much, because my concern has been buying some, but it has gone down more than one-half since that time. There has been a steady decrease in the price. Of course it is very easy to see if there should not be sufficient protection given to it one has only to take his capital across the line to Canada and avail himself of the boundless spruce forests there, and pay about half as much for wages as we pay here, and trundle it over the border and take away a very large and interesting industry from the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas called attention to the fact that the importations were largely of chemical unbleached wood pulp during the last year, over 43,000 tons having been imported, and he suggested that the proposed lowering of duties was only 10 per cent. If foreign manufacturers of wood pulp were enabled, with a duty of 12.38 per cent, to send 43,607 tons into this country last year, of the value of more than $2,000,000, I submit that under a reduction of 20 per cent they will probably be able to send in ten times that amount, and they will displace the manufacture of chemical unbleached wood pulp in this country.

The Senator from Connecticut calls attention to the great reduction in the price of paper in this country during the last decade. I was in New York a few days ago, and a friend of mine purchased, I think, 200 reams of paper suitable for printing ordinary documents on for 2¼ cents a pound, a price unknown in this country before. There never was a time in the history of the United States when paper was sold as cheap as it is sold to-day. It does seem to me that under these circumstances there ought not to be the slightest reduction upon a manufacture such as wood pulp, which is being carried on by the people of Maine, New York, New Hampshire, and some other States of our country.

I trust the amendment of the Senator from Maine as offered will be adopted. I wish it might be accepted by our friends on the other side, because it does seem to me that it is absolutely just and very necessary if we are to prosper in the manufacture of wood pulp in the United States.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether the specific duties which he now moves are in the vicinity of 10 per cent, which the committee propose, so that the substance of his amendment is that we shall have specific duties instead of ad valorem?

Mr. FRYE. They are very nearly, but I propose to change my amendment so as to make the duty exactly 10 per cent ad valorem of the present prices, and they certainly can not go any lower than they are now. Where $6 occurs in the amendment I propose to make it $5, and where $7 occurs to make it $6.50. That makes a specific duty equivalent to 10 per cent ad valorem through the range.

Mr. GALLINGER. And on the mechanically ground wood do you not make it $2.25 in place of $2.50?

Mr. FRYE. No; that is only 10 per cent now.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does not seem to be so in this book.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out paragraph 303 and insert:

Mechanically ground wood pulp, $2.50 per ton dry weight; chemical wood pulp unbleached, $5 per ton dry weight; bleached, $6.50 per ton dry weight.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will accept the amendment as now proposed by the Senator from Maine, making the duty specific instead of ad valorem. Whatever may be said about the ease with which ad valorem duties can be collected, it is absolutely certain that to make these duties specific will simplify their collection. I do not believe that the average appraiser or surveyor acting as appraiser at the small ports will be able to distinguish these pulps so as to make in every case an accurate estimate of value. If the duty is made equivalent to 10 per cent, why should it not be specific? Certainly no harm can be done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE].

Mr. FRYE and Mr. SMITH called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAFFERY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who informed me on Saturday that he would necessarily be absent to-day and to-morrow. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. HIGGINS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DUBOIS], who is paired with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], thus enabling the junior Senator from New Jersey and myself to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. MITCHELL of Wisconsin (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY].

Mr. PATTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] until he arrives to-day.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CAFFERY. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. POWER] to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WALSH], and vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I announce my pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PETTIGREW].

Mr. GEORGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] to the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], and vote "nay."

Mr. VILAS. I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], who is detained from the Chamber on business, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. VILAS] that, as I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], we shall transfer our pairs so that we may vote.

Mr. VILAS. Very well. I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER. I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] has voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. HOAR. I am paired with that Senator. I will withdraw my vote unless a transfer of pairs can be arranged.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BRICE. I wish to announce my pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. SHOUP (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from California [Mr. WHITE] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted, the Chair is advised.

Mr. SHOUP. I am paired with that Senator and withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Aldrich,	Gallinger,	Lodge,	Platt,
Allison,	Hale,	Manderson,	Proctor,
Chandler,	Hansbrough,	Morrill,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The reading of the bill will proceed.

304. Sheathing paper and roofing felt, 10 per cent ad valorem.
305. Printing paper, unsized, suitable only for books and newspapers, 12 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to strike out paragraph 305.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

306. Printing paper, sized or glued, suitable only for books and newspapers, 15 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph, on page 77, line 12, after the word "paper," by inserting "unsized;" and in line 13, after "newspapers," to strike out "fifteen," and insert "ten."

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to insert after the word "paper," in line 12, the word "unsized."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The other part of the amendment of the committee is withdrawn.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to offer an amendment and have it printed. I ask leave to offer it now. On page 83, paragraph 338, I move to strike out all in lines 7 and 8 down to the word "including" in line 9, and to insert:

Diamonds, whether cut or uncut, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be printed.

Mr. TELLER. I shall also move to add at the end of the paragraph what I send to the desk. I ask that the proposed amendment be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it be read.

Mr. TELLER. Very well; let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of paragraph 338 add the following:

To secure more effectually the conditions of this act, and the revenue to be derived from it, it is enacted that all diamonds entering this country as the property of travelers shall be subject to the duty where their value exceeds $350: Provided, however, That diamonds or precious stones the property of travelers shall enter free where it is shown by a consular certificate that they have previously left this country, their identity being further established by a photograph of the stones in their settings, which shall have been deposited with the consul at the port of departure in the United States.

And it is hereby declared that any informant who notifies the customs authorities that an attempt is to be made to smuggle precious stones shall be entitled, where a conviction is made, to the full value of the stones, deducting only the duty owing to the Government; that this provision to reward informants applies equally to all tradesmen or jewelers in any part of this country to whom smuggled stones may be offered for sale: Provided, That such persons can establish the fact that the stones are contraband.

That from the total duty derived from precious stones, 5 per cent shall be appropriated to pay the salaries of special agents abroad, whose duty it shall be to watch sales of precious stones and report to the customs authorities when they suspect that the illicit introduction of such stones is contemplated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed as requested. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

307. Papers known commercially as copying paper, filtering paper, silver paper, and tissue paper, white, printed, or colored, made up in copying books, reams, or in any other form, and albumenized or sensitized paper, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "thirty;" so as to read, "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. PLATT. I had hoped that the Senator from Arkansas would make a division of this paragraph so as to give the papers first mentioned in the paragraph, copying paper, filtering paper, and silver paper, a duty of 35 per cent ad valorem. There is such a distinction in the cost of manufacture and the price of these two classes of paper that it seems as if they ought not to go under one uniform duty of 30 per cent. I was informed that the matter had been brought to the notice of the committee, and I was indulging in the hope that there might be a division suggested by the committee with a slightly higher rate of duty on copying and filtering and silver papers. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether he is unwilling to make such a division?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not understand the question of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. I inquire of the Senator from Arkansas whether he is willing to make a division of the paragraph by which the papers first mentioned in the paragraph, copying paper, filtering paper, and silver paper, shall be made 35 per cent?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. The committee had under consideration the proposition as to whether there should be a change made in the paragraph. We had not finally determined when the paragraph was reached as to what action we would take, and will simply pass it over with the intention to consider it further. We shall make up our minds when we have further time to consider it and determine whether to make a different recommendation in this connection. I do not want the change made now.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator will allow the paragraph to be passed over for the present?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I simply want to have the paragraph acted on. The committee will further consider it, and if they believe it should be changed, they will propose it later.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator means that he will propose an amendment when the bill comes into the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. If we think a change ought to be made we shall propose it when the bill gets into the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. With that understanding, I shall offer no amendment to the paragraph at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

308. Parchment papers, surface-coated papers, and manufactures thereof, cardboards, lithographic prints from either stone or zinc, bound or unbound (except illustrations when forming a part of a periodical, newspaper, or in printed books accompanying the same), and all articles produced either in whole or in part by lithographic process, and photograph, autograph, and scrap albums, wholly or partially manufactured, 30 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph by striking out "twenty-five" and inserting "thirty;" so as to read, "30 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. GALLINGER. Some months ago a committee of gentlemen were in Washington, and they confided to me a memorial touching the matter of surface-coated papers, which I handed to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who assures me he will be able to procure it in a very little time, but he has it not at hand at the present moment. I ask the committee to let the paragraph be passed over for a few minutes and it can be taken up again. I do not know but that the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Arkansas is satisfactory, but I want to examine the memorial of those gentlemen, who are very respectable gentlemen, and who ought to be heard on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. There is no objection to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the paragraph will be passed over for the present. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read as follows:

Manufactures of paper:

309. Paper envelopes, 20 per cent ad valorem.
310. Paper hangings and paper for screens or fireboards, writing paper, drawing paper, and all other paper not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem.
311. Blank books of all kinds, 20 per cent ad valorem; books, including pamphlets and engravings, bound or unbound, photographs, etchings, maps, charts, and all printed matter not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. QUAY. I move to amend paragraph 311 by inserting in line 23, after the word "including," the words "books printed in any foreign language;" so as to cover foreign books.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "including," in line 23, paragraph 311, insert "books printed in any foreign language."

Mr. QUAY. I move this amendment at the request of the bookbinders and printers, especially of German books, in this country, who advise me that their industry will be absolutely destroyed if these books are placed on the free list. I should be glad to know from the gentlemen in charge of the bill what reason there is why these foreign books are to be exempted from duty.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not distinctly understand the Senator from Pennsylvania, but it seems to me that the amendment proposed by him does not extend the paragraph a particle.

Mr. QUAY. It does extend it. It defines it, and it makes it apply specifically to books printed in any foreign language. I propose to follow that up by striking off the clause in the free list which exempts such books from duty.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the consideration of the Senator from Pennsylvania whether the true way would not be to move the amendment when the free list is reached, because if that clause is stricken from the free list then this paragraph covers all books in whatever language.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. That would certainly be the way to reach the purpose the Senator has in view.

Mr. QUAY. I will withdraw the amendment and renew the proposition when the free list is reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania is withdrawn. The reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Secretary read as follows:

312. Playing cards, in packs not exceeding 54 cards and at a like rate for any number in excess, 10 cents per pack and 50 per cent ad valorem.

313. Manufactures of paper, or of which paper is the component material of chief value, not specially provided for in this act, 20 per cent ad valorem.

SCHEDULE N.—SUNDRIES.

314. Hair pencils, brushes, and feather dusters, 30 per cent ad valorem; brooms, 20 per cent ad valorem.

Buttons and button forms:

315. Button forms: Lastings, mohair, cloth, silk, or other manufactures of cloth, woven or made in patterns of such size, shape, or form, or cut in such manner as to be fit for buttons exclusively, 10 per cent ad valorem.

316. Buttons commercially known as agate buttons, 25 per cent ad valorem; pearl and shell buttons, wholly or partially manufactured, 1 cent per line per gross and 15 per cent ad valorem.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. After the word "line," in paragraph 316, line 24, I move to insert "button measure of one-fortieth of an inch."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

317. Ivory, vegetable ivory, glass, bone, or horn buttons, wholly or partially manufactured, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The Committee on Finance reported to amend the paragraph on page 80, paragraph 317, by striking out "ivory" and inserting "buttons of ivory," and in line 2, by striking out the word "buttons."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I move to strike out the word "twenty-five" and insert "thirty-five" in line 3, so as to make the rate "35 per cent ad valorem."

Mr. ALDRICH. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "fifty," which is the present law on ivory buttons.

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. I did not understand the proposition.

Mr. ALDRICH. My proposition is to restore the present law on ivory buttons—50 per cent—instead of 35 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendment has been agreed to. An amendment was offered by the Senator from Arkansas to make the rate 35 per cent, and the Senator from Rhode Island moves to amend the amendment by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "fifty," so as to read, "50 per cent ad valorem." The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The Secretary read the next paragraph, as follows:

318. Shoe buttons, made of paper, board, papier-maché, pulp, or other similar material not specially provided for in this act, 25 per cent ad valorem.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was to insert after paragraph 318:

Coal, bituminous, and shale, 40 cents per ton; coal slack or culm, 15 cents per ton.

Mr. HILL. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Strike out in line 8, on page 80, the words "40 cents per ton," and insert "shall be admitted free from duty;" so as to read:

Coal, bituminous and shale, shall be admitted free from duty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered proposes to place bituminous coal and shale upon the free list. I do not intend to detain the Senate with any lengthy remarks upon the amendment. I assume from what has taken place in the past two weeks in the Senate that this motion to amend will be defeated by substantially a unanimous Republican vote and by those Democrats upon this side of the Chamber who seem to be voting against this class of amendments.

The country expected that a Democratic Congress in framing a tariff-reform bill would place bituminous coal upon the free list. It was substantially so required by the Chicago Democratic platform. Every Democratic orator in the land who has spoken upon this subject has demanded free coal. I listened the other day with great interest to the remarks of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] when he made an elaborate plea in the Senate for free coal. I regret that he is not now in his seat. I assume that after those remarks he will be glad to avail himself of the opportunity of sustaining the pending amendment.

Mr. President, if there is one thing more than another to which the Democratic party stands solemnly pledged, it is to place raw materials upon the free list. That has been said over and over again by prominent Democrats throughout the whole country. If coal is not a raw material within the meaning of Democratic orators I do not know of a single item in the bill that can be called such.

I have heard no definition of raw material given here. I can suggest one. It is a production which is in its lowest or crudest form when it enters into commerce. Under this definition coal constitutes a raw material. Iron ore constitutes a raw material. Lead ore constitutes a raw material, and yet it is proposed by the bill to place a duty of 40 cents upon this raw material.

I observe since I began my remarks that the champions of this measure who have had charge of it during the past two or three weeks have left their seats. I assume they had nothing to say in defense of this provision and in opposition to my amendment. I am waiting to hear if the old threadbare plea is to be presented that the Finance Committee have been bulldozed into the acceptance of this provision. If so, I should like to know who has bulldozed them. I should like to know what Senators have announced that they would refuse to vote for this bill if coal should be placed upon the free list. Let them be named so that we may know who they are.

Mr. President, it ought not to require any argument in a Democratic Senate to induce Democratic Senators to vote for this amendment. If we place the proposed duty upon coal we go back upon all the Democratic arguments uttered in years past. We virtually repudiate our platform adopted in Chicago and we are brought into ridicule at the hands of the American people. Is one, substantially one, single article which may properly be denominated raw material—wool—to be singled out as the only triumph that is to be achieved for tariff reform in this bill?

I do not propose to detain the Senate by any further remarks upon my amendment. It of course has been decreed that it is to be defeated. I trust the little band who have stood together thus far in the Senate for free raw materials will stand together now, whether they be one, two, three, four, or five. A principle is involved in this amendment. A principle is at stake here, and for one, even if I am alone, I propose to stand up for that principle.

Mr. PEFFER. Mr. President, I have a much stronger reason for supporting the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York than he gives. I understand the Senator's reason chiefly to be that the Democratic platform has promised free coal. I have no more respect for that platform than the Democrats themselves have. Hence, I will not waste any time on that line of argument.

But there is a deeper, a broader, and a much grander reason than that. It is that with free coal under the surveillance of Government officers the people who are entitled to the use of free coal would obtain it, whereas, now, under existing conditions, if we were to have free coal, and if the Democratic platform was to be spread all over the country, coal would be but little cheaper than it is now to those who most need it. I care much less for the character of coal as a raw material than I do for its character as a substance of fuel for the use of the poor people.

I have a most interesting little document in my hand which will indicate measurably at least what I have in mind just now. During the hard pressing times of last winter when it became necessary for the city authorities in different parts of the country to look after the interests of the poor people, one particular person in the city of New York disposed kindly towards all classes, and especially towards the poor, opened a coal house where he sold coal in small quantities to poor people, such people as have been compelled to pay from two to four times as much for the little coal that they use as the well-to-do people across the street or within a block or two from their doors. Here is a record of what this good man did. It shows the number of tickets that he sold.

I ask that Senators will listen. Every Senator in the room, I hope, will listen to these figures. He sold 200,501 five-cent tickets to the poor people of the city of New York. Think of that, Senators; men and women buying coal by the 5 cents' worth when you and I buy it by the ton or the carload, according to what we use! He sold 18,933 ten-cent tickets, 7,799 fifteen-cent tickets, 2,933 twenty-cent tickets, and 3,121 twenty-five-cent tickets.

Mr. GALLINGER. How many five-cent tickets did he sell, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. PEFFER. The 5-cent tickets number 200,501. They procured from 20 to 25 pounds of coal. That is the way the poor people, those who are out of employment, those who are pinched by close poverty, those to whom the future is all dark, were able to procure their coal.

Now, there is another phase of this subject. The men who have control of the coal mines are either rich individual men or they are wealthy corporations and syndicates. While every coal mine in the country and every coal field, no matter what its extent, ought to belong to the entire people of the country, and the coal mined and paid for at fair wages to the persons who do the work, so that the people can procure it cheaply at cost, the truth is that all the coal mines of the country are owned by private persons or by corporations and syndicates, and they have reduced the wages of their miners to such an extent that the men are in open rebellion.

On the 4th day of May last a dispatch was printed in the various newspapers, and here is one of them, headed—

PROMPT ACTION DID IT—PREVENTED A RIOT OF COAL MINERS IN THE VANDERBILT REGION.

And then it goes on to describe what was done by prompt action of the authorities and people to prevent great trouble in the coal mines. On the 7th day of May another dispatch came. Indeed, they were coming every day numerously, but I have selected a few along from day to day. This one, dated May 7, Birmingham, Ala., is headed as follows:

STRIKERS RESORT TO DYNAMITE—ALABAMA MINERS BLOW UP MACHINERY AND ROLLING STOCK.

Then it goes on to describe the affair:

A mob numbering from two hundred to five hundred went to Price's mines at Horse Creek last night at midnight and blew up the boilers and other mine machinery with dynamite and fired one hundred shots into the company's store and houses. No one was hurt.

On the same day there came another dispatch, as follows:

OMENS OF BLOODSHED—STRIKERS USE DYNAMITE IN ALABAMA AND WEST VIRGINIA—MORE VIOLENCE EXPECTED TO-DAY—WORKS AND CARS BLOWN UP AT PRICE'S AND THE VICTORIA MINES—RIOTOUS DEMONSTRATIONS AT THE PARSONS PLANT—SERIOUS CONFLICT BREWING IN THE UNIONTOWN AND CONNELLSVILLE DISTRICTS—THE COMPANIES TRYING TO BREAK THE STRIKE WITH NEW MEN.

On May 9 we had the following:

BATTLE BETWEEN STRIKERS AND SHERIFF'S DEPUTIES—UNION AND NON-UNION LASTERS FIGHT—AUSTRIAN STRIKERS FIRED ON AND DISPERSED—GENERAL LABOR TROUBLES.

This came from Uniontown, Pa. May 10 we had the following from Birmingham, Ala.:

ALABAMA TROOPS ARE UNDER ARMS—COAL STRIKERS ASSUME A THREATENING ATTITUDE THERE.

Then the dispatch proceeds:

Troops of Birmingham, Woodlawn, and Bessemer have been ordered under arms.

Followed by other descriptive matter. May 9 we had a dispatch from Connellsville, Pa. It is headed as follows:

BEATEN NEARLY TO DEATH—COKE STRIKERS ATTACK WORKMEN AT THE HILL FARM—SEVERAL RIOTERS WOUNDED BY DEPUTIES—MORE DISORDER NEAR SCOTTDALE—DEPUTIES ARE TO BE ARRESTED—BALTIMORE AND OHIO TAKES COAL IN TRANSIT FOR ITS OWN USE—FACTORIES CLOSING—ANTHRACITE MINERS MAY JOIN.

Here are dispatches from Albany, N. Y.; Watertown, N. Y.; Sandusky, Ohio; Wheeling, W. Va., and Scottdale, Pa., dated May 14, all relating to the same subject. Here is another dispatch from Cleveland, Ohio, in reference to the meeting of operators and miners conferring for the purpose of adjusting their differences. The dispatch is headed as follows:

NOW WAR TO THE DEATH—THE CLEVELAND CONFERENCE FOR THE SETTLEMENT OF THE COAL STRIKE ENDS IN A FLAT FAILURE—MINERS WILL YIELD NOTHING—"NO COMPROMISE ALONG THE LINES OF STARVATION WAGES," SAYS PRESIDENT M'BRIDE—OPERATORS ANGRY, ETC.

Under date of May 22, we have the following:

TROUBLE AT MISSION FIELDS—DEPUTY SHERIFFS ARMED WITH WINCHESTERS SURROUND THE WORKS—GUNS FOR THE COKE REGIONS—ONE THOUSAND ARMS SHIPPED TO THE SCENE OF THE RIOTOUS LABORERS IN PENNSYLVANIA—OFFICERS GUARDING WORKING MINERS AND THE STRIKERS THREATEN FIGHT, ETC.

That is from Danville, Ill., and relates to the region about there. Under date of May 22 we have the following:

MOBBED BY STRIKERS—MINERS BEATEN INTO INSENSIBILITY—ASSAILANTS SURROUND A MINE AT LA SALLE, ILL., AND ATTACK THE MEN AS THEY COME UP—CITIZENS FEAR A WORSE RIOT TO-DAY.

From Uniontown, Pa., May 24, we have the following:

STRIKERS SHOT DOWN—BATTLE WITH DEPUTY SHERIFFS AT DAYBREAK—MANY VOLLEYS FIRED AT CLOSE RANGE—FIVE REPORTED KILLED AND A NUMBER INJURED—THE OFFICERS FIRED FIRST—

With descriptive matter following along.

On May 24, we have a dispatch from La Salle, Ill., headed as follows:

MOB LAW IN ILLINOIS—LA SALLE GIVEN OVER TO THE FURY OF STRIKING MINERS—BLOODY RIOT WITH DEPUTIES—CITY AUTHORITIES OVERPOWERED AND TROOPS CALLED FOR—AFTER VANQUISHING THE SHERIFF'S FORCE THE RIOTERS TOOK POSSESSION OF THE TOWN AND COMPELLED THE RELEASE OF PRISONERS FROM JAIL—PANDEMONIUM PREVAILED—PANIC AMONG THE CITIZENS, ETC.

I have a number of others. One which catches my eye is headed:

KILLED LIKE DOGS—DEPUTIES SHOOT DOWN STRIKING MINERS WITHOUT A MOMENT'S WARNING—EIGHT OF THE MEN WERE LEFT DEAD IN THE PUBLIC ROAD, WHILE MANY OTHERS RECEIVED SERIOUS WOUNDS FROM THE WINCHESTERS.

That is from Fayette City, Pa.

And yet, Mr. President, while reciting these bloody notes I observe but few Senators listening to them, although I doubt not nearly all at least hear them. Has it come to a point when in the highest, most exalted and dignified legislative body in the country such recitals as these can be given in open daylight and not create wonder and surprise? Can it be that we have grown so callous that our hearts are not affected by this turbulence, by this rioting, by this violence and bloodshed among our people? Are we so far along as that none of these things attract our attention and we prefer to go along in a humdrum way discussing tariff schedules and stopping upon free coal, thinking nothing about what is surrounding us?

I urge, Mr. President, that coal be put upon the free list, and more than that——

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PEFFER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator has called attention to the very serious condition of things in the country. I think I appreciate its seriousness as much as he does, but I do not see exactly how it is to be helped by putting coal on the free list. If he will inform us about that I shall be glad.

Mr. PEFFER. That is only the first step in what ought to be done. We must begin by putting coal on the free list. Then we must hurry up our Judiciary Committee, and if we can not get an act of Congress through the Judiciary Committee let the National Legislature take charge of this subject, let it take possession of all the coal beds and all the coal mines in the country; and let the coal be given to the people freely. That is the only way to settle this work. Senators smile. I remember that just about two years ago, when the Homestead trouble came, I offered a resolution for the purpose of testing the question which was involved in that struggle. When I said to the Senators there were but three ways out of the difficulty they smiled. I put it to them in this way: First, just keep your hands off and let the employer and the employé settle their disputes among themselves.

That will soon arrange it all peacefully, amicably, and justly. But if you are not willing to keep hands off in case of disturbance, then treat both sides alike. If you are determined to bring out the military arm of the Government in order to protect one side, protect the other side as well. If you can do neither, and if you are determined to put your hands on, then put them on the entire business and take charge of it as a Government institution, and manage it in the interest of the people, letting the profits go to the people and into the public Treasury instead of going into the pockets of millionaires, whom we are just now examing for fraud and conspiracy.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I do not wish at this time to discuss the serious condition with which we are confronted, so far as any final remedy is to be concerned, but the point I wish to get at is, how does it help the matter to put coal on the free list? How does it help the matter to adopt legislation which must necessarily, if it has the effect which it is desired to have, reduce the production of coal and throw out of employment men who are now engaged either at proper wages or at wages which are not satisfactory in the production of coal and throw them into idleness? How is it to help this condition of things in the coal industry to put coal on the free list and get it from Nova Scotia, mined by Nova Scotians, or from elsewhere out of the country?

Mr. PEFFER. Does the Senator wish to be understood as saying that if coal is placed on the free list any miners will be thrown out of employment or their wages will be reduced?

Mr. PLATT. I have not any doubt that to put coal on the free list would throw out of employment one-third of the persons engaged in mining coal in the United States.

Mr. PEFFER. That is one of the surprising things of this debate. It only costs from 40 to 46 cents a ton to mine coal, and we are proposing to put a duty of 40 cents a ton on foreign coal. I do not believe that it will affect the occupation of a single miner; but I am taking advantage of this opportunity to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the dangerous condition of public affairs on account of the management of mines now existing, and to impress upon the minds of Senators that we have got sooner or later not only to deal with this subject but with a great many others; and this is one good time for Senators, for the members of the other branch of Congress, for public men everywhere, for newspaper writers, for legislators, for political speakers, for all classes of the people who are pretending to instruct their neighbors, to take up this subject from the standpoint of the people.

Let us get it out of the hands of syndicates and corporations and wealthy individuals who control large tracts of land. There ought not to be a mine of coal, lead, zinc, copper, gold, or silver owned by any private individual. All of these things are for the public use. Just as soon as a man or a corporation or a company gets hold of a mine they begin immediately to raise the prices upon the people.

The extract that I read in the beginning of my remarks shows the straits to which poor people are brought. They go to the coal bins with baskets. You and I have seen them on the public streets many, many hundred times picking up coal by the single piece at a time, not bigger than a marble or a walnut or a hen's egg, and putting them into a basket.

We have seen little boys, smaller than the pages here, and little girls, feeble, frail, little creatures, gathering up the specks of coal. What would these boys do if they were placed under such circumstances? What would we full-grown men do under like circumstances? It appeals to the sympathy as well as to the conscience and to the brain of men.

I hope that the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will prevail.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as I have heretofore suggested, the political campaigns in New England for the last half dozen years have been waged along the line of a contest for free raw material, and especially free coal.

Our Democratic friends in those States have made the removal of the duty on coal the cardinal point of their political faith; and I shall be greatly surprised this morning if the Senator from New York does not succeed in securing a larger following in his vote upon this part of the Democratic platform than he succeeded when he made his last effort.

I am gratified that there is even an appearance of disagreement on that side of the Chamber upon this important question. If I thought that this disagreement was large enough to imperil the passage of this bill I would suggest that we might pass this item over until a new Democratic caucus could be held and a further agreement made as to what should be the attitude of the party upon this particular item.

But I have great fears that the Senator from New York will not be able to call to his assistance this morning, notwithstanding his eloquent statement of the case of the Democratic party, a sufficient number of followers on that side of the Chamber to make another caucus necessary.

So far as I am concerned, I am inclined to allow my Democratic friends to settle this question of free coal among themselves; to abstain from voting, and allow them to say whether they intend to follow in any instance the policy and principles which they have heretofore advocated.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, we have at last a statement of the higher order of statesmanship from the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I understand now that he proposes to abnegate his duties as a United States Senator, sent here to represent the people of this country, and, in order to obtain a political advantage, to sit quietly and silently in his seat. If that is the Senator's idea of the duties of an American Senator, I cannot congratulate him upon the plane where he has now located himself.

We have heard some extraordinary statements here this morning. The Senator from New York [Mr. HILL], who is opposed to this bill, as I have understood, because it contains a provision for an income tax, now asks information of those of us who have been earnestly laboring to construct a tariff bill which will pass Congress, to know who has caused to be inserted in this bill a tax on coal instead of free coal, as it came here from the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, we are here to give information, but not to those who are as well informed as we. The Senator from New York knows as much in regard to this matter as we do; and, as a matter of course, his inquiry is not for information, but in order to elicit some statement which would antagonize the passage of this bill in its entirety.

I have had occasion to say, and even under oath, Mr. President, the evidence being published, that there are a great many things in this bill which do not receive my personal approval, if isolated and by themselves; but I deem it my duty to look to the general result as to what will be for the best interests of the entire country to the largest degree. It is impossible that any Senator should obtain all that he wants in a great measure like this; but if I obtain the best that I can, and in the right direction, whilst I may deprecate and regret that I can not go further, I shall not hesitate as to how far I shall go.

We are determined, if we can, to supplant the McKinley act with a better measure, and if I am compelled to give up my opinion in favor of free coal, and to take a duty of about one-half of that imposed by the McKinley act, whilst I regret the difference of opinion which compels that necessity, I shall not remain silent, and leave it to others to discharge the duties which I have sworn to perform. I am here as an American Senator to do the best I can; and when I can not have my way, I shall compromise so far as it is necessary, if I can thereby obtain something better for the people of the United States. This much, Mr. President, is due to the committee; this much is due to the people of this country.

I agree with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] that coal ought to be made cheaper; but there is nothing in the parallel which he instituted between the buying of coal by the ton and the poor people of New York buying it 5 cents' worth at a time. The Senator uses in this city anthracite coal, which is already upon the free list, and the price of it is therefore not affected by the tariff at all. I should be glad to see the people of this country who are not now able to buy anthracite coal buy it as cheaply as possible and in such quantities as their means admit.

I would not take the coal mines of this country into the possession of the Government any more than I would take the railroads of the country. That is not my idea of the functions of the Government of the United States. If I were hunting votes in a country where there is universal suffrage, and the vote of the poorest man is equal to that of the richest, I might favor these wild socialistic reforms, as they are termed; but the functions of the Government of the United States are not such as the Senator from Kansas supposes them to be.

The functions of the Government are simply to give to the people of the United States, of all sections, of all classes, of all races, and of all colors, equal privileges and equal protection under the law. This Government is not a merchant, it is not a warehouseman, and it was not constructed to take into its hand what belongs to the people or to the States. Therefore, against the opinions of the Senator from Kansas I am as much opposed as I am to the opinions of the Senator from Rhode Island. Whatever the Democratic platform may have declared, it never could bind me to give up what I believed was for the benefit of all the people of the country, because I could not get what that platform declared to be good and right policy.

I remember once in the Senate, after a national convention of the Republican party had declared for a service pension, I think it was some eight or ten years ago, when the bill was reported by the then Senator from Kansas, Mr. Ingalls, not now a member of this body, just before a Presidential election, and those of us on this side, who had differed with our brethren upon the other side in the late war, felt ourselves coerced into silence by reason of the positions that we had occupied. I remember very well when the proposition from the committee was reported by Mr. Ingalls, I concluded it would immediately pass, because the national convention of the Republican party had declared for it, and because the trend of events and of popular opinion was in that direction.

I never had more respect for any public man in my life than for the Senator from Ohio now sitting before me [Mr. SHERMAN], with whom I differ as radically as I do from any man living, when he rose in his seat and, amidst profound silence, opposed the passage of the bill, and he uttered the sentence to be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: "Mr. President, I say that no political party can govern my action as a Senator of the United States in making laws for the people."

I would no more hesitate here to-day to ignore the declaration of a convention of the Democratic party of the United States in regard to a law I considered inimical to the best interests of the people of this country, than I would to tear into atoms a piece of blank paper. I am here under oath to do my duty, to get the best law I can, and if, on account of differences of opinion, I can not get free coal, I will take a duty of 40 cents a ton on coal, instead of 75.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, so far as I can now remember, I do not recall a paragraph of this bill which the Senator from Missouri has advocated or defended con amore, or in accordance with any principles or ideas which he has heretofore held upon the question of tariff revision. He has disclaimed any responsibility for the bill, and stated in regard to every paragraph upon which he has spoken that it was the best he could do, and that he was forced into the attitude which he occupied.

Mr. VEST. Personally it is a matter of very little importance to me what statement the Senator makes about my position; but as this matter is all to go into the RECORD and will go to the country, and as there are some people whose good opinion I value, I will say that I have stated here repeatedly that I am entirely responsible for everything in this bill. I should be ashamed of myself if I endeavored to evade any portion of the responsibility which rests upon me when I voted for the bill to be reported.

In the second place, the Senator's memory is very short as to my not supporting anything con amore in this bill. I defended free lumber, I defended free wool, and I never intimated in regard to those matters, which are cardinal features of the bill, that I had anything else except the largest approbation for both of them.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I shall have to admit that in respect to the two items to which the Senator from Missouri has referred, I was mistaken. I had for the moment forgotten his position in respect to these. From the statement which the Senator has made so frequently, that the provisions of this bill did not meet his personal views and that he had accepted them under duress, I had forgotten the exceptions to which he now refers.

The Senator from Missouri, in his attempts to defend this bill, has not always been able to conceal the awkwardness of his position. The actor upon the dramatic stage, who has appeared for a lifetime in the rôle of a heavy tragedian, when too suddenly called upon to assume the part of comedian is quite likely not to make the best impression upon the audiences before whom he is called upon to appear in his new character for the first time. The Senator from Missouri is apparently out of place in his defense of the protective duties of the measure which he is now called upon to advocate.

I regret that the testimony to which the Senator from Missouri has referred as to the authorship of this bill and as to the persons who have obliged him to assume this new role, was not as definite and as clear as I hoped that it might have been. It is true, he says that certain gentlemen—naming them, some five or six Senators—came before the Democratic members of the Finance Committee; but these "conservatives" did not at that interview agree among themselves as to what attitude should be taken, and, as I understood from the Senator's testimony, he asked them politely to leave the room of the Finance Committee and said: "Gentlemen, we shall fix this bill to suit ourselves." After this I suppose the functions of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE], of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and of the other Senators mentioned by the Senator from Missouri ceased, and from that time forward whatever was done with this bill, whatever changes were made in its various provisions, were made by the Senator from Missouri and by the Senator from Arkansas, and I suppose from testimony of the former Senator that they alone are responsible for the measure as it now appears.

I would ask the Senator from Missouri if he does not think it would be wise, in view of all the circumstances, if he should add one other item in this bill to those he has mentioned to which he can give his cordial support now and hereafter? If he has soothed his conscience somewhat by making lumber free, and by making wool free, why not make coal free?

The Senator suggests that it would not be good statesmanship for me to abdicate my functions in regard to this particular vote. There is a family difference of opinion in respect to this question which I would be glad to have settled without Republican interference It is a question whether the Democratic party are in favor of free coal or of a duty upon coal. Whenever they settle that question among themselves, we will then take our share of the responsibility of fixing the rates, if any duties are to be imposed.

Mr. VEST. Will my friend from Rhode Island oblige me and the Senate—I undertake to put the question for a large number of Senators here—by telling us why he favors putting coal upon the free list?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not favor putting coal upon the free list.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator to ask me to add free coal to free lumber and free wool.

Mr. ALDRICH. I was making the suggestion to the Senator from his own standpoint and for his own reputation.

Mr. VEST. Oh!

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not undertaking to argue this question.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Senator if he is for free coal or for a duty upon coal?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not for free coal in a protective measure. In a protective tariff bill I am for protecting every industry of the country that is entitled to protection; and coal, I think, is one of those. I should vote for a duty upon coal which I believed to be adequate in a bill which gave protection to all industries.

Mr. VEST. I would not insult the Senator by supposing that his opinions of the people of the United States are governed by the nature of the particular measure or the place upon which it comes and is pending. He must certainly have some ideas, as an old and experienced legislator, as to whether free coal is good or bad for the people of this country, and I assume that he would vote accordingly. I ask him categorically, without meaning to be offensive, does he think that the interests of the people of this whole country demand a duty upon coal or that coal should be free?

Mr. ALDRICH. I think most emphatically that the interests of the people of this country demand, first and above everything else, the defeat of the measure which is now pending in the Senate.

Mr. VEST. But that has nothing to do with coal.

Mr. ALDRICH. It may have a great deal to do with coal.

Mr. VEST. The Senator can not escape on the ground of ignorance of not having formed an opinion on this subject. His opinions are crystallized and perfected so far as he is concerned upon all the items of this bill, and he knows more about these details than any of us, and I cheerfully yield that acknowledgment to him. He says I am ungraceful at times, but I gracefully yield to him the palm. I ask the Senator—and he certainly knows as well as any man—what he thinks about this particular item before the Senate? We have been repeatedly warned to discuss the pending issue and not to go back to 1890, to the McKinley act. Does the Senator believe a duty upon coal is necessary to the welfare of the people of the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. What I believe upon that subject is shown by my vote and by my action in assisting in the preparation of the act of 1890, which imposed a duty of 75 cents a ton upon coal.

Mr. VEST. Then the Senator believes it is right to put a duty on coal?

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire above everything else to continue in existence the act of 1890 with a duty of 75 cents a ton on coal; and every effort of mine shall be made in that direction and to secure that result. If I believed the Senators from West Virginia and Maryland and the other Senators who have been instrumental—I do not use the word in any offensive sense—in fixing this rate of 40 cents a ton on coal, would vote against the bill, if coal is upon the free list, I should vote for free coal without the slightest hesitation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] I understood had recently been delivering lectures on statesmanship to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. The Senator from Rhode Island, when I was out of the Chamber, I understood suggested that he thought it would be wise, so far as he was concerned, to leave this question of free coal or dutiable coal to be settled by the Democratic side of the Chamber; and thereupon the Senator from Missouri arose to deliver his lecture on statesmanship and to suggest that if the Senator from Rhode Island took that course he would be remiss in his duty as a Senator and a statesman.

Only a little while before that I heard the Senator from Missouri, when he was asked by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] why he was not willing to take a specific duty on wood pulp in the place of an ad valorem duty, although they were substantially the equivalents of each other, give the Senate to understand that he was afraid to do that, because there had been rumors that a member of the Cabinet of President Cleveland during a former Administration was interested in the pulp manufacture, and that, therefore, improper motives would be attributed to him or to the committee on the other side of the Chamber, or to whoever they may be who are making up this bill, if they consented to so simple a thing as the imposition of a specific duty upon wood pulp, in the place of an ad valorem duty, although they were substantially the equivalents of each other. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what sort of statesmanship that is?

Mr. VEST. I made no such statement, and the RECORD will show that I made no such statement.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understood the Senator to give the fact that that member of the Cabinet was supposed to be interested in the pulp manufacture as the reason why the committee was not willing to give a specific duty on wood pulp.

Mr. VEST. I did not give any such reason.

Mr. CHANDLER. What did the Senator say?

Mr. VEST. I stated simply, in showing the injustice that was perpetrated upon those of us who are framing this bill in regard to the wood-pulp matter, that the charge had been made that there was an agreement between the members of the committee and certain distinguished Democrats in this connection, not that we were afraid or that——

Mr. CHANDLER. You were not influenced by that; oh, no.

Mr. VEST. I stated that no such thing had happened, and that nobody had approached us in any such interest; and that that illustrated the absolute falsehood of the charges made daily in regard to the framing of this bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I certainly understood him to give all this as a reason why he was not willing to agree to a specific duty on wood pulp. If the Senator only mentioned the story in order to deny it, as he has had occasion to mention a great many other somewhat vicious newspaper stories in connection with this bill in order to deny them, I have no criticism to make of the Senator; and he may be much more of a statesman in disposing of the various items in this bill than is the Senator from Rhode Island, if he chooses to set up that claim.

But, Mr. President, there is another question of statesmanship that I wish to submit to the Senator from Missouri; and that is, why this bill is made up by two or three Senators, a little handful of men gathering together, and deciding yea or nay, and then their decision being ratified by substantially a unanimous vote on the Democratic side of the Senate? Is that statesmanship? Is that a statesmanlike way of making a bill?

The Senator criticises Senators upon this side of the Chamber, and has criticised the Senator from Rhode Island because he thought of not voting on this question of coal, and yet everybody knows that, instead of making up these schedules here in the Senate by discussion; instead of having amendments moved and discussed and voted on and decided in a Senate of statesmen, if there are any here besides the Senator from Missouri, the whole thing is decided outside of this body. The dictum of two or three Senators upon the other side of the Chamber settles the question, and discussion is of no more use than whistling against the north wind.

Mr. President, it seems to me that a singular spectacle is presented to the country when a tariff bill is not made up by discussion in the Senate, by open, public dealings on the floor of the Senate, but where everything which two or three Senators upon the other side of the Chamber favor goes, and everything to which they are opposed fails of adoption, and the Democratic party rallies almost as one man to ratify these secret decisions which are thus made upon the other side of the Chamber.

I have a word to say on this amendment. I could refrain from voting upon it without any fear of the criticism of the Senator from Missouri that it would not be a statesmanlike act——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator permit me a word there?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. My object in making the suggestion I did was that this question might be settled by the entire Democratic Senate. I understand the Senator from Missouri, notwithstanding his disclaimer, which was more or less emphatic, is acting under the orders of a junta of Democratic Senators to a greater or less extent, two, three, four, or half a dozen, to which he submits his conscience and his judgment. I desire to have a larger forum, a larger court to decide this question, and I desire to have the whole Democratic party act. That was my purpose in making the suggestion I did.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, on the subject of coal, if I vote upon the question, I shall vote in favor of the duty upon coal. I am a protectionist, and I shall answer the question which the Senator from Missouri asked of the Senator from Rhode Island. I believe the best interests of the whole country will be promoted by a duty on coal. Therefore, I am willing to protect the industry of Ohio, and West Virginia, and Virginia, and Maryland, and every other State where coal is produced, because of the large interest of the whole country. I believe that for coal we should depend as largely as possible upon our own mines, and should not depend upon the mines of Nova Scotia or of Europe. Therefore, I shall vote, if I vote at all, for this duty; and I regret that the existing duty is to be reduced.

I congratulate the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICE] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], whom I see upon the floor, upon the fact that, notwithstanding this bill came from the House of Representatives with free coal, coal is to be made dutiable because an important industry of their State will be protected by the duty which is to be imposed upon coal. If Senators choose to disclaim, as the Senator from West Virginia has once or twice done, having exerted any influence to secure this protection upon the product of their State, I accept that disclaimer.

I do not know what the subtle influence was which led to the placing of coal upon the dutiable list, notwithstanding it came from the House free in the pending bill; but whatever the influence may have been, whether creditable or not creditable to the parties who exerted it, it was an influence exerted in the right direction. I believe that the duty should remain, notwithstanding the promise of the platform of the Democratic party is to be broken, and notwithstanding the heroic devotion to that platform of the senior Senator from New York [Mr. HILL].

I am inclined to think, however, that we shall have free coal. I can not doubt that the Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS] before this bill finally passes will make a rally in order to redeem his promise to New England. I can not believe that the Senator from Texas has so thoroughly obliterated his personality in connection with tariff legislation that he will not succeed before this bill passes in giving some other free raw material to this country besides lumber and wool; and when, as the Senator believes, the restoration of the industries of New England so much depend upon the fulfillment of his promise of free raw material, which he has made so many times to the people of New England, I believe that he will make a rally and at last succeed in giving more free raw material than we are now promised by this bill.

Mr. President, I believe there is another reason why New England will get free coal before this bill passes through the committee of conference and is adopted by both Houses of Congress. I understand that the Nova Scotia coal syndicate rests in serene confidence that the promises which have been made to them will be fulfilled.

The Senator from Missouri has taken occasion to allude to a member of a former Cabinet of President Cleveland as being interested in the manufacture of pulp. That gentleman also, it is rumored, is largely interested in Nova Scotia coal mines, and the syndicate which has been formed under his auspices, I have information from New York, is resting serenely confident that when this bill comes out of the conference committee, coal will be put upon the free list, in pursuance of some understanding which they have with somebody.

So, in spite of my vote; in spite of the vote of the Senator from Rhode Island; in spite of the very reluctant vote of the Senator from Missouri to puta duty upon coal, it is quite likely that, if there was a contract with the Nova Scotia syndicate, and if the men who have made that bargain are as successful as the sugar trust has been, the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Missouri, after all, when this bill finally becomes a law, if it ever does become a law—which God forbid—will at last give free raw material of coal to the people of New England.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] both seem to favor a duty upon coal. The Senator from Rhode Island spoke of the differences upon this side of the Chamber in regard to certain portions of the pending bill. The differences seem to be no greater upon this side of the Chamber than they are between those who advocate this duty upon coal. The Senator from Rhode Island favors a duty upon coal because he is a protectionist; and, to be consistent with his position upon other matters contained in the bill, he of course expects to vote to place a duty upon coal or to continue the one already thereon.

The Senator from Missouri says, as a matter of principle, he would favor free coal. I understand him to say that he believes that a reduction of the duty upon coal would make coal cheaper. If that be so—and I hope it is so—then a still further reduction or an entire abolition of the duty upon coal would make coal cheaper still. Therefore, in voting for free coal it shall not be charged, at least to-day, that I am playing into the hands of any trust by placing another article upon the free list.

The House of Representatives passed the Wilson bill, and, in its wisdom, saw fit to place coal upon the free list. The country was not surprised at that action. The country demanded it, and expected it; and the surprise of the country is that this Democratic Senate is going back upon its record in the past, and now proposes to place a duty upon coal.

I have received letters and telegrams and resolutions from all parts of the country, many of them from Missouri, Indiana, and other parts of the West and South, asking me to support the Wilson bill as it passed the House, great emphasis being always laid upon that portion of the resolutions and letters and telegrams "as it passed the House."

I can comply with that request in this particular. I have advocated free raw material in all the speeches which I have made upon the subject of tariff reform for the past five or ten years. I do not see any reason why I should take back what I have said.

Mr. President, I favor free coal because I believe it will make coal cheaper. I am opposed to the duty upon it because I think it places the Democratic party in a false and inconsistent position. I am in favor of this because the party stand committed by its record, by its votes in the past, and by its platforms, and in its procedures heretofore in favor of free raw material. I stand to-day where I have stood for many years.

The Senator from Missouri seeks to attribute to me a motive for making this motion which I can not accept. He says that I make the motion because, "as he understands," I am opposed to certain features in this bill, and desire to defeat the whole bill. Who is his informant? Whence comes this information, of which he is the exclusive possessor? What Senator around this circle has dared to assure him of any such fact? What Senator has dared to deliver my vote one way or the other upon this bill?

Mr. President, I am opposed to certain features of this bill. I have expressed my views upon them heretofore. I am opposed earnestly, and conscientiously opposed, to that socialistic and Populistic principle which you have engrafted upon the pending bill, of a war income tax. I expressed my views before, and I propose to express them again when that schedule of this bill shall be reached; but while I have opposed that portion of the bill, while I have sought by my vote to eliminate what I thought were bad features of the bill, and sought to make it better, no Senator around this circle has a right to say "that he understands" I am opposed to the whole bill.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I utterly disclaim the two statements of the Senator or the two imputations, in the first place, that I undertook to state what I had been informed in regard to his vote by any one else, or, in the second place, that I undertook to put any interpretation upon what he has said himself which his language does not justify.

In an address, a carefully prepared address to the Senate upon that feature of this bill which is known as the income tax—and I think the record will substantiate what I now state—the Senator from New York said that he could not, and would not, vote for a measure containing that provision; and assuming that that provision will remain in the bill, as I have no question it will, I think I am authorized, therefore, in stating that the Senator meant he would not vote for the bill in the shape it now is. If he did not mean that, I am exceedingly glad to know it. No one separates from the Senator as to any measure pending here with more reluctance than I, but I simply undertook to give what I understood him to say in his speech regarding the matter.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, then we are to understand from the disclaimer of the distinguished Senator from Missouri that his only authority for making the broad statement that he understood that I was opposed to the bill was the address which I had the honor to deliver to the Senate some time ago against the income tax. The RECORD will speak for itself. I ask the Senate to peruse that speech, and then point out to the Senate the line or the sentence from which he has a right to make that inference. I neither said that I intended to support this bill if it contained the income tax, nor do I say at this time that I shall not.

I shall cross that bridge when I reach it. No ingenious suggestion of the ingenious Senator from Missouri will have me here and now declare what I shall do when the final vote comes upon the pending bill. God knows, no one can tell what this bill will be when it passes the Senate, or what it will be when it comes from the conference committee. I know not how many concessions are yet to be extorted from the Finance Committee; I know not how many other Democratic principles may have to be yielded at the dictation of some one, no one knows whom. Therefore, sir, I reserve my right to vote upon this bill, or I reserve an expression, rather, of my views upon this bill until I see what the bill is when it is presented to me as a finality.

I understood the Senator from Missouri to say that no one knows better than I how these schedules came to be prepared. I do not know why he makes that statement. I am not a member of the Finance Committee. I have attended but very few times before that committee. I have no more reason to know how those schedules were made up than any other member of the Senate. Once I happened to be in the Finance Committee room, where, I desire to say, I have been always treated with the utmost courtesy by the distinguished chairman and by the other members of the committee.

I was there one day when I heard the distinguished Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], whom I always delight to hear, speaking ably and eloquently in favor of a tax upon coal. He was representing, as he understood, undoubtedly, the best interests of his State and the best interests of the country. I sat quietly by and listened. I said not one word. I do not assume that he will say or that any other person will say that I acquiesced in the propriety of his argument or that I acquiesced in the propriety of having a duty placed upon coal.

The coal schedule was made up by the Finance Committee according to its own judgment. I do not know of any Senator on this side of the circle who threatened to vote against the bill on its final passage if coal was not protected. If there is such an one, let him be named here and now. I do not understand that the Senator from West Virginia made any demand, made any threat, or even hardly made a request. He simply presented his arguments, and relied upon those, and those alone; and the committee, in the discharge of its duty to itself and the country, saw fit to place this duty upon coal.

Now, when a Senator rises here and moves to place coal upon the free list the Senator from Missouri says if he had his own way he would place coal upon the free list, he believes in it, he believes in the doctrine, as I understand him, of free raw material, or else he believes in the doctrine of free trade, it matters not which, and away down in his heart he would like to vote for my amendment, but there is some power, some source, nobody knows where it exists, which compels him to vote, much as he regrets it, with the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber.

I do not know how a duty came to be placed upon coal. Surely, the very first report of the Finance Committee which was submitted to the Democratic caucus contained, if I recollect aright, a duty upon coal. It certainly did. Am I not right, I ask the Senator from West Virginia? He says that I am. Nothing, therefore, that took place in the three days Democratic caucus compels the placing of coal upon the dutiable list; nothing that took place in the subsequent hearings before the Finance Committee compelled it. I think it would be wiser and better for the Finance Committee to come here and defend this provision rather than attempt to apologize for it and excuse it.

The Senator from Missouri in his remarks alluded to certain sworn testimony of his before the special investigating committee on Saturday last. The proceedings of that committee are secret. I have not been furnished yet with a complete copy of the testimony. I have only seen portions of it published in the press. Certain wrong impressions are liable to be made by what the Senator intentionally or inadvertently stated. In substance, I understood him to say, and he allowed it to be inferred, that after the famous three-days conference of the Democratic Senators, at which no conclusion is conceded to have been arrived at, certain Senators waited upon the Finance Committee, Senators GORMAN, SMITH, BRICE, CAFFERY, and myself.

From the manner in which the testimony was given it would seem that we went there in a body. No such thing ever occurred. I was invited there by some messenger from that committee to give my views, saying that I was desired there. I went alone; I went in company with no one; although I do not wish it to be inferred from that statement that I should have been ashamed of such excellent company as these gentlemen were. There other gentlemen came and went away. There was no hearing in the proper sense of the word. There was an informal talk.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] said but little upon the subject. The discussions were had in an informal way, upon the sugar question principally. I do not intend to go into the details of what took place before the committee, but I think a wrong inference can be drawn from the Senator's testimony, although I have not had the pleasure of perusing a copy of it.

I desire to say right here that I made no demand, I made no request, I made no suggestion in favor of a duty upon sugar in any interview before the committee; and I ask the Senator from Missouri, who I know does not wish to do me an injustice, whether that is not true?

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I so stated expressly and emphatically in my testimony, which has been published, I will say to the Senator from New York. I do not know how it happened that he has not seen a copy of it. It was in yesterday's papers. I expressly stated that the Senator from New York said nothing; and I never intimated that the Senators to whom he has referred came there in a body. I do not know who sent for them; but when I walked into the committee room I found them there. I never undertook to say how they came there. They met the committee there. The Senator is utterly mistaken when he assumes that I stated that he made any demand. I expressly stated that he did not open his mouth.

Mr. HILL. And I deny that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], in behalf of myself or in behalf of any other member of that delegation, made any demand upon the committee. None, certainly, was made by me whilst sitting by and hearing the subject discussed. Is it to be said that I favored a tax upon sugar before that committee, and then came here and voted the other way? I had my own views upon that question. I expressed them in the caucus to a slight extent; I had expressed them elsewhere in public places. I said that the propriety of placing a duty upon sugar depended upon a large number of other things not now necessary to be mentioned. It depends largely upon what is retained in the bill; it depends largely on the amount of revenue you feel compelled to raise; it depends largely upon other considerations not now necessary to be mentioned.

Therefore, I assert right here—and let the denial go forth to the country—that before the Finance Committee or on any other occasion, not by my silence, not by my act, not by any word, or by any deed of mine was the present sugar schedule placed in this bill. It was not done to oblige me. It was not done in pursuance of any demand, of any request, or of any suggestion of mine, or in order to conciliate me in the slighest. Other Senators may speak for themselves; I can only speak for myself and as to what occurred in that interview.

When the testimony comes to be printed, it is possible that these inferences, to which I have alluded, may hereafter be unfounded, and it may simply be the errors which sometimes creep into the press in their accounts of these affairs, but that is another reason, in my judgment, why the sessions of the committee ought to have been open, so that the press might be right there to hear what actually occurred, and so that they might publish to the world exactly what took place. The public then would not be subjected to these statements, sometimes ex parte, which are made before committees, and probably not correctly reported. That is all that I have to say upon that subject.

Mr. President, I am not going to speak of the difference between the two parties on the subject of protection or free trade. I differ with my associates upon this question of free raw materials; but it is a respectful difference; it is an unpleasant task. The Senator from Missouri says he regrets to differ with me. I regret to differ with him and with my other associates. I did not suppose in all the discussions which were had amongst the Democrats that there were serious differences upon the question of raw materials; but it seems there were such differences; it seems there are such differences; and the committee, in its wisdom, has seen fit to reflect, I think, their own judgment as well as the judgment of the majority upon this side of the Chamber in framing a duty upon this article.

I am not here to unduly criticise that. I simply respectfully differ from my party friends upon this question. When I first arose, I simply intended to state the Democratic position, as I understood it, to ask for a roll call, and to be content with the result. I have no question that the "protectionists" upon the other side of the Chamber and the "free traders" upon this side of the Chamber will all rally again once more in favor of a duty upon another raw material.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a very few moments in reference to the subject which is now before it for its consideration and action.

I desire to say with perfect frankness to the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] and to the Senate that were I convinced that there was any Democratic principle which required me to vote for free coal I should not hesitate one moment to do it. If I were so anxious to put raw materials upon the free list, as the Senator from New York seems now to be in reference to coal, I should not follow what I remember to be his example. When the question was before the Senate for its action in reference to raw wool I should have voted my sentiments, and not remained quietly in my seat and declined to be recorded.

My purpose in rising here is to state from the standpoint of a Democrat why I submitted to the committee the propriety of placing a reasonable revenue tariff upon coal.

In the first place, we have the facts of history to show that for over fifty years bituminous coal has always been upon the dutiable list. We have the further fact to sustain us that never has a Democratic tariff bill been presented to an American Congress which did not place coal upon the dutiable list.

The Walker tariff, regarded as the very embodiment of a revenue tariff, placed a duty of 30 per cent upon coal; and this tariff, which is not regarded as the embodiment of a revenue tariff or the expression of a true revenue sentiment in the Democratic party, only places a duty of 12½ per cent ad valorem upon coal.

Again, if there was a sentiment in the Democratic platform which demanded of me, as a Democrat, to place coal upon the free list, recognizing, as I do, its obligations, I should not hesitate one moment.

But what is that ptatform? It approves the doctrine of a tendency to freer raw material, and, for argument's sake, at this point permit me to admit that coal is a free raw material. In what connection was that expression used by the Democratic party at Chicago? It was in reference to the bill passed by the House of Representatives putting raw wool upon the free list, and it simply expressed the opinion that as a policy the party should be pledged by its declarations to the adoption of freer raw materials. It was clearly an enunciation of the doctrine of freer raw materials, and not that all raw materials should be free, and was so understood and explained in the letter of acceptance of Mr. Cleveland.

In accordance with that plank and with that letter of acceptance, I should not have thought of asking the committee, from my standpoint as a Democrat, to have maintained that duty at 75 cents a ton. I believe that it should be reduced, and so I expressed myself.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will.

Mr. HILL. Then it seems to me that the Democratic House of Representatives has almost unanimously misconstrued the President's letter of acceptance and the Democratic platform.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from New York has no reason to assert and express his opinion as to what actuated or controlled a majority of the House of Representatives on this or any other question, and especially——

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FAULKNER. In one moment—and especially when that question was not even discussed or an expression of sentiment given by a single gentleman, so far as I remember, in reference to it.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator yield to me a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. FAULKNER. I do.

Mr. HILL. I am not criticising the motives of the Representatives in the other House. I am speaking of results. The House placed this article upon the free list, first the Ways and Means Committee, and next the House itself, and no Democrat sought to make a motion to place a duty upon it.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from New York is as mistaken in his last statement of fact as he was in the expression of his opinion. A serious and earnest debate occurred in the House upon a motion to restore a duty upon coal, which motion was made by a Democrat.

Our Republican friends, acting from the standpoint of politics alone, when it was ascertained that no Democrat was willing to vote for a duty on coal at a rate higher than 50 cents a ton, were willing to vote for an amendment to fix the duty at 75 cents, knowing that it could not be carried, and declined to vote with a minority of Democrats for a duty of 40 or 50 cents upon coal. Their votes declared the Republican policy to be that, if you do not retain the present rate of the McKinley bill, coal shall be placed upon the free list. This action upon their part being prompted by political considerations regardless of the merits of the question.

I was speaking, when diverted by the Senator from New York, on the question of my construction of the platform and the letter of acceptance of President Cleveland. Consequently, when I appeared before the committee I informed its members of the construction which I had placed upon the platform when I canvassed the State of West Virginia and asked the suffrages of its citizens in that great campaign, when there was arrayed against the Democratic party of the State, not only the great influence of the local Republican organization, but also the power and influence of the national party, which gave liberally its talent and money to bring West Virginia into the Republican column.

But even in the face of that opposition and the critical condition of the State, I determined that I would promise nothing to my constituents that I could not ask of a Democratic Congress under a Democratic platform should we carry the election and elect a President and both branches of Congress. I said to them frankly then that if we carry this election, it must be understood that we intend to pass an honest revenue-reform tariff bill, and that I would not be willing to ask a Democratic Congress to put a duty on coal that would be greater than the average duty that will be placed on other articles in that bill.

The tariff was reduced on an average by the Wilson bill some 28 per cent, and by the Senate bill we have reduced it about 25 per cent. When I went before the committee I suggested a reduction of almost 33 per cent, but after full consideration the committee made a reduction of 43 or 44 per cent. Instead of making an equitable reduction upon the general average, as was done on everything else, or only reducing it 33 per cent, as I had requested, which was below either the Wilson or Senate bills reduction upon other articles, they reduced it 43 or 44 per cent below what it has been since 1867, and it was made absolutely and purely a revenue duty.

Therefore, from the standpoint of a Democrat, from the standpoint of one who is anxious to see these high and onerous duties taken off the shoulders of the people, I was anxious to see the same equitable reductions made in this article as in every other, although my entire State is interested in it. Out of 24,000 square miles in that State, 16,000 are underlaid with bituminous coal. Since the idea of putting coal upon the free list has been agitated in the House of Representatives, not a single acre of coal land as such has been sold by a farmer or property owner in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. President, this is one of the evils our people must suffer as the committee is of the opinion that it is an equitable reduction when compared with other duties in the bill.

I desire to say further that there is no question of trust, of combination, or of unlawful conspiracy which has been organized by the bituminous mine owners for the purpose of raising the price of coal in this country. Coal is like the raising of wheat. It is scattered over such a large area of our immense empire that it is as impossible for the coal operators as it is for the farmers to unite together and make a combination and conspiracy by which the price of coal would be affected. Consequently there has never been an attempt in the United States to form a trust or combination or conspiracy to increase the price of bituminous coal. That has been the case, I have understood, with anthracite, but not with bituminous coal operators.

Mr. President, I wish to correct an error of fact stated by the Senator from New York. He said it will be strange if the Senate does not follow its previous record in its votes upon this subject, at least I understood him to say that. Sir, the Senate has never voted for free coal. Since I have been a member of this body it has twice been agitated, but never favorably. Individual Senators, who may now vote against free coal, may have, under other circumstances and conditions, voted in favor of placing coal on the free list. Looking to the interests of the Democratic party, to the conditions that confront us, and to the passing of this relief measure we all realize the necessity which requires us to yield some of our individual opinions in order to unite in the passage of a tariff bill. I have done it; all Senators have done the same; and every party has been compelled to harmonize their views on such a measure, even when the majority was larger than the Democrats can boast of to-day.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. Coal stores for American vessels have been on the free list ever since 1872.

Mr. FAULKNER. That is true.

Mr. ALDRICH. That has been the case through half a dozen different tariff enactments. This bill, for the first time in twenty-five years, puts a duty upon the coal stores of American vessels. I should like to know whether that is done by the Senator's influence, or by what mysterious power that particular result was accomplished.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state very frankly to the Senator that until he suggested the question, if he is correct, I did not know that such was the case in the present bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas——

Mr. FAULKNER. I have not the slightest objection to the usual provision being put in the present bill if the committee deem it proper.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not in this bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I supposed it was.

Mr. VEST. What provision is that?

Mr. ALDRICH. Coal stores for American vessels have been free ever since 1872, and the provision which makes them free is not in this bill.

Mr. VEST. As it came from the other House?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not in the bill as it came from the House. It was not necessary to put it in that bill, because all coal was made free in the bill as it passed the House; and in putting the duty back upon coal it is proposed to put a duty upon the coal stores of American vessels.

Mr. FAULKNER. I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island. I think there ought to be such a provision in this bill. I will say to the Senator and to the Senate that until he suggested it it never occurred to me that it was not in the bill.

Mr. President, there is another reason which has influenced me in my action. Neither taking the duty off of or putting it on coal will change its price to a single human being except along the northeastern seacoast of our country.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Missouri says the effect will be to cheapen coal.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have no doubt the Senator from Missouri was referring to the fact which we all know, that just along the Atlantic seacoast, down perhaps as far as Baltimore, by giving free coal it would cheapen to some extent the cost of bituminous coal to the Atlantic seaports; but I assert here as a fact which is known to every man who has studied the question, that it would not cheapen the cost of bituminous coal to a single man or woman one mile inland from the seacoast. If there is one mile of transportation in which there are two handlings of Nova Scotia coal it would be impossible to compete with the American product.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. The reduction, then, even afforded by this bill is of no benefit to any living person?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is a benefit to those upon the Atlantic seaboard and to the great transportation lines in New England and New York. Outside of those great transportation lines it is a benefit to nobody.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator explain that to me a little more fully. It is a very interesting point that he is making, and I should like to have him elaborate it. A very large portion of our New England cities are a considerable distance inland.

My own city, for instance, is some 45 miles from the seaboard. Coal is brought in barges from the Middle States to Boston, Providence, or Norwich, and is transported by rail to the interior. There are thirty cities and sixty towns of over 4,000 inhabitants in Massachusetts. The Nova Scotia coal will come in barges from Nova Scotia. How does it happen that there is any difference in that particular?

Mr. FAULKNER. The cost of transportation and the two handlings have always been assumed——

Mr. HOAR. But I am speaking of coal which comes from Nova Scotia, to say nothing about the greater cheapness of Nova Scotia ocean transportation, which is in foreign vessels and not in our vessels. The Nova Scotia coal is to be landed on our coast in their barges or other coal-carrying vessels side by side with the Cumberland coal or the Pocahontas coal or the coal that comes from Baltimore or Norfolk. How can there be any advantage to the American coal?

Mr. FAULKNER. I have not gone into that subject in detail, but that has been the expression of opinion of all those engaged in the trade.

The Senator will have a full opportunity to understand that question when this bill is passed, because I can say to him that with the duty now given in the bill upon bituminous coal it will result in opening the Boston markets to the delivery of Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. HOAR. I rose to call the Senator's attention to what seemed to me to be a misstatement of the fact. He answers me with a prophecy. Facts are things that can be established. Prophecies are rather uncertain.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator will find that the result of this duty will open Nova Scotia coal to the Boston market and will give him coal free.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from West Virginia allow me?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. I understand his proposition to be that the people of his section consent to this reduction of the duty on coal because of their desire to take burdens off of the sholders of the people, and that it will take the burdens off of the shoulders of the people only along the seaboard. I wish to know if the reason why he advocates the reduction of the duty on coal is that it may help the people in New York and Boston and along the seaboard?

Mr. SQUIRE. I would like to ask the Senator from West Virginia a question, not to interrupt him in the line of his remarks.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let me answer the Senator from Connecticut on what I regard as a very vital question, for his remark is based on a misinterpretation of my language. I did not say that the people of West Virginia or any of her people had consented to a duty of 40 cents on coal. I have simply acted in this matter from the standpoint of a representative of those people, believing that I should act in accordance with the principles of the Democratic party as laid down at Chicago, and announced in the letter of the gentleman who accepted its nomination for the Presidency. Now, I will hear the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SQUIRE. I wish to ask the Senator from West Virginia whether he understands that if the duty be entirely removed from coal in the United States the Canadian Government under the present existing law would also admit coal free of duty?

Mr. FAULKNER. I think not. I am satisfied the Canadian Government would not admit coal free of duty if we admitted it free of duty in this bill.

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand that in 1883 the Dominion Government enacted a law under which if the Government of the United States took the duty off of a large number of articles, among which were coal and coke, the governor-general by proclamation had the right and privilege of making similar articles imported into Canada free of duty. This act was amended in 1888, and coal was stricken from the list of articles which the governor-general by proclamation could make free.

Mr. FAULKNER. The influences at work, then, are much more potent and powerful at this time. After the arrangements which have been made with the syndicate which is now working the Nova Scotia coal mines, and the very advantageous leases which have been granted for the first time in the history of that country, Canada would certainly not think of taking off the duty or of adopting reciprocity in coal.

Mr. SQUIRE. Is it not necessary in order to have a reciprocal duty with Canada now that the Dominion of Canada should pass another act?

Mr. FAULKNER. Of course it is. That is unquestioned.

Mr. SQUIRE. We get nothing out of it now.

Mr. FAULKNER. Nothing whatever.

Mr. PEFFER. We have had some information touching who will be benefited by a reduction of duty on coal or by placing coal on the free list. I wish to inquire of the Senator who will be benefited by retaining a duty on coal?

Mr. FAULKNER. I must be as frank in answering that question as I would any other on the floor of the Senate. Mr. President, the only persons who could possibly be benefited by any duty upon coal are those engaged in the occupation of mining in the States of West Virginia, Maryland, Pennsylvania, and Virginia, for the reason that they are the only ones to come in competition with the Nova Scotia coal.

The rest of the country would not be affected in any way at all, unless it would be perhaps some of the States on the Pacific coast, but I am alluding to the Central and Eastern States. Those are the only four States, in my judgment, that would in any way be benefited by this duty.

Mr. PEFFER. Will the Senator name the States again?

Mr. FAULKNER. Maryland, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and Virginia. Those are the only States that ship to the eastern seaboard, and that come in competition with Nova Scotia coal; and therefore they would be the only States that would be in any way benefited by this duty.

But I must go further, and be entirely frank. I do not believe that after one or two years of experience even with free coal the mines of West Virginia, Virginia, and Pennsylvania could not compete successfully with the Nova Scotia mines. After the paralysis that would exist for a year or two shall have passed, the enterprise, pluck, and business sagacity of the American operator would I hope make up for the difference in cost of transportation; and I will hail with delight the hour when I can stand upon the floor of the Senate and advocate free coal, in the interest not only of the Eastern section of this country, but of my own State.

I believe the duty the Finace Committee has imposed upon coal will demonstrate within one or two years to the people of those four States that they will and must be able to compete with Nova Scotia by the adoption of new appliances and cheaper transportation, without any reduction of wages of labor. Witness the condition of those States to-day. Strikes, lock-outs, involving the interests of thousands of miners, all growing out of the question of wages. If without any preparation, if without any notice a policy is adopted different from that which has existed for fifty years, you fall from a high protective duty of 75 cents, prohibitory I may say in its character, to free coal, could you estimate the injury which your policy would entail during the next two or three years upon the people of those States?

Mr. PEFFER. That is what we said about free wool.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator asks me, and it is a pertinent question—he almost throws it at me with the semblance of a taunt—what about free wool?

Mr. PEFFER. I say what the Senator has said about coal is what we said about free wool.

Mr. FAULKNER. If the constituents of the Senator from Kansas stood in the position where mine stand to-day I hope he would find me acting as fairly and as justly to them as I hope he will act towards mine. The question of free wool has been debated in this country for three great campaigns. My State is a large woolgrowing State.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask whether in the campaign in the Senator's State, with which he is familiar, the public speakers on the Democratic side advocated free coal or a duty on coal?

Mr. FAULKNER. They advocated in the campaign of 1892, under the platform, an equitable and fair reduction of the duty in proportion to the reduction on other protected articles.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who addressed the people in Massachusetts in the same campaign, addressed the people in West Virginia, did he not?

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not remember whether that distinguished Senator addressed my constituents in West Virginia in 1892. I think not.

Mr. SQUIRE. I would like to ask a question there to make the point clear. I listened to the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia with great interest because I am very much interested in this question of a duty on coal. I believe the present duty of 75 cents a ton ought to be maintained in justice to the coal-producing States on the Pacific coast, but I wish to ask a question to make it clear. Am I to infer from what the Senator has said that he means to say he is satisfied with a duty of 40 cents a ton, representing as he does a coal-producing State, a State producing bituminous coal? Is he satisfied with this duty or does he think it ought to be somewhat higher? He said he did advocate some reduction in the present rate, but is he satisfied with the duty imposed under the terms of the bill?

Mr. FAULKNER. My own judgment was in favor of putting a duty of 50 cents a ton upon it, which was 33 per cent reduction, but I yielded without a moment's hesitation to the judgment of the Finance Committee when they considered, after mature deliberation, that it ought to be reduced to 40 cents a ton.

Mr. SQUIRE. Why?

Mr. FAULKNER. I supposed they took into consideration other articles made dutiable in the bill, and equalized as they considered the rates upon all. They are more competent than I am to speak, and I propose, as I stated to them then, and I have no hesitation in stating now, to follow their judgment in reference to this question of duty.

But I want to answer the Senator from Kansas. I wish to say to the Senator from Kansas, that when the Democratic party in 1888 took the position in favor of free wool, although my State was a large woolgrowing State, and I may say growing a grade of wool equal to that of Pennsylvania and Ohio XX wool, I did not hesitate in that campaign to go upon the stump and to advocate the policy that the party had outlined in the Congress of the United States. It was a very dangerous measure for us then, but my party had taken its position on that question through its action in the House of Representatives, and whether we failed or succeeded I did not hesitate to follow the lead of the party of which I was an humble member.

It came very near causing the defeat of the Democratic party in West Virginia in 1888. The people were not prepared for it, and the woolgrowers from one end of the State to the other rallied under the leadership of well-known and old-time Democrats against free wool. We did not give up the struggle, but carried the State by 688 votes. We went into the campaign again in 1890, advocating free wool, because the Democratic party announced its position in favor of free wool, and we had no hesitation in assuming that position before our constituency and making the issue squarely upon it.

Mr. SQUIRE. I would be pleased to ask another question.

Mr. FAULKNER. Let me first get through with this historical narration. We increased the Democratic majority in that campaign. We went before the people again under this very policy, announced as the policy of the party in 1892, approving the act of the House of Representatives in the Chicago platform putting wool on the free list. We submitted it to the people again, and I am glad to say that the woolgrowers of West Virginia, realizing the fact that they had been misled by the Woolen Manufactures' Association of this country, wheeled around and gave their almost unanimous support to the Democratic party upon the free-wool platform.

They believed that they were being made the mere tools of this association, which, with its perfect organization, as the sole purchasers of the American product, had the power and exercised it to control the price of that product. That this association, with its thorough organization, monthly fixed the price of American wool. It was the belief of the woolgrowers in my State that that association fixed the price of American wool, and that the higher you made the duty on the immense product of foreign wool that had to be imported, amounting to 160,000,000 pounds to 200,000,000 pounds, just in that proportion did they lower the price of American wool.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I must confess that I did not fully understand the Senator from West Virginia, but if he means to say that there is any organization or association in the United States that has ever undertaken to fix the price of wool——

Mr. PLATT. Or to depress it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or to depress the price of wool in any manner, the Senator from West Virginia is entirely mistaken. No such organization exists or ever has existed in this country.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether there is not a manufacturers' association composed of the woolen manufacturers throughout this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; there is an organization of woolen-manufacturers, but they never have undertaken to confer in relation to or to fix prices of wool. They meet only once a year.

Mr. FAULKNER. Wait a moment I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether that association is not thoroughly and completely organized.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not understand what the Senator means by thoroughly and completely organized. They have a president, a vice-president, a secretary, a treasurer, and various other officers, but that they have any organization to affect prices, or have ever undertaken in any way to control prices is entirely untrue.

Mr. FAULKNER. One more question. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether that woolen manufacturers' association, or at least the members who compose it, are not the sole purchasers of the wool clip of the United States?

Mr. ALDRICH. It must be very evident that the people who produce wool in the United States must sell their clip to the woolen manufacturers of the United States, because they can not send it anywhere else. That is the only part of the statement of the Senator from West Virginia in which he is in any sense correct.

Mr. FAULKNER. Now, we have all the facts.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no; the Senator from West Virginia is entirely mistaken.

Mr. FAULKNER. Human nature is always the same and it is easy to suggest the conclusion.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator is entirely mistaken as to the fact. There is no business arrangement or agreement of any nature or description as to purchases or prices of wool or otherwise between the members of the National Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. LODGE. They neither fix the price of things sold nor those bought.

Mr. ALDRICH. Nor the product.

Mr. LODGE. It is a mere association without reference to price.

Mr. FAULKNER. Are you gentlemen members of that association?

Mr. LODGE. I have not the slightest interest in it.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is the Senator from Rhode Island a member of it?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not.

Mr. FAULKNER. Are you part of its executive board?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then, how do you know what the association does?

Mr. LODGE. Because all of its proceedings are published, and they are just as well known as the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. Like the sugar trust.

Mr. LODGE. No; like the Senate, not like the sugar trust.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then, without any knowledge whatever the Senator makes denial of what the Woolen Manufacturers' Association do? The woolgrowers of West Virginia believe that the association do control the price of wool.

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not know what the woolgrowers of West Virginia believe. They may have been deluded into the belief the Senator from West Virginia has indicated. I am stating what the facts are, and I am stating them from a personal knowledge of those facts.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator told me he is not a member of this association, that he is not on the executive board of the association, and yet he tells me that they have nothing to do with fixing the cost of any article produced or any article bought. On the admitted facts, as stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, I say that human nature will assert itself, and that greed and selfishness, having the power, and by his admission being the sole purchasers of the wool clip of this country, will naturally dictate and control the price of the home market.

Mr. PEFFER. Let me ask the Senator where he gets the authority for his statement that the Democratic party in its platform has pledged itself in favor of removing all the duties from wool?

Mr. FAULKNER. I thought I had stated that previously. It is in the allusion in the platform in which it declares in favor of the tendency to freer raw material. I believe the purpose of that expression was to indorse the act of the House which was passed putting wool on the free list, and which never came up in the Senate, because it was pigeonholed by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PEFFER. Does not the Senator consider that that is a matter of construction? How am I, for example, listening to a Democratic speaker who is talking in favor of free wool, to understand except what he tells me outside of the platform, when there is nothing of that kind in the platform?

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not know whether the Democratic speakers in Kansas made the point squarely, boldly, and manfully beore their constituents as we did in West Virginia. We declared that if the Democratic party came into power it meant to place wool on the free list, and we did it in three campaigns; in the last campaign, as I stated, the woolgrowers became fully convinced that it was to their interest to try free wool under any circumstances, as they had seen the price of their product going down every day as higher duties were placed upon it.

Mr. PEFFER. I understand all that, but I am inquiring as to the authority, so that I may find it.

Mr. FAULKNER. The authority is found in acts passed in the Fifty-first and Fifty-second Congresses, and, as I claim, the particular reference in the platform was an indorsement of the free-wool bill of the last Congress.

Mr. PEFFER. The Senator concedes that the words are not to be found in the platform?

Mr. FAULKNER. The words relating to free raw materials, no.

Mr. PEFFER. I do not say free raw material, but free wool.

Mr. FAULKNER. The term "free wool" does not appear in the platform.

Mr. WASHBURN. If it will not interrupt the Senator from West Virginia, although perhaps not exactly in the line of his remarks, as an allusion was made by him earlier to one point, I should like for my own information and satisfaction to have a reply. Among other things the Senator said that in the last campaign he pledged the people of his State that if he were elected to the Senate he would never vote for any tariff bill that was not a genuine revenue tariff bill. I should like to ask him if this bill, which is likely to pass, and which I have no doubt he will vote for, is that kind of a genuine Democratic revenue bill?

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator from Minnesota has simply misquoted my language. I never said I stated to my constituents I would never vote for any bill that was not a genuine tariff reform bill.

Mr. WASHBURN. I did not say that.

Mr. FAULKNER. I stated that if the election was carried and both Houses of Congress and the President were Democratic, the Democrats would seek to pass a genuine tariff reform bill, and that in the formation of that bill coal would have to suffer a reduction in proportion to all other protected articles.

Mr. WASHBURN. I understood the Senator to say that he would never support any bill that was not a genuine revenue bill, and so assured his people. I was going to ask him if he felt that by supporting this bill he would have made good his pledge. Our people in the Northwest have suffered so severely, so many of our great interests being absolutely slaughtered, with free wool and free agricultural products almost without exception, that I should like to have them know this bill, which does that thing, is a genuine tariff reform revenue bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think the Senator from Minnesota can bring me to the absolute and unqualified admission he desires from me. I will say to the Senator that I shall vote for this bill with pleasure. It gets rid of the onerous and burdensome taxation of the McKinley act. It reduces largely the duty on woolens and other necessaries of life, and still leaves the manufacturers a sufficient protection. Although it may not be as far as I would like to go on these and other lines, yet I shall gladly welcome its passage rather than allow the present act to remain upon the statute books.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Senator has been drawn into a slight debate on the subject of wool. I want to bring him back to his mutton, to the coal question. I understood the Senator in answering me to say that he was not satisfied with the duty upon coal as proposed in this bill, but he accepted it perforce because he could not do any better under the circumstances, and because he thought that the rate proposed in the bill was an average with the reductions over the McKinley rates. Is that correct?

Mr. FAULKNER. That seemed to be the judgment of the committee, and I yielded to it.

Mr. SQUIRE. I understand that answer fully, but I wish to hear the Senator on one other point, and that is reciprocity. Is it fair, when the Dominion of Canada charges the United States 60 cents a ton duty for coal brought in from Canada that we should reduce the duty on coal in the United States to 40 cents a ton without an opportunity to make a fair and equitable reciprocity arrangement on that subject? Would it not be better, in other words, to give authority to the President to make such a reduction dependent upon legislation had in the Dominion of Canada, so as to have the interests fair, impartial, and equitable as between the people of that country and the people of the United States? Inasmuch as this has been the subject of consideration by the Dominion Government heretofore, would it not be wise and prudent for us to insert something upon which we might arrange an agreement?

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to state to the Senator from Washington that I am not interested from the standpoint of my constituents in the question of reciprocity.

Mr. SQUIRE. You are interested as an American citizen and as an American Senator.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have left the question of reciprocity to those gentlemen who are interested in that question. It would be of no benefit to the States of West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, or Pennsylvania, but to Iowa, Illinois, Washington, and those States it would be of advantage.

Mr. SQUIRE. Would it not do good to the interests of the whole United States if coal should be introduced into Canada at the same rate that the Canadian coal is introduced into the United States?

Mr. FAULKNER. I have fully considered that question. It certainly would not affect beneficially the interests of my State. I think it would be beneficial to Ohio, Illinois, and Iowa, and perhaps to all the Northwestern States, but little coal would be shipped from my State to Canada.

Mr. President, I have occupied the time of the Senate much longer than I intended. I am sorry that I have become an obstructionist on the Democratic side, and I assure the Senate it was done almost unconsciously upon my part, as I did not expect to occupy five minutes when I arose to express my views in reference to this question. I wish to add merely one more word and then I propose to close.

Upon the question of raw material, I desire to say coal is not a raw material in any sense whatever.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator point out some articles in this bill which are usually understood to be raw materials?

Mr. FAULKNER. No, sir; I shall not undertake to point out any articles or involve myself in a controversy with any other interest. I am not here for that purpose; but I hold that a raw material must be something in the mind of everyone that enters into and becomes a part of the finished product. When you take the coal from the ground and put it upon the cars it is a complete and finished product. It is then ready for all of the use you can make of it.

There is no other form into which you can transpose it. Upon what theory do Senators maintain that it is a raw material? To the manufacturing industry? Its use for the purpose of manufacturing is insignificant compared to its other uses. It is employed almost exclusively, at the present day, for steam purposes. Its greatest use is for transportation by land and water. It is used to a limited extent only for domestic consumption—I mean for the stove, the kitchen, and the household. But few use bituminous coal for that purpose. Anthracite coal is the great domestic coal.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to ask the Senator if the same is not true with respect to flour which it is proposed to put on the free list? Is not flour a finished product also?

Mr. FAULKNER. I would say it was.

Mr. SQUIRE. I would ask the same thing about lumber?

Mr. FAULKNER. I would say that lumber is not a finished product—not undressed lumber.

Mr. SQUIRE. How about dressed lumber?

Mr. FAULKNER. I am not an expert on that subject. Senators declare that under the provisions of this bill great injury will be done their States. Lumber is on the free list. Salt is on the free list. Wool is on the free list. All those are large products of my State; but her people are not complaining in reference to its provisions.

Mr. SQUIRE. May I interrupt the Senator from West Virginia further?

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Senator has said that he was interested mainly because the interests of his State are in this coal question, and perhaps exclusively——

Mr. FAULKNER. The Senator misstates me. I did not speak of the interests my State had in it. I said I had not an interest in the question of reciprocity, as it did not in my judgment affect my State.

Mr. SQUIRE. I think the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have not studied the question of reciprocity, or the results which might flow from it, as in my judgment it would not affect the coal interests of the States of West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, or Pennsylvania.

Mr. SQUIRE. I desire to ask the Senator one further question. I do not desire to harass or annoy him. But is it not important in this phase of the question? The people of the New England States are under the terms of this bill to be served with coal from Nova Scotia, are they not? Do you suppose they will be?

Mr. FAULKNER. That will have to be tested by the experience of the future.

Mr. SQUIRE. I hold in my hand a statement in regard to that subject entitled Nova Scotia vs. Virginia, some comments on the prospectus of the Dominion Coal Company. It is dated Norfolk City, Va., January 15.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have read it.

Mr. SQUIRE. The Senator has read it. It is assumed that the article is in the main correct? Is it not from a responsible source?

Mr. FAULKNER. There is a great deal in it, and I do not want to pass judgment on an article in that way.

Mr. SQUIRE. Is it true that if the New England States should be supplied with coal to any large extent from Nova Scotia that that would lessen the consumption of coal from the mines of Virginia and West Virginia?

Mr. FAULKNER. I should assume so.

Mr. SQUIRE. Then have not the people of those States a direct interest in this question?

Mr. FAULKNER. Reciprocity, in my judgment, does not touch that question.

Mr. SQUIRE. I leave the subject of reciprocity. Would not the fact that a large amount of the supply of coal for the New England States is to come from Nova Scotia so reduce the output of the coal mines of Virginia and West Virginia as to make them less valuable as property and make the mining of coal relatively dearer there, so that it would directly affect the interest of every consumer of coal in all the Southern States? Would not this reduction of the output of the Southern coal mines affect the railroad and other important interests very largely?

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think that the question will affect the price of coal in West Virginia one way or the other. I can say that to the Senator without hesitation.

One other question now, Mr. President, I desire simply to refer to, in connection with raw material. The Democratic principle upon which the doctrine of free raw material rests is this: Where the cost of the raw material enters into the cost of the finished product and the cost of the raw material is enhanced in price by reason of the duty upon it, that duty ought to be as low as possible, or the article ought to be put upon the free list so as to make the price of the finished product as low as possible. Mr. President, I am satisfied there is not a Senator here who would not verify the statement I am about to make, even the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

There has never been a tariff bill framed by either party in which those who were considering its several schedules of rates took into consideration, in fixing the duty upon the finished product, the question whether coal had been placed upon the dutiable or the free list. Therefore the application of the Democratic principle in reference to free raw material could have no application whatever to the subject of coal.

Mr. PERKINS. In my remarks, Mr. President, a few weeks ago upon the tariff bill now under consideration, I took occasion to state that when we reached this paragraph I should refrain from voting upon it for the reason that I have a personal indirect interest in coal mines upon the Pacific coast. It matters not that they have been unprofitable. I deem it the duty of every member of Congress to refrain from voting upon any measure in which he has a pecuniary interest. His relation to the people is similar to that of a judge upon the bench or a juror in the box. He has no right to cast a vote that places him in a position to be criticised for his act.

Yet, Mr. President, I can not refrain from stating that I believe, so far as the Pacific coast is concerned, the removal of the duty upon coal would not decrease the cost one farthing to the consumer. I believe that the proposed reduction from 75 cents a ton to 40 cents a ton upon coal from foreign countries will go into the pocket of the foreign mine owner and the foreign shipowner. We have no way of judging of the future but by the past. Experience has demonstrated to us in California at least that it is the domestic output of coal in the States of Washington, Oregon, and California which has held in check the importation of coal from foreign countries.

Only a few years since it was possible for the coal combination of San Francisco to buy up and control all the coal that was afloat in shipping from Australia and Great Britain to the Pacific coast, and the result was that the price of coal advanced from $5 per ton to $10 per ton by the cargo. That price gave a new impetus to our mine owners in the States of the Pacific coast, and we commenced to turn out our domestic coal, and from that time to the present those mines on the Pacific coast have been a check upon the great coal trusts that oppress the people in the manner the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PEFFER] has alluded to.

The Senator from Massachusetts asked my friend from West Virginia how it would affect the transportation business. I want to answer that question, because I have some practical knowledge of the transportation of coal by water. Fortunately for us, only an American-built ship can engage at the present time in the coastwise business of our country. But the moment they are to ply to a foreign port ships of foreign build will come here in competition with our own people, and instead of the coal that is now lying in West Virginia being transported from tide water from Newport News or Baltimore in American vessels to the home of my friend from Massachusetts, near Boston, coal will be taken from Nova Scotia in vessels of foreign build, manned by foreigners, who will carry out from this country that which they receive for the transportation of the coal.

Such is the condition of affairs on the Pacific coast to-day. Our coal from British Columbia is transported from Vancouver Island to San Francisco, San Diego, and other ports in California in English, German, and other foreign-built vessels. It is transported in what are known as English tramps, that come here under contract with their crew and with officers for a term of years to engage in the business, and the wages for which they work is at least 50 per cent less than that which is paid the crews of American vessels. We have an object lesson brought directly home to us in the transportation business on the Pacific coast. The moment you remove all of the duty you not only strike a blow at the American miners of coal, but you strike a blow at the American shipping of the Pacific coast that will be almost fatal to that industry.

We have to-day in the State of Washington alone nearly twenty thousand men engaged in the industry of coal mining, or directly and indirectly dependent upon that industry. The same may be said of Oregon and California; thirty thousand people or more are interested in the industry. The 40 cents a ton duty the committee have agreed to report will perhaps enable them to exist, but if you remove it altogether it will be impossible for them to continue to operate those coal mines.

Our mines are differently located in California and Washington from those in the Island of Vancouver. The veins stand up at an angle of forty-five degrees, and in some cases are almost perpendicular. This necessitates expensive pumping works. If the mines are permitted to fill up cavings take place. The result is that the mines become almost useless, and when they are again worked new shafts must be opened and new machinery erected. Expensive transportation is required to take the coal from the interior to tide water. The distance varies from 10 to 100 miles inland, while in British Columbia their mines are almost at the water's edge, where the ships can go under the chutes and take the coal and transport it to market without any very extraordinary expense attending it.

But we have demonstrated, as I said before, that removing the duty from coal would not cheapen it to the consumer one farthing. In the year 1892 we imported into San Francisco alone 65,000 tons of anthracite coal. It came in free of duty under the present law, not one cent being paid to the Government. It came from Wales and Great Britain. Yet that coal was not given to the consumer for one sou markee less than the prevailing market price, which was regulated by our domestic coal.

It is estimated that we have in the State of Washington alone 1,000,000 acres of coal land. It has been demonstrated that there are deposits of coal extending all over that vast area. Nearly as great an extent exists in the two States of Oregon and California. Our people to-day, while cut off from silver mining and some of our manufacturing interests, hope to develop those mines and to give our people cheap coal, which is done by competing with each other.

I believe the committee have done a wise act in placing 40 cents duty upon coal. I believe they would have performed a wiser act had they permitted it to remain where it was at 75 cents a ton. As the Senator from West Virginia says, coal is a finished product after it is raised from the mine and placed in the coal bunkers ready for shipment. As proof of that fact, I can sell you through friends any quantity of coal as it lies in the mines for 10 cents a ton royalty, and our people are satisfied to sell it to the consumer, to the poor friends of my friend from Kansas, for 15 cents a ton, covered by a margin. I will enter into a contract to give him all the coal he wants for the next twenty years for 15 cents a ton margin of profit to them.

In the great West we are not in a coal trust. We are not coal barons; but we are satisfied with a fair and reasonable profit. We are satisfied to live up to the teachings of the golden rule: "Do unto others as ye would that other should do unto you."

Our neighbors in British Columbia are standing ready to take advantage of the bill under consideration. Already they are shouting with exultation that the duty is removed from lumber, and that free wool is to come in to compete with us. Allow me to read what one of the leading journals of Victoria, British Columbia, says about the coal trade:

> The mine owners expect to more than double their production should Congress pass the proposed tariff bill. Even with the present duty of 75 cents a ton British coal practically monopolizes the California markets. Coal in British Columbia is mined much cheaper than in Washington. In one or two of the mines the wages will barely average $2.50 a day, exclusive of board. If the new law goes into effect you can look for a boom in the British Columbia coal mines as well as in the lumber markets.

This is the testimony of our neighbors in British Columbia. They at least are commending us, if our own people do not, for the legislation we are enacting for Canada and British Columbia. I for one am in favor of an American policy for the American people. I believe not only in protecting coal, but lumber, and iron, and every other American industry that comes in competion with foreign labor. While, as I said, I shall refrain from voting upon this measure because I have an indirect interest in mines, I believe it is a just and a wise provision as contrasted with free coal. If we can not get 75 cents a ton protection, for revenue, if you please, then we will take 50 cents or 40 cents.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber at the time the Senator from New York [Mr. HILL] moved to place coal on the free list, as I was at that time engaged on the special investigating committee. I am very glad to know, however, that the Senator from New York has taken this important step. It satisfies my mind that the heart of the Senator from New York is in the right place.

The question of coal is an important one. In the State in which I have the honor to reside and represent in part in this Chamber I think I am safe in saying that 95 per cent of all the fuel consumed is coal.

It is the fuel of the rich and the poor, the fuel of all classes of people; and in a climate such as we have and such as ranges throughout the United States it is not a matter of choice with any citizen whether he will use one class of fuel or another. The fuel which makes the homes of our people warm, which is essential to sustain life and bring some degree of comfort to the masses of our people, ought to be admitted free of duty to them, especially when we are producing and can produce coal as cheaply as any section of the known civilized world.

I approve the sentiments of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] when he says that he is in favor of an American policy. I believe in Americanism. I believe in America. I believe in an American policy. But I do not believe in that kind of a so-called American policy which taxes every article of necessity used by the poor people of this country. I believe an enlightened and just American policy would dictate the taking of the burden of taxation from every essential necessary of life so far as that can be done consistent with raising the requisite revenue to conduct our Government.

Coal is one of the articles that the people must have. It is bought in various quantities throughout our larger cities. It is bought by the pound and the mere basketful at a time, to such a great extent does poverty prevail. To say that the coal they purchase by the mere basketful should be taxed to any extent whatever, it seems to me, is an outrage upon their rights and upon justice.

Mr. President, owners of the coal mines would have no occasion whatever to complain about the removal of this tax upon coal. It has been their policy, so far as I understand it, to drive out American labor, naturalized and native born, and give its place to a class of laborers brought into this country for the specific purpose of mining coal below living rates.

If I am informed correctly there are something like six thousand coal miners in the State of Pennsylvania to-day who are under arms, who are violating the laws of that State in various strikes against a reduction of their wages. Their wages have been reduced to a point where a self-respecting American citizen, if I am correctly informed, can not earn a livelihood for himself and his family, and he has been compelled by force of circumstances to cease mining coal and go into some other occupation or to go upon the streets in absolute idleness.

I do not propose to consume the time of the Senate in discussing this matter. I simply rose for the purpose of expressing the hope that the Senate in voting upon this measure will be guided somewhat by the necessities of the great mass of our people and put this important item upon the free list.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the speech of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER], because it showed very clearly the nature of the arguments which have been addressed to the people of West Virginia on the question of wool. To them the association of woolen manufacturers had been represented as a trust formed for the purpose of controlling the price of wool and woolens. It is perfectly well known, I think it ought to be to all the people of this country, that that association of woolen manufacturers in no respect is formed for the purpose of controlling prices in any way. It has no business quality of that kind. The members make no agreements to buy or to sell. They are rivals in business and have no resemblance to any trust or syndicate.

The Senator from West Virginia also had a great deal to say in regard to the matter of free coal, He said that the principle of the Democratic party was freer coal. There is much virtue in that letter "r" just as there is much virtue in an "if." It was not so understood among the people of my State, nor was that the ground taken by the Democratic orators and the Democratic party in my State in regard to the question of coal. I have here the platforms of the Democratic party of my State for 1889, 1991, and 1892 on this point. That of 1889 says:

We give our hearty support to the petition of the present Republican governor of this State and other leading iron and steel manufacturers of both political parties, addressed to the New York members of Congress, asking for free coal and iron ore and lower duties upon pig iron, and we commend their efforts to save this important industry, threatened with extinction in our section of the country through failure to adopt tariff duties to the changed condition of the iron market.

In 1891 they said:

We renew our demand for the repeal of all its provisions which increase rates of duties, and for the enactment of a genuine measure of tariff reform. We believe that all taxes upon food, fuel, fibers and ores, and also upon the crude or partly manufactured materials necessary in the process of our domestic industries should be repealed, thus affording genuine protection alike to the workingmen and the manufacturers of our Commonwealth.

In 1892 they said:

We demand for the true development of our great industries that raw materials shall be admitted free of duty, and we particularly emphasize the necessity of free wool, coal, iron, lumber, and all drugs, dyes, and chemicals used in our manufacturing enterprises.

There was the attitude of the Democratic party in Massachusetts in regard to coal. That is positive; they used the positive and not the comparative. They said they wanted free coal and not freer coal. They failed utterly to recognize the principle so correctly laid down by the Senator from West Virginia, that a duty was necessary in order to protect the wages of the coal miners. At the same time the Democratic governor of Massachusetts, from whose volume of speeches I have already quoted in reference to iron, made several statements which I think are of interest now. The book may not be a great addition to the literature of eloquence or of economic thought, but it is interesting as showing what the Democratic party at that time thought fit to advocate for the purpose of securing votes from the people. He said to the convention of Democratic clubs in 1888:

Economy, low taxes, free wool, free lumber, free salt, free coal, cheaper necessaries of life, and raw materials that quicken industry, we believe to be the true American policy.

Again he said in 1889:

Now contrast that evasive platform with the declaration of Democracy upon the question. We do not hesitate to say, in answer to the demands of business interests and of the whole people, that we stand for free wool, for free coal to make more cheerful the fireside of the humblest home and to give our industries greater prosperity. Free iron we demand, free raw materials we demand, and cheaper necessaries of life. There is no evasion in the platform of the Democratic party.

He said again in a speech at Dedham, as late as October 9, 1892:

If giving free wool, coal, ore, copper, and tin to our great industries, with a protective tariff on their finished product, is free trade, I mistake the sentiment of New England if it does not demand this benefit, under whatever name it comes.

Again he said in his speech at Haverhill in October, 1893:

What is the Democratic policy? It is to reduce tariff taxation so as to cheapen the necessaries of life and give free raw materials to our industries. This is the policy of the Democratic party as declared in its national conventions and State conventions over and over again, in bills which it has formulated, and in votes which it has given.

Just as certain as that the McKinley bill has got to go, it is also certain that in its place will come a Democratic bill, with free wool, coal, iron ore, and other raw materials for our industries, and still raising the revenue necessary for public purposes.

That was the bill the Democratic governor of Massachusetts sketched, and it is very easy to see how closely it resembles the bill now before us.

Upon the subject of coal I desire to call the attention of the Senate to one point which seems to me of real importance. There was formed not long ago in my State a company known as the Dominion Coal Company, its president and principal manager being Mr. Henry M. Whitney, a well-known business man of great ability, and a brother of the former Secretary of the Navy, Mr. William C. Whitney. They bought up some large mines in Nova Scotia and elsewhere beyond the Canadian borders. The company was formed with American capital.

It was formed with the idea that they were to have free coal into this country. The old Nova Scotia mines were not, as I have always understood, serious competitors with the coal of Virginia, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia because they contained so much sulphur that they were not desirable for manufacturing purposes. The new mines which have been bought by the Dominion Coal Company are, I understand, a much better quality of coal.

Now, the situation is just this: That Dominion Coal Company, controlled by American capital and American capitalists, has absolute control of the Canadian market, where it has a protective duty on coal; and it was the desire of its owners to get free entrance to the American market.

In that way they would have a protected market under their hands in Canada and a free market open to them just over the border in which they could come and compete with their coal produced at much lower wages than those paid in this country.

I for one think that it might be very desirable if we could apply to coal the same provision which was applied to the great cereals of this country in a previous clause of the bill. If they would open the markets of Canada to our coal and allow us to get in there without the payment of a duty, I am inclined to think that, owing to our much greater supplies of coal and our neighborhood to the market in certain parts of this country, the balance would be perhaps largely in favor of the American mine owner. But as the matter is now adjusted it is arranged to give to a group of American capitalists a free entrance or an entrance at a lower rate of duty to the American market, while they have control of every Canadian market under a protective system.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I desire to state to the Senator, in line with the argument he is now making, that I have prepared an amendment which I propose to offer. It is to insert after the word "ton," in line 10, on page 80, the following words:

But the above product shall be admitted free of duty from any country which imposes no import duty on the like product when exported from the United States.

I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that this is the exact language used in connection with paragraph 190, on page 43, with respect to eight agricultural products—wheat, flour, buckwheat, corn, maize, and other agricultural products of our country. I propose to offer that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. LODGE. I am very glad to hear that that amendment is to be offered, for I think it will test the sincerity of the makers of this bill. As the bill stands now it reduces the duty on coal, and very possibly when the bill reappears from conference there may be no duty at all on coal, and in that case the situation will arise which I have pointed out, by which this coal company of which Mr. Whitney is president, organized with American capital, would have a protective market in Canada and free entrance to the markets of the United States.

The amendment of the Senator from North Dakota is in the nature of a reciprocity provision, and therefore falls into the line of the Republican policy; but the bill as it now stands abandons the pledge of the Democratic party made to the people of New England in favor of free coal. At the same time, I have been told—I do not know how correctly—that while this lower rate of duty will discriminate more or less effectively against most Canadian coals, it will admit the coal of the Dominion Company at a small but reasonable profit. I desired to call attention to this specific instance because I think it shows the injustice with which the bill has been made up.

We are told in every Democratic speech that the desire is to give the people cheaper necessaries of life, to lower the rates of the McKinley act and to take from these robber barons, these coal-mine owners, these manufacturers, their gigantic profits; and yet we find that in this arrangement of duties a situation has been created in which a body of American capitalists whose enterprise and foresight as to the probable action of the Democratic party have taken them to Canada, receive this enormous encouragement. If anybody is to be encouraged by our tariff legislation, if any industry is to be developed, surely it should be our own. It is certainly a great mistake to put a premium on taking American capital over the line into Canada or to any other country to pay wages there, to develop mines or start industries there, rather than within the borders of the United States.

Mr. SQUIRE. Mr. President, I can hardly permit this schedule to pass without some further reference to the coal of the Pacific coast, although I have enjoyed the remarks of the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] on this subject, and I have previously addressed the Senate in a carefully prepared speech in which I adverted to the subject of the production of coal in the State of Washington in detail. Therefore I do not expect to go over that subject fully again.

I merely wish to call attention to a few points before this feature of the discussion is passed by. In starting I wish to refer for a moment to the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], to the effect that by the reduction of the tariff the cost of coal would be so lowered that the people of his State would enjoy lower rates for fuel. It seems to me that the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska has very little relevancy, because it is a well-known fact that no foreign coal reaches the interior of the United States, in the far Western States, those situated near the Rocky Mountains, unless it should be some special coal for some special purpose.

There is very little of that imported I think to the far interior of the United States. The coal that is consumed in the Western States this side of the Rockies is mined to some extent in the States near the Atlantic seaboard and mainly in the intermediate Western States, and there is no effect whatever produced upon the price of coal in Nebraska in consequence of the duty that may be levied upon foreign coal. Coal is mined as far west as Indian Territory and Colorado.

Mr. KYLE. Does the Senator from Washington mean to say that there has been no coal imported under the McKinley law?

Mr. SQUIRE. It is not probable that there would be much coal imported in any event that would be shipped to the State of Nebraska——

Mr. KYLE. Is that a guess?

Mr. SQUIRE. Because the cost of transportation from the seaboard to the State of Nebraska would be far more than the cost of the coal. The Senator knows very well that coal is mined for about $1.25 or less per ton in the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois.

Mr. KYLE. Can not coal reach the West and Northwest by way of the lakes?

Mr. SQUIRE. I am told by the principal mine operators in the State of Ohio that there is no interference whatever so far as Canadian coal is concerned. We know perfectly well what the cost of coal mining is in the States of Indiana and Illinois. I have been told recently by the operators who are acquainted with the events of the recent great strike that $1.25 a ton is the average cost of the coal to mine it. The miners are paid 69 cents, it has been stated, for certain kinds of coal, and from that up to 85 cents.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to ask the Senator from Washington if I understand him to say that bituminous coal can be mined and put on cars for a dollar and twenty-five cents a ton in the State of Ohio?

Mr. SQUIRE. I do. For one dollar and a quarter.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to state to the Senator from Washington that the same coal which may be mined in the State of Ohio and placed on the cars for a dollar and a quarter a ton will be sold in the State of Nebraska for about $5.50 or $6 a ton. The suggestion I wish to make is that if our ports are open to free coal it will have the effect of driving coal from West Virginia, Ohio, and those States into the great West and give us the benefit of the reduction of the prices of coal.

I believe that; but I did not speak particularly of the State of Nebraska, because I believe that I am large enough to be in favor of legislating for every person upon this continent. I do say it is surprising to me that a Senator with the known humane qualities of the Senator from Washington should stand in this Chamber and insist upon a tax going upon coal that is consumed in the midst of the poverty-stricken homes of the nation. Is not the Senator from Washington willing that the people should have free coal, especially in view of the fact that no coal can be brought to this country and successfully compete with the coal mined here by our miners?

Mr. SQUIRE. I will say that no one engaged in the business of coal mining or who knows anything about it believes that the reduction in the duty would reduce the cost of coal to the consumer, excepting possibly to the New England States. That problem is yet to be worked out.

I have a letter in my possession from one of the leading Democrats in the State of Washington, a gentleman who held a high position as chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic party, in which he says distinctly that—

> In my judgment our State will be much better off if the duties remain as they are. Lumber and coal are our chief industries, and will doubtless continue to be whether these articles are placed on the free list or not. The only effect I can see that taking the duty off will have will be to reduce the wages to the same level as those in England, Australia, and Canada. Taking the duty off will not aid a single industry or lift a single burden in any one of the Pacific States. It will not extend our markets in any direction. There is nothing to be gained by the proposed tariff law and much may be lost. If a man is in favor of low wages he should favor the bill, otherwise he should oppose it.

The remainder of the letter is a discussion of the iron ore question.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator from Washington permit me another question? I understand the Senator to say now that taking the duty off of coal would not reduce the price to the consumer.

Mr. SQUIRE. I grant it will not. It will not reduce the price of coal. I am speaking more particularly with reference to the people of the interior of the country. That is my view. I doubt very much whether it will reduce the price anywhere. I think the capitalists who have arranged to bring in the product from Nova Scotia will get the benefit of the reduction of the duty and will make some profit. The consumer will pay about the same.

Another thing I will say to the Senator, when you talk about reducing the output of American mines you increase the relative cost. When the mines of West Virginia, and Maryland, and Virginia find themselves shorn of their business by reason of the admission of the Nova Scotia coal without paying any duty upon it, or even with a duty of 40 cents a ton, they will find the consumption of their product necessarily cut off or reduced. Their expenses will be increased relatively thereby; the railways that have been operating will be unable to carry coal at the price they have been carrying it, and consequently the cost of carrying it will be higher.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit a question, I understood him to put his argument in favor of taxing coal upon the thought that it would protect American labor engaged in coal mining. If it be true that it will not affect the price of coal in this country, how can it affect the wages of the miners?

Mr. SQUIRE. It prevents the coming in of foreign coal to take the place of the coal of our mines.

Mr. ALLEN. The introduction of foreign coal brings about competition.

Mr. SQUIRE. It brings about competition, but by that competition the coal of foreign mines takes the place of the coal that we would mine.

Mr. ALLEN. If it brings about competition, does it not necessarily force the miner of bituminous coal in the United States to ship his coal into the interior at a reduced price?

Mr. SQUIRE. It may in some places. I will not deny that in some places the increased competition may temporarily decrease the price of coal on the sea coast, not in the States of Ohio or Indiana, and not in the State of Pennsylvania, because they mine there themselves cheaper than they could buy it from the seaboard—not certainly in any State west of these great Middle States, because they can get their coal from Ohio, Illinois, or Indiana more cheaply than they can get it from the seaboard. But at certain times it may happen, and doubtless will happen, that the introduction of this foreign product into the markets of New York and Boston, particularly, will reduce the price of coal to consumers there. Now, that may be true. I have no doubt there will be an effect of that kind at certain times.

Mr. ALLEN. Let me make this suggestion to the Senator from Washington: If our ports are open to coal and this section of the country is flooded with foreign coal, that necessarily forces down the price of coal here, does it not?

Mr. SQUIRE. On the seaboard, provided the Nova Scotia trust does not keep up the price.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the miner of coal in the United States must seek an enlarged market at a reduced price for his product, must he not?

Mr. SQUIRE. Yes; or fail to mine it.

Mr. ALLEN. Or fail to mine it.

Mr. SQUIRE. And that would be the result.

Mr. ALLEN. The effect of that will be to force him to send his coal into the interior of the nation in competition with coal mined in Ohio, Indiana, and Iowa?

Mr. SQUIRE. It would only go where he could afford to send it—where the freight rates would permit it.

Mr. ALLEN. Now, if coal can be mined in West Virginia and placed on cars for $1.25 a ton, does the Senator from Washington say that money can not be made on that coal to take it to the State of Nebraska and sell it for $3.50 or $4 a ton?

Mr. SQUIRE. I suppose the coal has to go through several hands; in the first place going in large quantities to job operators, and then finally going all through the various avenues of distribution to the retail dealer.

Mr. ALLEN. If the jobber in coal in Omaha, for instance, or in the State of Nebraska anywhere, comes down to this part of the country and buys his coal for $1.25 a ton or less——

Mr. SQUIRE. Certain kinds of coal——

Mr. ALLEN. I mean ordinary bituminous coal that is used in the family of the farmer. If he can come here and buy it for that price, I say to the Senator from Washington that the effect of admitting coal into this country without any duty upon it will be to force the American product out into the interior of the country and save the consumer of coal possibly $1.50 or $2 a ton.

Mr. SQUIRE. It seems to me the Senator from Nebraska does not quite understand the situation. In the coal that is mined, as I have before said, in the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, I am not talking about the price that it is sold for; I am talking about the cost of mining and putting it on the car. I refer to the actual cost, without reference to the capital employed in it, simply to put it on board of the car, the actual cost in moving it out from the mines and putting it on the cars. It is about the same in the State of Washington, about $1.25 a ton.

Does the Senator suppose that the coal that can be brought from Nova Scotia by water to Boston and New York will compete with the coal mined in Ohio, and that the people of Nebraska will not get their coal from Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, and from the coal mines of the West?

Mr. ALLEN. Let me suggest to the Senator that the people of Nova Scotia have free access by water to the port of Chicago, and from there the coal can be shipped in direct competition with the coal mined in Illinois and Indiana and States of that character.

Mr. SQUIRE. How will it go there?

Mr. ALLEN. It will go there from Chicago and other distributing points along the lakes.

Mr. SQUIRE. But outside of Chicago where will it come from?

Mr. ALLEN. From Nova Scotia, a great portion of it.

Mr. SQUIRE. It will cost too much to get it there. The coal of Nova Scotia, as I am told, can not profitably be shipped to Chicago.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose that coal comes right to Washington City itself, right here at the seat of the Eastern coal market of West Virginia, would not that have the effect of forcing down the price of coal to the consumer?

Mr. SQUIRE. Not as against the cost of transportation.

Mr. ALLEN. Then the law of competition is entirely destroyed.

Mr. SQUIRE. But when you take into consideration the cost of transportation, that must govern. That is all there is of it.

Mr. ALLEN. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to make this suggestion, and then I think I will leave him to his glory. If you take off the duty on coal and make our ports free for bituminous coal, it will have the effect of forcing down the price of coal along the seaboard, and will force the coal of West Virginia, Ohio, and States of that character near the interior of the United States to a reduced price. It must either have that effect or there is no such thing as the law of competition.

Mr. SQUIRE. As I stated before, I have no doubt there may be times when the people on the seaboard will receive a benefit by competition; but at that same moment the people engaged in mining coal in the States of Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, and the other States near the seaboard will find their production undesired; that is, they could not profitably compete. There may be times of glut in the market when these States could not compete, and when their mines would have to shut down, or else the relative cost of mining would be largely increased by reason of the reduced output; and then the effect would come home to the people of those States and to the consumers they do necessarily supply, because the miners of coal will have to raise their rates to the consumers in their vicinity and in the interior, to which they are now supplying coal. I have in my mind the States of Virginia and West Virginia.

Mr. PALMER. Let me make one observation. I live in a State where there are, as my colleague [Mr. CULLOM] said the other day, 35,000 square miles of coal lands. I will not say as much as I should like to now, because the subject requires more time than I could give to it in replying to the Senator from Washington in the midst of his speech.

If coal was brought from Nova Scotia to Boston or New York, and was absolutely given to any person who might want to use it in Nebraska, it would not be worth the freight, for that coal could not be transported.

The trouble with the Senator from Nebraska is as to the cost of the coal. I know that in Illinois coal is loaded in the sheds of the railways for their own use at 80 cents a ton. In the city and county in which my colleague and I live, there are nearly twenty coal sheds, and most of them are situated on the railways. Coal is delivered to the railway companies for their own use at 80 cents a ton.

As a matter of fact, in all the coal regions of Illinois, coal is delivered to private parties, and I have bought many a ton of it myself at $1.50 a ton, delivered and thrown into the coal house.

Mr. ALLISON. What did I understand the Senator to state the cost of coal is to the railway companies and to the large consumers of coal?

Mr. PALMER. Eighty cents a ton.

Mr. ALLISON. And the duty upon coal is 50 per cent ad valorem?

Mr. PALMER. Forty cents a ton, I believe.

I hope the Senator from Washington will tolerate me a moment longer. I have in the discussion about coal come to the conviction that the whole dispute involves nothing in the world. It may interest the railway companies who transport coal to the seaboard, and it may interest the consumers of coal near the seaboard, but it has no interest whatever to any other persons.

I apprehend, Mr. President—if I may be allowed to take the liberty of saying it—that if it were not for the necessity of satisfying the country that the Republican party are for protection at all times and under all circumstances, they would really prefer free coal. It is a combination of interests; it is a partnership of interests that makes them oppose free coal in order to give the impression that they are for protection under almost all circumstances.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator kindly tell us what combination of interests induces the Democratic party in the Senate to favor a duty on coal?

Mr. PALMER. Necessity, not choice.

Mr. CHANDLER. What kind of necessity?

Mr. PALMER. There are interests that demand a duty on coal, and as 40 cents a ton is preferable to 75 cents a ton, those of us who believe it is all humbug prefer the 50-cent duty rather than the 75-cent one.

Mr. CHANDLER. Why—I speak not now of the Republican policy on coal, but of the Democratic policy—should not the Democrats, who have a majority in this Chamber, or are supposed to have, give New England the free coal which they say the Republicans really want?

Mr. PALMER. I am now trespassing on the time of the Senator from Washington. If I can obtain the floor for twenty minutes after he is through, I shall answer that question.

Mr. SQUIRE. I was speaking a few moments ago in regard to the argument of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] that he was in favor of giving the people of his State cheaper fuel. After that, when I remarked that the people of his State would get no benefit from the coming in of coal free of duty on the Atlantic seaboard, the Senator said he was broad enough and big enough to be willing to help the people of the Atlantic seaboard to cheaper rates. Of course, if he feels that way about the people of the Atlantic seaboard, he would feel the same way about the people of the Pacific seaboard; and on that subject I have some authority that I should like to quote.

The statement has been made by very able authority on the Pacific coast, and arguments have been brought forward to show that when there has been for any reason a reduction of the price of foreign coal—that is, when the purchase price of the foreign coal was less than the rate there before charged for it—the price in California was not lowered one bit. I have the statement here of a gentleman who is largely interested in the coal business in San Francisco. He says:

> Who will benefit by the abolition of the duty on coal? As the function of such laws is to do the greatest good to the masses, let us analyze the coal traffic of California and ascertain whether the great public will reap any material advantage.
> The American coal-producer on the Atlantic seaboard protests against any reduction in duty, because the Nova Scotia mines will disturb his trade in the great consuming centers of New England.
> The American miner on the Pacific coast contends for a chance to keep his present trade in California against mines in British Columbia, but the same kind of practical reasoning applicable in the East does not fit the peculiar conditions here. It may be said in prophecy that if the present duty be annulled, the most of the 75 cents will go into the pockets of the British miner and shipowner. Theoretically it should go to the California consumer. Practically it will not.
> As a proof of this, I will state that on January 1, 1894, the Australian miners announced a decline of 1 shilling free on board ships at their wharves. Immediately the ship owners made an advance of 1 shilling in freights to California, and reaped the whole benefit from the drop in price.

Mr. President, it seems to me sometimes, as I look over the entire situation and all the phases of the discussion of this bill, rather hard that the main onus seems to fall on the people of the new communities, the new States of the West, and particularly on the State of Washington. Only a few days ago we had the duty entirely removed from sawed lumber and dressed lumber. That is the principal industry of the State of Washington. Now, it is proposed to reduce the duty on coal from 75 cents a ton to 40 cents a ton. That is probably the second industry in point of prominence in the State of Washington.

So the people of the new States, who have been all their lives helping to keep up the system under which they have prospered, who have gone out into this new country, and just at the time they get fairly started in the development of their industries they are to lose the benefit of the protection they have been assisting to give to the people of the Union up to the present time. It seems to me rather hard. They have not the diversification of industries which the people of the Eastern and Middle States have.

Mr. PLATT. The Senator omitted wool.

Mr. SQUIRE. Yes, sir; I should have mentioned wool. I am thankful to the Senator from Connecticut for mentioning wool. I can not understand why these three industries, which are the great industries of the State of Washington and of several other States in the far West, should be singled out in this mistaken effort or pretense to try and relieve the people of the United States. I can not understand why this blow should be aimed by this great country at these relatively poor communities; I mean in point of developed wealth; for they are rich in point of brains, rich in point of energy, rich in all the resources that nature has bestowed upon them, rich in their soil, climate, and unrivaled seabord, rich in their great cereal producing plains, rich in their vast forests of merchantable timber, rich in their mines of coal and of iron, and they are rich in their manhood, their energy, and their tact.

They understand the situation, and they know how to avail themselves of all these resources, and just as they get fairly started at the work, having placed their small fortunes in laudable enterprises, the Congress of the United States takes away all the protection it has heretofore afforded to those States, and thus you leave us without anything by which we may go on in our good work of developing our region of the country, and leave us a prey to foreign powers.

As I said before in the remarks I formerly submitted, vessels go around Cape Horn to receive the wheat product of the Pacific coast States. They have not much to bring in the way of merchandise to the people of the Pacific coast, but they bring coal in ballast, they bring iron in ballast, and it costs them in that way practically nothing for the transportation of these articles to our ports. We have to compete with this foreign coal and foreign iron. As I have said, it is not fair or just to the people of the Pacific coast that this reduction should take place upon these great elements of their industry, and all this talk of free raw materials comes right home to their products, of which, as in the case of lumber, at least from 90 to 95 per cent is labor. There is nothing raw in the material of lumber except the tree in the wood.

This bill is peculiarly oppressive to the people of my own State. When it comes to the question of competition with British Columbia on the north, there are extensive coal fields on the island of Vancouver. The island of Vancouver is a large island. It has been sometimes compared in size with the island of Ireland, with which people are generally more familiar. It contains the capital of British Columbia—the city of Victoria. It has extensive coal mines at several places, and this coal is of excellent quality.

We have had a great contest recently in trying to prevent the Navy Department of the United States from procuring coal with which to supply the fleet of the Pacific Ocean, including the Bering Sea fleet, from the mines of British Columbia. The order had been given and I believe a large purchase had been at first made of the coal of British Columbia. Later, upon reports made to the Navy Department, the question was reconsidered, and ultimately the vessels then about to sail to the north did put on board coal from the State of Washington, although I believe a large shipment of coal had been sent north in advance of the going of these vessels, which had been purchased in British Columbia.

I think it important that the mining interests of coal on the Pacific coast should be protected.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SQUIRE. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I have heard it often stated that the coal of British Columbia is superior to the coal of the State of Washington for steam purposes. Is that in any sense true?

Mr. SQUIRE. I do not believe it is true. I have statements from the best experts on that subject, and it is stated that the coal of the State of Washington is equal to the coal of British Columbia in every respect. It has been used for steam coal for more than twenty years with the greatest success. There are sometimes agencies in operation to secure the taking of coal in particular localities, and I am told such influence was exerted at the time the coal to which I have referred was taken from British Columbia, without reference to the quality of the coal. Sometimes there has been a disposition to draw distinctions unfavorable to the coal of the State of Washington. I am happy to state now that the Secretary of the Navy has ordered the coast defense vessel Monterey, in Puget Sound, to make a thorough comparative test of different kinds of coal.

There are some questions connected with the subject of the construction of the boilers and furnaces of these great war vessels as to their adaptability to different kinds of coal. It is very evident that if there is any fault in the construction, or in relation to the forced draft of the air in the furnaces of the vessels, or if there is any fault which interferes with the consumption of American coal, that construction ought to be changed and that difficulty, if it is only a mechanical one, ought to be obviated, so as to use American coal on American war vessels, which might be engaged in a war with the very country from which they would be compelled to obtain their coal if these experiments are not made and if these changes are not made, if they are found to be needed.

Mr. President, the coal of British Columbia lies very near the water, while the coal of the State of Washington lies at various points distant, say from 10 to 50 and 100 miles from the coast, necessitating railway transportation, whereas in British Columbia the coal can be put right on the vessel. That is an element entering into the cost. Then, in British Columbia the kind of labor employed is much less expensive than that in the State of Washington. The State of Washington is called the Pennsylvania of the Pacific coast. It has a vast area of coal, more than 1,000,000 acres, which coal area is said to be larger than that of any other State in the Union, and, in fact, larger than that of any country in the world. As yet there is only a beginning of the development, but it is capable of great expansion.

The Chamber of Commerce of Seattle in its petition to Congress states the following:

One of the chief resources of this State is coal. Its discovery was made in 1853. Geologists estimate the coal area at 1,000,000 acres. Development of this resource has been slow. Nothing was done prior to the war of the rebellion. After the war, encouraged by the imposition of an import tax on the product of foreign mines, capital was invested, labor employed, and trade begun. In 1867, 10,000 tons were mined; in 1877, 150,000 tons; in 1887, 800,000 tons, and in 1892, 1,150,000 tons.

That is stated by one authority. I think the correct statement of it is 1,213,427 tons, as ascertained by the United States Census authorities:

More than 3,000 men find employment in the mines. A great number of other men are engaged in the transportation and distribution and sale of coal. Including those dependent upon these men and others indirectly interested in the trade, it is a reasonable estimate to make that 20,000 people in the State of Washington live to-day upon the interests involved in the opening and operation of coal mines. These interests could be vastly increased, and would be were the import charge raised to the old figure of $1.25 per ton. Our chief competitors in this line of trade, as I have said, are in British Columbia, Canada's Pacific province.

These Canadian mines employ Chinese, and the lowest grade of Chinese. Our coal mines pay the highest price which is paid to colliers anywhere in the world. We pay more relatively for coal mining in the State of Washington than is paid in any other country on the face of the globe. Our miners are prosperous and as a rule they are contented. What the effect will be of the reduction of the duty to 40 cents a ton I can not fully explain.

This petition concludes as follows:

Free coal will mean an increased product of 50 per cent from the mines of British Columbia, and a decreased product of 50 per cent from the mines of Washington, prosperity and happiness north of the 49th parallel, and poverty and strife south. That the American Congress will ever look with pain upon the American people in matters of this character is our present and constant prayer.

I only know that it is impressed upon me on every hand by Democrats as well as by Republicans, in fact by the ablest and best men we have, that it will be disastrous to reduce the duty to 40 cents a ton. It is just about 40 cents which makes up the difference in the cost of transportation to the seaboard between the coal mines in Washington and those in British Columbia. Besides that, we have their cheaper labor to compete with.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator know what the duty is upon our coal that is admitted into Canada? Is it not 60 cents a ton?

Mr. SQUIRE. Yes. I spoke of that before in my discussion with the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the duty on the Dominion coal coming into the United States is to be 40 cents a ton, does the Senator know of any reason why we should put our duty at that figure when theirs is 60 cents?

Mr. SQUIRE. I think it is very evident that we should not reduce our duty below the duty imposed by Canada upon our coal. It is very evident if the purpose to do so is contemplated, that it ought to be made the subject of careful consideration and perhaps of an interchange of views by those representing our Government with those representing the government of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. CHANDLER. Is not the result inevitable, if you have coal of the same kind in Washington as that in British Columbia, that we shall import largely of their coal while we shall not send them a ton of ours?

Mr. SQUIRE. That would be the practical effect, having the same kind of coal.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is what I mean. Is not the coal of the same kind?

Mr. SQUIRE. In our part of the country it is.

It is very seldom we have an opportunity to explain to the Senate and to the people of the United States the character of our resources and of our development in the State of Washington; and I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading, an article on the subject of the Washington coal fields. It is a special article recently addressed to the New York Tribune.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none; and it will be so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON COAL FIELDS—PROBABLY THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD—THE PRODUCT BEING TESTED ON UNITED STATES STEAMSHIPS.
